COPYRIGHT, 1899, BY MARIETTA HOLLEY

CHAPTER XXXVII.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY H. M. PETTIT

Samantha in Venice

JOSIAH told me that he wanted to go to Venice. Sez he: "It is a place from what I hear on't that has a crackin' good water power and that is always the makin' of a town, and then," sez he, "I've always wanted to see the Bridge of Size and Doggy's Palace." Sez he: "When a city is good enough to rare up such a palace to dogs it shows there is sunthin' good about it, and I dare presoom to say there hain't a dog amongst 'em any better than Snip or one that can bring up the cows any better."

Josiah thinks we've got the cutest dog and cat in the world. He has spent hours trainin' 'em, and they'll both start for the cow paster jest the right time and bring up the cows; of course, the cat can't do much only tag along after the dog; she don't bark any, it not bein' her nater to, but it looks dretful cunnin'. Sez Josiah, "I wouldn't be ashamed to show Snip off by the side of any of the dogs in the Doggy's Palace."

Sez I, coldly, "How do you spell dogs, Josiah Allen?"

"Why, dog-es, doggys."

Sez I, "The palace was rared up by a man—a Doge—the Doges wuz great men, rulers in Venice."

"I don't believe a word on't," sez he. "It is rared up for dogs, and I'm thinkin' quite a little of rarin' up a small house with a steeple on't for Snip. He deserves it."

Well, there wuzn't no use in argyin'; I knew he would have to give up when he got there, and so he did. And it wuz jest so with the Bridge of Sighs, that has, as Mr. Byron said, "A palace and a prison on each side."

Josiah insisted on't that it wuz called the Bridge of Size, because it wuz the most sizeable bridge in the world. But it is no such thing: it don't begin, as I told him, with the Brooklyn Bridge; why it hain't no longer than the bridge between Loontown and Zoar, or the one over our creek, but I presoom them who passed over this bridge to execution gin deep, loud sithes—it wuz nateral they should—so the bridge wuz named after them sithes.

Josiah said if that wuz fashionable he should name the bridge down back of the barn, the Bridge of Groans, it wuz such a tug for the horses to draw a load over it. Sez he, "I almost always give a groan and so does Ury—Bridge of Groans." Sez he, "that will sound uneek and genteel in Jonesville."

Josiah Remonstrates

But mebby he won't do it: he often makes plans he don't carry out and he gits things wrong—he did the very first minute we got there.

We arrove in Venice about the middle of the afternoon, and as Robert had writ ahead for rooms, a man wuz waitin' with a sizeable gondola to take us to our tarven.

When Josiah see it drawin' nigh he sez to me, soty vosy, "Never, never, will I ride in a hearse: I wouldn't in Jonesville and I won't in Italy: not till my time comes, I won't."

But I whispered back agin to keep still, it wuzn't a hearse. But, to tell the truth, it did look some like one, painted black as a coal. But, seein' the rest of us embark, he, too, sot sail in it. He didn't have to go a great ways before it stopped at our tarven, which wuz once a palace, and I kinder hummed to myself while I wuz washin' me and puttin' on a clean collar and cuffs:

"'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam," puttin' the main emphasis on palaces. But Josiah catched up the refrain and sung it quite loud, or what he calls singin':

Be it ever so humbly,
There's no place like hum.

He looked round the vast, chilly, bare apartment, the lofty walls, the marble floors, with here and there a rug layin' like a leaf on a sidewalk, and I kinder echoed it. Sez he feelin'ly and sort of plaintively, "I'd ruther have less ornaments and more comfort."

I sez, "It is very grand and spacious."

And he sez, "I'd give the hull of the space and throw in the grandeur for a good big fire and a plate of your nut cakes."

But I sez soothin'ly, "It is sunthin',

UNDER THE SHADOW OF THE "BRIDGE OF SIGHS"

Josiah, to live in a palace;" and I drawed his attention to the mosaic work on the floor, and the massive furniture covered with inlaid work.

And he sez, "I'd ruther have less work laid into the furniture and some decent food laid into my stomach."

Oh, what a appetite that man has got! It had kep' active all the way from Jonesville around the world and wuz still up and a-doin'. Well, he can't help it. He acted real obstrupulous and onhappy. He has such spells every little while. I mistrusted and he just as good as owned up to me that it wuz partly owin' to his bein' dressed up all the time: it wuz dretful cross to him. He wears frocks to hum, round doin' the barn chores, and loose shues, but now of course he had no reprieve from night till mornin' from tight collars and cuffs and his best boots.

But then, he had restless spells to hum and onhappy ones, and acted; and I told him he did and he disputed me right up and down. He didn't feel very well, anyway; he had told me that mornin' early how he pined for Jonesville, how he longed to be there, and how he didn't care for a thing outside of them beloved presinks. And I told him it wuzn't reasonable. Sez I, "Enjoy Jonesville while you are there and now enjoy Europe whilst you are here."

Sez he, with a real sentimental look, "Oh, Jonesville, how happy I'll be if I ever see thee agin! How content, how blessed!"

Sez I, "You wuzn't always happy there, Josiah; you ofttimes got restless and oneasy there."

Pining for Jonesville

"Never!" sez he, "never did I see a onhappy or a tired day there in my life."

But he did. He got down-casted there jest as he did here. I knowed how often I had soothed and comforted his sperits by extra good meals. But he wouldn't own up to it, and seein' he looked so gloomy and deprested I went to work and episoded some right there, whilst I wuz comin' my hair and dressin', in hopes that it would bring a more happy and contented look onto his liniment, for what will not a devoted pardner do to console her consort?

Sez I, "Josiah, life is a good deal like the Widder Rice's yarn I've heard Ma Smith tell on. She wuzn't a smooth spinner and there would be thick bunches in her yarn and thin streaks; she called 'em gouts and twits. She'd say, "Yes, I know my yarn is full of gouts and twits, but when it's doubled most likely a gout will come aginst a twit and make it even."

And I eppisoded to myself and to Josiah, "That is a good deal like life. The good of this world seems onequally divided some times, but the rich has troubles and the poor have compensations. The poor man has to git up early and toil all day, but if he hates to leave his bed so early mornings, his sleep is sweet while he rests, and his labor makes his food taste good and nourishes his strength, while the rich man who can lay till noon, turns on his restless pillow and can't sleep night or day. And while he has plenty to buy rich viands he has no appetite to eat or health to digest his food.

"The morning song of the lark sounds sweet to the laborer as it rises over the dew-spangled fields, as he goes forth to his daily toil, while the paid songs the rich man hears palls on his pleasure-tired senses. At home you have rest of body, and in travel you have education and variety; yes, the gouts and twits in life even up pretty well and the yarn runs pretty smooth offen the reel of Time to the traveler and the stay-at-home, the rich and the poor."

Josiah wuz brushin' his back hair with two brushes (one would have been plenty enough), and he kep' on with his employment and sez without lookin' up:

"I wonder where the Widder Rice's grandson, Ezra, is? He wuz out to the West the last I hearn on him."

There it wuz! My eloquence had rolled offen him like water from a tin eavespout: hadn't touched him at all nor uplifted him, though I felt real riz up. You know you can talk yourself up onto quite a hite if you try; but Josiah wuzn't moved a mite from the place he'd stood on.

On the Grand Canal

Well, that wuz one of the gouts in my yarn of life, but a twit wuz near by—it had its compensation. He worships me! And I went on and eppisoded to myself to bring myself up to the mark as I wadded up my back hair. Sez I to myself: "If Josiah had the eye to see the onseen eagles soarin' up in the sky above his head, mebby he would also see my faults too plain. If he could hear in winter midnights the murmur of dancin' waters and the melogious voice of the south wind blowin' over roses and voyalets, he might also hear the voice of Distrust. If he had the wisdom of Solomon he might also have his two discursive fancies, his various and evanescent attachments. But as it is, his love is stiddy and as firm as a rock. So the gouts and the twits evened each other up after all, and the yarn run pretty smooth."

But to resoom: The next mornin' Tommy wuz delighted with the idee of goin' in a boat after some hair-pins for me and a comb for him—he had broke hisen. It wuzn't fur we went, and I spoze we might have walked by goin' a little furder: but variety is the spice of life, and it seemed to kinder refresh us.

Floating in a gondola on the Grand Canal of Venice is a beautiful experience when the soft light of the moon and stars is restin' on the stately old marble palaces, the tall pillars of St. Theodore and the Winged Lion, obelisk and spire. With other gondolas all about you, you seem to be on a sea of glory, with anon music from afar coming sweetly to your ears from some gondola or palace, and far up some narrow water street opens with long shafts of light flashing from the gondolier's lantern or open window. It is all a seen of enchantment.

Though if you should foller up some of them narrow water streets by daylight, you would see and smell things that would roust you up from your dream. You would see old boats unloadin' vegetables, taking on garbage, water-boats pumpin' water into some house, wine shops, cook shops; you would see dilapidated houses with poorly clad people standin' in the doorways; ragged, unkempt children looking down on you from broken windows, and about all the sights you see in all the poorer streets of any city, though here you see it from a boat instead of from a hack or trolley car. Green mould would be seen clinging to the walls, and you would see things in the water that ortn't to be throwed there.

Venice's Lost Glories

Moonlight and memory rares up its glittering walls, but reality and the searchin' light of the present tears 'em down. Where are the three thousand war ships, the three thousand merchant ships that carried the wealth and greatness of Venice back in the fifteenth century; fifty-two thousand sailors, a thousand nobles and citizens and working people according? Gone, gone! Floated way off out of that Grand Canal and disappeared in the mists and shadows of the past, and you have to go back there to see 'em.

The Rialto, which we had dremp about, looked beautiful from the water, with its one single arch of ninety-one feet lifting up six arches on each side. But come to walk acrost its broad space you find it is divided into narrow streets, where you can buy anything from a crown to a string of beads, from macaroni to a china teapot.

The great square of St. Mark wuz a pleasant place on an evening. Little tables set out in the street, with gayly-dressed people laughing and talking and taking light refreshments and listening to the music of the band, and a gay crowd walking to and fro, and picturesque venders showing their goods.

But to Tommy nothing wuz so pretty as the doves of St. Mark, who come down to be fed at two o'clock, descending through the blue sky like a shower of snow.

FEEDING THE DOVES AT ST. MARK'S

The Campenile or bell-tower, towers up more than three hundred feet above the the pavement; way up on the tower two bronze statutes stand with hammers and strikes off the hours. Why is it that the doves pay no attention to any other hour they may strike but when the hour of two sounds out, a window on the north side of the square opens and some grain is thrown out to 'em (the Government throws it to 'em, dretful good natered to think on't)? But how did them doves know two from three? I d'no nor Josiah don't. I had provided Tommy with some food for 'em and they flowed down and lighted on him and Dorothy, who also fed 'em; it wuz a pretty sight. And Robert Strong thought so too, I could read it in his eyes as he looked at Dorothy with the pretty doves on her shoulder and white hands.

I got some sooveneers for the children at Venice, some little ivory gondolas and photographs, etc., and Miss Meechim and Dorothy got sights of things, Venetian jewelry, handsome as could be, and Arvilly got a little present for Waitstill and a jet handkerchief pin for herself. She mourns yet on the inside and outside, yes indeed! and I d'no but she always will.

And as you can git a relic of most everything at some of the shops I told Josiah I would love to git hold of one of them old rings that the Doges married the Adriatic with. And if you'll believe it that man didn't like it; sez he real puggicky:

"I hope you hain't any idee of marryin' the Jonesville creek. Samantha, because it won't look well in a M. E. sister and pardner."

Jealous of the creek! That's the last thing I ever thought that man would be jealous on. The idee! I only wanted it out of curiosity.

We visited the Arsenal, another spot where the greatness of Venice in the past hanted our memory, when she had twenty thousand workmen there and now not two thousand. But we see queer lookin' things there—suits of armor, cross-bows, helmets. Josiah took quite a fancy to one wore by Attila, king of the Huns, and wanted to put it on. Good land! his head went right up into it just as it would into a big coal-scuttle. What a mind Mr. Attila must have had if his brains wuz accordin' to his head.

ON THE RIALTO AT NIGHT

And we see infernal machines, thumb screws, spiked collars, and other dretful implements of torture like black shadders throwed from the past. A piece of the boat that the Doge went to his weddin' in when he married the water wuz interestin'; weddin's always did interest females and males too, no matter whether the bride wuz formed out of dust or nothin' but clear water, and we also see a model of the boat Columbus sailed in to discover us.

Robert Strong who wuz always interested in the best things, said that the first newspaper ever published appeared in Venice three hundred years ago, and the first bank was started there.

You can walk all over Venice if you want to take the time to go furder round and cross the bridges and walk through narrer, crooked little streets, some on 'em not more'n five or six feet wide, but the easiest and quickest way is to take a boat, as well as the most agreeable.

Venice is built on seventy-two islands besides the Grand Canal which takes the place of our avenues and streets. There is a charm about Venice that there is not about any other city I ever see. You dream about it before you see it and then you dream on and keep dreamin' as long as you stay there, a sort of a wakin' dream, though you keep your senses.

Memories of the past seem to hant you more, mebby it is because them old memories can slip along easier over them glassy streets, easier than they can over our hard rocky pavements. 'Tennyrate they meet you on every side and stay right with you as long as you are there and hant you. As you float down them liquid roads you come face to face with sweet, wise Portia, "fair and fairer than that word;" and gallant Bassanio who made such a wise choice, and Shylock, the old Jew. And if you happen to git put out with your pardner, mebby he'll find fault with you, and say demeanin' words about wimmen or sunthin' like that, whilst sweet Portia's eyes are on you, if you feel like reprovin' him sharp, then you'll remember: "The quality of mercy is not strained, it droppeth like the gentle rain from heaven, it blesseth him that gives and him that takes."

And so you forgive him. And then beautiful, sad Beatrice de Cenci will meet you by moonlight in front of some of them old marble palaces and her pa, about as mean a man as they make, and his sister, Lucretia de Borgia, that wicked, wicked creeter. Why, it beats all what mean folks Beatrice's relation wuz on her pa's side.

And you thought of any number of queer old Doges, rainin' and pizenin' and actin', some on 'em, and marryin' the Adriatic; a poor match in my opinion and one that you couldn't expect to turn out well, the bride bein' slippery and inconstant and the bridegroom mean as pusley, cruel and cunning, besides bein' jest devoted to the Council of Ten. Queer works them Ten—made and cut a great swath that won't be forgot and they needn't expect it. The page of history is sticky and bloody with their doin's. But they move along in front of you, the Doges, the Ten and the Three. And any number of conquerers and any number of Popes and Kings down to Victor Emanuel.

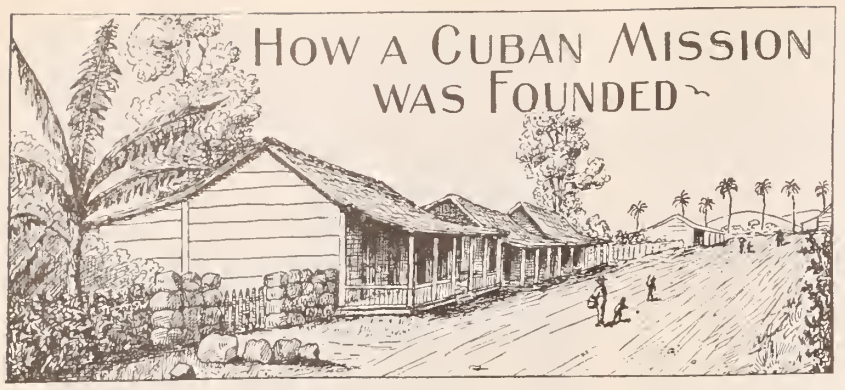
"A MAN WUZ WAITIN', WITH A SIZEABLE GONDOLA, TO TAKE US TO OUR TARVEN"

How a Cuban Mission was Founded



ON the evening of the 22d of December, 1899, an hour or more before the steamer Miami entered the harbor of Havana, we witnessed the most exquisite sunset imaginable. In the magnificent clouds, brightened by deepest hues of every color of the rainbow, there appeared to our view a lighthouse, apparently sufficiently strong and massive to stand any storm, but the landing was a frame structure so slight that the first wave would have swept it away. There this lighthouse stood and continued to stand till we were forced to say: "If that is not a real lighthouse, it is at least a token of what weak people may do; they can be the steps by which others may enter into safety. Thank God for this sunset and this token."

We spent two months in Havana, studying the various missions, and sorrowing because that great city of 200,000 people neither had nor was there an immediate prospect of its having a regular Protestant place of worship, though our Baptist brothers have, at large expense, purchased a theatre, which is used for that purpose.

After various excursions through the country and neighboring towns, we concluded to settle in the little town of Aguacate, on the main line of railway, about forty miles from Havana, and half as far from Matanzas. In considering the immediate need of Cuba, we had already discovered that it was not farmers, blacksmiths, engineers or mechanics; neither was it physicians, clothing or food. The urgent need is the full and free Gospel of Jesus Christ. Here, in Aguacate, was an opportunity to create a centre of spiritual activity, with ramifications reaching out over all Cuba, and to found a work whose influence would be enduring.

In Aguacate, during the great Cuban famine in 1898, there was much suffering. We found it a place wholly destitute of spiritual life. Six months' residence in such a town gives one a pretty good knowledge of its people. Here we established our mission, and named it El Faro Cristiano, (The Christian Lighthouse). On the right side of the main street, just before the railroad crosses it, is a house where the Lord Jesus has now at least two temples not made with hands; and there are others in other parts of the town that know him—the result of the first three months' work of El Faro Cristiano, in that village of fifteen hundred people. Outside of the small handful, we could find no one in that town—not a single soul even—who could give an intelligent reason for any hope of a future life. The whole town was as dark as a house with every window completely shut and barred, and the sun blotted out of existence. It was like a sea of pitchy blackness, without star or beacon to light the mariner to safety, until the Gospel light of El Faro Cristiano shone forth.

Aguacate is absolutely free from yellow fever and kindred diseases. The location is a healthful and breezy one, on a level plain surrounded on three sides by hills. There are rich sugar estates in the neighborhood and a wonderful growth of grass and food plants. Agriculturists have trouble with the large black ants, called bevahowabs, which strip whole groves of young orange trees and fields of young vegetables of the bean variety. These beans, with macaroni and the ever-present sweet potato, supplemented by pork or New England cod-fish, form the staple food. Aguacate, besides, has an abundant supply of good, wholesome water.

After an experience with our Gospel mission work in this little place, without the usual accompaniment of a missionary board to sustain it, several important things have been learned: First, we know that when the Lord called us there, he also called some one from 3,000 miles away to aid us. Second, we were greatly benefited by the prevailing prayers of those at home. Third, we gained experience in tract distribution and house visiting, which, while it enabled us, during last winter, to distribute 10,000 tracts, has also shown us how next winter 100,000 may be profitably distributed. Fourth, we have learned that it is possible, at an expense of $100, to spend the winter in some Cuban town and do incalculable good in spreading the Gospel there. Sixth, as to the healthfulness of this part of Cuba, where we expected little, we found much.

When we came to Aguacate we knew not how to speak in the Spanish tongue, but could hold meetings in which we sang the Gospel hymns in Spanish, something so new to these people that as soon as they learned the hymns they began singing them in the streets. This was followed up by getting our neighbors and Cuban friends to read tracts and portions of Scripture, the young ladies being glad to be so made use of. Then a preacher came from Havana, and helped us out.

At last, one day, our meeting was attended by strong evidences of spiritual power, and the first convert—a poor woman from a distance—came to us humbly confessing Jesus. This was followed by others a few days later, and soon a whole family confessed Christ. Since that time many have openly accepted the doctrine. The townspeople have quite lately given us additional evidence of their good-will by tendering us a site for a church, and it is quite likely that a suitable building will shortly be erected.

Our pioneer work is done and at considerable cost. We have an interdenominational mission ready to receive helpers, and we pray that many Christians moved by the love of souls, may be called to make their home with us. It is also intended to have a mission in connection with our work, in one of the large towns on the south side of the island.

The expenses of a six months' mission in Cuba may be itemized as follows:

Fare for two workers from New York and return, Ward line, second class	$100 00
Furnishing station	100 00
Rent of same	60 00
Cook	25 00
Provisions for time	180 00
For incidental expenses	35 00
	$500 00

There are at least five hundred towns in Cuba waiting for just such missions as ours. It is a grand opportunity for Christian service, and for friends to help a movement which promises to be rich in spiritual results.

I will close by saying that it will afford me pleasure to answer all questions by such of your readers as may be interested in evangelical work in Cuba. They can address me here.

From a Little Reader in China

That "Aunt Samantha" is read and enjoyed even in remote lands, is proved by this letter from a young reader in distant China:

Dear Editor: I am a little girl way off here in China, so I am just about as far around the world as "Aunt Samantha." If she comes to China, I wonder if she will come to Foochow. My brothers and I like Aunt Samantha very much, and mamma reads "Around the World" to us, not because I cannot read, but because we like to laugh and talk over the funny things in it together. Mamma says the story is a rest and a recreation to her, and it does her lots of good. Papa and mamma are missionaries of the A. B. C. F. M. in Foochow. I am eleven years old, and have lessons almost every day, so as not to be too much behind other girls when we go to America. I am studying geography, grammar, arithmetic, music and type-writing. Mamma is our teacher, but she does not teach me music nor type-writing. We all like the mail that brings THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Your little friend,

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

When the Fields Are in Flower

WHEN the fields are all in flower and the vagrant winds are sweet;
When the Lord walks through the gardens and the blossoms kiss his feet—
Then we think of that fair country which beyond the river lies.
Where the flowers are never fading and no tempest sweeps the skies.

Here our hearts are often downcast; here we know not what to do;
But above us smiles our Father—he will bring us safely through;
Never day can dawn so dreary but his love shall cheer its gloom—
Ever on our steepest pathway he will let his lilies bloom.

When the fields are all in flower and the vagrant breezes tell
Of the sleepless love of One who for us doeth all things well,
Then we walk amid the meadows and throughout their gardens gay,
And the Lord God walketh with us in the freshness of the day.

—MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

IN THE CHILD'S HOSPITAL

NOTWITHSTANDING the pain and anguish which little children suffer from bodily injuries and illness, a hospital ward, with its row of small cots, is usually a cheerful spot. No hospital is littered up with needless bric-a-brac, the windows are undraped, and the sunshine comes pouring in. For children who have slept all their lives in a dark tenement, who have known only dirt and disorder, the cleanliness and brightness of a hospital, the kind care of the nurses and the good food are so delightful and charming that they feel much as Maggie did in Little Dorrit—as if everything there were heavenly.

The little patients are very tractable and are not querulous and stubborn, except very occasionally. No children are perfect: even well children are sometimes fractious. The poor father whose son was carried from the dingy back alley to the hospital, very sick and tossing with fever, is reassured as he sits by the bedside; for though the little boy is very white and thin, it is plain to see that he is better. The mother is dead, and there was no one to take care of Guiseppe at home, yet it was hard for the father to overcome the aversion most poor people have to a hospital. This prejudice—once shared by richer persons, too—is yielding by degrees in the public mind, as in no private house, however well appointed, can any sufferer receive the admirable attention from nurses and doctors which is in hospitals given to all patients. I have spent hours in children's wards, and know whereof I speak when I say that no modern beneficence exceeds that of the well-kept hospital.

Diversion Rather than Force

Little Helen was what mama called cranky. The child was perverse, and in the same mood which seizes a balky horse and stops him with ears laid viciously back and stubborn forefeet planted in the middle of the road.

Jack, dear brother Jack, came whistling along. "Helen," he cried, "come and see the picture God is painting up in the sky. An angel, and a lion, and a little child. Come and see it."

Helen went, and the crankiness vanished by magic.

Eight of Them

Such a beautiful little mother, and her children, eight in number, all healthy and strong and smiling. I have their pictures. They are going to camp near relatives a long way from home, and the mother writes: "We must start at nine-thirty in the evening, change cars at midnight, sleepy Alice carrying one sleepy baby, and sleepy Lily another, while I take a third in my arms, and the little boys follow." It is long since I have had a brighter, jollier letter than this of my friend from the far West, and I like to think that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has just such readers and many of them on its list, and that it finds them sunny and carries them its own sunshine every week.

Can Love be Killed?

There is such a thing as death by lightning. There is such another thing as death by extreme cold. In my walks in the woods this summer, I have seen great trees rifted and blackened. A bolt from the sky had shattered them and their greenness perished. Others have been winter-killed, but these were usually young plants not yet strongly rooted. The question arises can love be killed? To this, some answer at once, the love that can be stricken to death was never love; it was only a reflection of self-esteem which masquerades as love's genuine self in many a home, which may even go through long years in its clever disguise and may never be found out.

Mother-love cannot be destroyed, unless the mother be very low down in the scale of humanity. But the love of kindred, of brothers and sisters may wax cold, as years and separations and hardships intervene, and the love of the married which was pledged to endure through all vicissitudes may be killed, lightning-like by infidelity, frost-like by lack of demonstration, by continual nagging and fault-finding and by persistent injustice. A pathetic little poem by Ella Higginson speaks of the "much forgiving that wears a great love out." When we think of the long-suffering of our God towards us, and remember how abundantly he pardons us day by day, we realize how imperfect and mutable a thing human love is under the most favorable auspices. In earthly relationships it must not be treated with neglect, wounded by suspicion, nor hail-stoned out of existence by perpetual scolding and hectoring.

Consider what small things occasion fault-finding in a household? The coffee is muddy, a man's shirt is not stiffly starched, a button is missing, and you would fancy that the heavens were falling and the earth going to immediate wreck and ruin. A woman wakens with a headache, due probably to insufficient ventilation in her bedroom. Her nerves are on edge, and when her twelve-year-old boy clatters downstairs in heavy boots, she is well-nigh desperate. Between her poor head and her boy's clumsy feet she is a candidate for a lunatic asylum, so she speaks crossly to her good man, fretfully to Bridget and shortly to her daughters, and the peace of the home is paralyzed, and "there's nae luck aboot the hoose, there's nae luck ava."

Love is not often killed outright, bless the Lord, but it often survives at what the hymn calls a poor dying rate to the loss of those who might else be thrice as happy and thrice as useful. Inebriety strikes it many a death-blow. The household love which rum-selling and rum-drinking have effectually drowned is an immense waste, a treasure despoiled and forever lost, a wanton destruction of a precious thing.

A UNIVERSAL FOOD.
Following Nature's Footsteps.

"I have a boy, two years old, weighing forty pounds and in perfect health who has been raised on Grape-Nuts and milk.

"This is an ideal food and evidently furnishes the elements necessary for a baby as well as for adults. We have used Grape-Nuts in large quantities and greatly to our advantage." F. W. Leavitt, Minneapolis, Minn.

One advantage about Grape-Nuts Food is that is pre-digested in the process of manufacture; that is, the starch contained in the wheat and barley is transformed into grape sugar in exactly the same method as this process is carried out in the human body, that is by the use of the moisture and long exposure to moderate warmth, which grows the diastase in the grains and makes the remarkable change from starch to grape sugar. Therefore, the most delicate stomach can handle Grape-Nuts and the food is quickly absorbed into the blood and tissue, certain parts of it going directly to building and nourishing the brain and the nerve centers.

MISSIONARIES... ...AS GRAIN MERCHANTS

As soon as India is threatened with famine, the bunniah, or native grain-dealer of the village, raises the price of grain, and hundreds, perhaps thousands, of the local population who heretofore had not yet felt the pinch of poverty are suddenly unable to make both ends meet. They were living from hand to mouth, but their earnings, though very small, were sufficient to purchase enough for their moderate requirements. Now that is impossible, and no escape seems in sight from gradual but sure starvation. They have sold some of their few household treasures and soon all will be gone. Then they must turn their backs on their homes and wander away to the relief camp twenty or thirty miles distant. How many will ever reach it alive and how many will die on the road God only knows.

There is an American missionary in the village, and to him the people have come with their tale of woe. He has relieved them as far as his means will permit. He knows that nothing short of rascally avarice is responsible for the rise; that grain is abundant and that money is scarce; and that therefore, according to the laws of supply and demand, grain should rather sell lower than higher. He calls on the bunniah and directs his attention to the misery his rapacity is causing among the people, and to the fact that there is nothing in present conditions to warrant the rise. The sleek bunniah smiles complacently and assures the missionary that while grain may be abundant just then, still, owing to the failure of the present crop, it will be higher next year, and that therefore he is by no means anxious to sacrifice his stock.

The missionary clearly sees that nothing is to be expected in that direction. He must seek another way out of the difficulty. He sends to Bombay for a car-load of millet or rice which he offers practically at cost in small quantities to all who need it badly enough to call for it day by day. The bunniah soon feels the competition. At first he intimates that the opposition grain is poisoned, but before long the people discover that the charge is unfounded, and then he is compelled to put the price back to where it originally was or lose his trade. And thus hundreds of people who a little while ago seemed doomed to the relief camp or the poor-house, are suddenly helped back to a self-supporting basis.

What that particular missionary does in that particular village, other missionaries are doing elsewhere, and hundreds of thousands of people in India are, through these efforts, enabled to retain their homes and keep their families together, and to tide over the present pinch instead of being thrown entirely upon state or private charity.

This is, very naturally, only one phase of the relief work carried on by the missionaries, the main object being, of course, the saving of human life, efforts in which direction are heroic and continuous. But while nothing is permitted to interfere with prompt and effective measures to that end, it has been found equally important to adopt the precautionary measure outlined above in order to prevent the impoverishment of millions of those who would otherwise fall victims to the bunniah's insatiable greed. Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, the Salvation Army, the Missionary Alliance, have one and all adopted this plan, and have found it to work out to excellent advantage, as it maintains on the one hand the self respect of those who can with economy manage self support, and on the other hand it multiplies the loaves and fishes in the hands of the missionary, and enables him to relieve a much larger number of absolutely destitute people than was originally planned. The Government of India, following the example set by the missionaries, is now operating on similar lines in order to protect the people against the rapacity of the native gram merchants.

Friendly America

The native papers praise the people of the United States, who have, at the instance of Dr. Klopsch, of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, subscribed large sums of money and have sent ship-loads of corn for the famine-stricken people of India. Dr. Klopsch's presence in India has so far proved beneficial in that the authorities of the Bombay Presidency have, on a representation made by him, excused delicate women and women with children from doing any work in relief camps. Some of the papers are of opinion that the tours made by newspaper commissioners through the famine-stricken districts, and the personal experience acquired by them and narrated in the columns of their journals have, besides strengthening the hands of the Government, done a great deal of good to the unfortunate people who have suffered the most from the ravages of famine.—Times of India.

Ministering to Christ*

How in Helping People in Trouble Personal Service May be Rendered to Our Lord

HOW many people reading of that birth in the Bethlehem stable, and the pathetic incidents of the life of Him who said he had no place where he could lay his head, have wished that they had lived in that land and time, that they might have provided for his comfort! Perhaps his prophetic gaze, reaching down the centuries, foresaw such people. Unappreciated by his generation, the time would come when millions in many lands would love him and honor him. Must the love that they would lavish on him be lost in vain regret? No; he will appoint a representative, who will receive gifts from all who wish that they might do something personally for their Lord. But who can fill such an office, living on from generation to generation? His own loving, compassionate heart answered the question. "The poor ye have always with you." They should represent him on earth, and wherever there was a heart overflowing with love to him, it might find relief in ministering to them. Thus the benefit would be twofold; giver and receiver alike would be made happier and Christ himself would rejoice that love for him was bringing comfort and help to the burdened sons of men.

That such an arrangement was not foreign to human nature, is shown by many incidents. There was one during the Civil War which was doubtless only a specimen of many. It was that of a miserable looking man who presented himself in a merchant's office with a plea for help. He might have obtained little or nothing from the busy man had he not laid on his desk a card on which "Charley" had scrawled a request that this man might be helped for his sake. "Charley" was the merchant's beloved son who was serving as an officer at the front. The applicant stood in a different relation to the merchant after he had presented that card. "For Charley's sake" he was helped gladly and generously. Tolstoi's story of the Russian shoemaker is familiar, but is so clearly a case in point that it deserves to be retold. He was a poor ignorant man but he loved much, and he had read the Gospels as the one book that had changed his life. Lying alone in the night he had a dream that seemed very real to him, in which he was told that his longing to see his Lord would be gratified and the very next day Christ would come to his humble home. The next morning he cleaned up his poor room and set everything in order. As he worked he glanced often at the stairs which led from his basement to the sidewalk, wondering at what hour his Lord would come. As he looked he noticed a poor old man with broken shoes clearing away the snow. His heart went out to the poor laborer and he called him down and gave him a cup of hot tea, and while the man drank it and warmed himself, the shoemaker put a few stitches in the old shoes to keep the snow out. An hour or two later he saw a thinly-clad woman vainly trying to shelter her infant from the storm. Her, too, he called in and gave her tea and made some sweet food for the child. When she left, warmed and comforted, he gave her an old coat to wrap around her babe. The shadows of evening were falling and still his Lord came not. He went up the steps to the sidewalk to look out. There a pedler was chasing a boy who had stolen an apple from her stand. She caught him and was going to hand him over to the police, in spite of the boy's plea of hunger, when the shoemaker interfered. He would pay for the apple the poor boy had stolen, and so the boy was saved and the pedler satisfied. The shoemaker went down to his room again and opened his Testament. He could not bear to go to bed, for he still hoped that his Lord would come. But the hours passed and he fell asleep with his head on the book. In his dreams he saw the three whom he had helped that day again in his room, but as he looked at them their appearance changed. A beautiful light shone in their faces and he heard a voice saying, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto them ye did it unto me."

How the world would be changed if, in every troubled face, our vision was so cleared that we could see our Lord! A kindly word, some friendly service, some small gift might ease the burden, and the benefactor would have the joy of knowing that in ministering to another he had rendered a service to Christ.

Answered Prayers

Reader, Pennsylvania, writes: "One was very sick, for whose recovery I prayed to God, promising him that if that one was restored to health, I would acknowledge my faith in prayer through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Now as that one is almost well again, I feel it my duty not to break my promise, but to confess the power of God."

Mrs. E. C. M., Wheeling, W. Va., writes: "I suffered the most intense agony of mind from doubt, but I did not give up; I kept on praying, promising that if my prayer was answered and this terrible doubt removed—for I knew if doubt was removed, I would have peace and happiness—that I would try to tell the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD what Christ had done for me. But I cannot tell, 'tis beyond the power of words. I can only say I am happy. My doubt was of this nature: I asked God to answer a prayer that meant much to me, and then I kept on worrying just the same as if I had not begged of him the request, but now I do not doubt any more."

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Bible History of Answered Prayer, by William Campbell Scofield. Herein are briefly recited one hundred and thirty-four Bible instances of answered prayer. In spite of the absence of comment or suggestion, the gathering of these Bible records in such handy form will be appreciated by students of the sacred Word. Pp. 235. Price $1.00. Publishers, Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Old Times in Shrewsbury, Mass. Gleanings from History and Tradition; by Elizabeth Ward. The revival of interest in colonial history which has been such a marked characteristic of the past twenty years, will doubtless lead many people not directly interested in Shrewsbury, to welcome this narrative of the founding, settlement and growth of this old New England town. There are some quaint illustrations. Pp. 187. Publishers, Ward & Gow, Lincoln Building, Union Square, New York.

The Earth and the World, How Formed? A Layman's Contribution to the Religious Thought of the Times, by Abraham J. Jennings. The author of this work, a well-known Brooklyn manufacturer, aims to show the falsity of the "Nebular Hypothesis" of Laplace and others and argues boldly and intelligently for the old time doctrine of direct divine creation. If he does not prove all he asserts he at least gives lovers of the Bible good cause for holding on to its teachings as not yet demolished by any scientist ever heard from. Pp. 296. Price $1.25. Publishers, Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

All in Thee

Lord, would we place all trust in thee
And ever cease to fear,
How sorrows would from us depart
And thou wouldst draw so near!

How happiness would fill our souls
When trusting all to thee,
And souls, expanding with thy love,
Would grow so strong and free!

A PUNGENT FOOD DRINK
With the Taste of Coffee.

"Perhaps no one has suffered more from the use of coffee or failed oftener in the attempt to leave it off, than I have. Although I never drank more than half a cup at a time, it even then gave me sour stomach and a whole catalogue of misery. This kept up for a long period and time and again I have resolved that I positively would drink no more coffee, but alas, the rest of the family used it, and, like the reformed drunkard who smells whiskey and falls again, when I smelled coffee, I could not resist it.

"Finally we came to try Postum Food Coffee and my trouble was over at once. There I had my favorite beverage,—a crisp, dark brown, rich coffee, with a fine pungent coffee taste, and yet with no sour stomach or nervous troubles after it. On the contrary, I have gained gradually in strength and sturdy health. All who have spoken to me about Postum agree, and we have found it so, that the directions for making must be followed, and it must be boiled at least fifteen minutes, or more, and it also requires the addition of good cream. We have tried boiling it a few minutes when in a special hurry, but found it insipid and unsatisfactory; whereas by proper boiling, it is dark and rich, with a delightful flavor.

"Dr. McMillan of Sunbeam, Ill., said he had used Postum and found it to be just as good as coffee, and more healthful. He is an M.D. of fine standing. Mr. David Strong and sister have left off coffee and are using Postum, They find it much more healthful. Rev. W. T. Campbell, pastor of the Second United Presbyterian Church of this city, says: 'You may say anything good that you wish, about Postum Food Coffee, and I will substantiate it.' He was a very great lover of coffee, and yet found it very injurious to his health. He now drinks Postum three times a day and the old troubles have disappeared.

"I shrink from having my name appear in public. The statement I have given you is truthful, and I hope will aid some people to discover that coffee is the cause of their aches and ails, and they are in a way to get rid of their troubles by leaving off coffee and taking up Postum Food Coffee."

This lady lives at Monmouth, Ill., and her name can be given by letter, upon application to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., makers of Postum, at Battle Creek, Mich.

OUR LITTLE FRESH-AIR GUESTS

WE would be glad if our readers could come in personal touch with some of the tenement waifs who are having a good time at Mont-Lawn, and see for themselves the character and needs of these poor little ones. Suppose you make a "play visit," as the children say, and in fancy go with one of our missionaries around the lawn to talk with some of these children—your own children, readers, for whose good you have been cooperating with us generously and prayerfully.

On the grass sits one little group by themselves—Glen, Donald and George. Glen is nine; he looks seven; Donald is nearly as large as Glen; George is five. Looking over Donald's shoulder, you see he has a well-worn Testament in his hand; he is teaching his little brothers their texts. He speaks with a strong Scotch accent, looks up at you with honest eyes, tells you that this is his own Testament that his mother gave him. She is dead. He "mothers" his little brothers. At meals, teachers seeing that he attends to their wants, forgetting his own, are doubly careful of him. In the dormitory, he helps to undress his brothers, yielding privilege to none. In the morning he fastens their buttons and tidies them as patiently and carefully as a little old woman. There are seven in the family; the father is a sturdy Scotch Presbyterian, honest, God-fearing, hard-working and very poor. The boys are very thin; they have sharp appetites. Noting their good manners and self-restraint, teachers press much bread and butter and milk upon them.

Here is a trio of little dark-eyed girls in mourning dresses of cheap stuff, neatly made. Rosie is twelve; she looks eight. Maria is six, and Tina five. They keep together. What Glen does for Donald and George, Rosie does for Maria and Tina. "How many children has your mamma?" someone thoughtlessly asks Rosie. Her eyes fill. "My mamma is dead," she says, quietly. "I have a brother fourteen years old. That's all of us." "Who made your dresses so nicely?" The dark eyes smile; "Papa," she answers. "Do you like it up here?" 'O, yes, ma'am (with an "I'm at home" air). I've been up here two summers before this." "Her mother was sick last summer when she was here," a teacher whispers. "She is her father's housekeeper—cooks, cleans up and cares for the children."

A familiar little figure hobbles cheerily across the lawn; a small hand, fresh from making mud-pies, is outstretched; a pair of dancing, dark eyes look lovingly up at you, and Henry, the cripple, introduces himself: "I was here all last summer. Last winter I learned how to cane chairs. Me and one other boy cane chairs best of any boys in school."

Hundreds of tenement waifs have found restoration to health and strength at Mont-Lawn this summer. Hundreds are pleading to go. Will you help us to send them? Three dollars will give one child a ten days' outing.

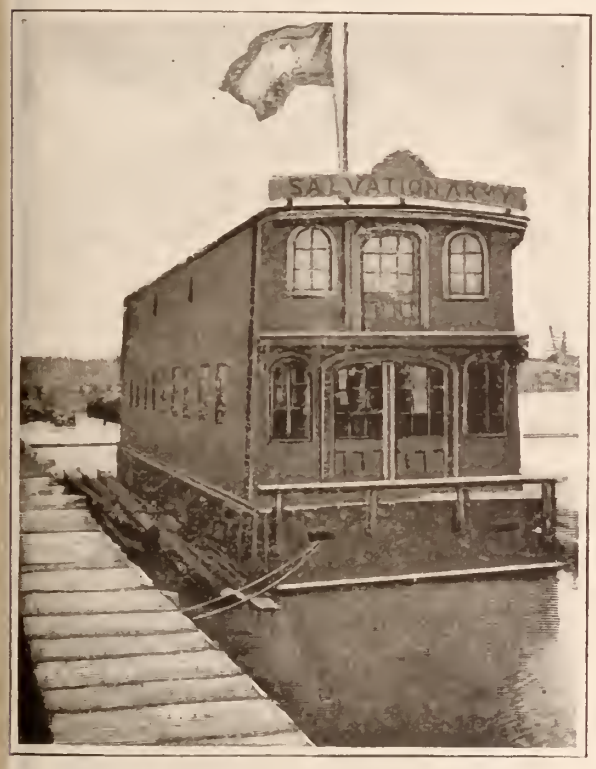
A Gospel Training-Ship

...Established by the Salvation Army to Cruise on the Hudson

WHAT promises to be one of the most successful of recent innovations in Gospel work has just been put into effect by the Salvation Army. Some time ago, Commander Booth-Tucker conceived the idea of a Gospel Training-ship, to be used during the summer months for the reception and instruction of the New York cadets of the Salvation Army. It was not his purpose, however, to undertake any costly experiment: so a commodious scow was purchased, which was thoroughly overhauled and a roomy structure built on its deck, which was capable of being used either as a school or chapel. This floating Bethel was suitably furnished and the new Gospel boat was christened The Salvationist, and put in commission forthwith.

Through the courtesy of the Commander, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is enabled to publish a photograph of this unique craft. It is commanded by Brigadier Chandler, who has under him a corps of able officers, including Brigadiers Miles and Stillwell. Captains Narraway and Liston, Staff-Captain Nice and a full complement of musicians. There are on board under instruction about thirty cadets. The field of operations is along the Hudson River between New York and Troy. The Salvationist's first cruise was to Tarrytown-on-the-Hudson and it was in all respects a successful one.



THE SALVATION ARMY'S NEW TRAINING-SHIP

It is proposed to keep up these cruises, as long as the weather is favorable, and "to wage nightly warfare on the enemy" in the various towns and hamlets along the river, between New York and Albany. Thus far, the meetings have been well attended and marked by much spiritual interest. The characteristic Army music, the testimonies, the striking appeals to the hearts of the hearers and the fervent prayers never fail to hold the audiences to the end of the services.

Howard, Managing Director of Lincoln Memorial University, Cumberland Gap, Tenn., writes acknowledging the receipt of $509.50, contributed by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers toward the work of the University. May we not pay our teachers, who have worked hard and in good faith?"

Dear Sirs: I find that Abbey's Salt affords a very refreshing drink, and, taken as directed an effective laxative. The fineness of the granules is another point in its favor, allowing it to be taken while effervescing without particles of Salt undissolved entering the mouth. I found it also beneficial in a certain case of headache.

These Questions Will be Answered Sept. 19

1. What is the best definition of the true missionary spirit and what may be considered a "call""

2. Is it probable from the narrative, Judges 11: 34-40, that Jephthah really sacrificed his daughter, or merely kept her from marriage, in view of the provision, Levit. 27: 3-5?

3. Should none but consecrated men and women be admitted to membership in a church choir?

4. If a girl discovers that the man she loves is addicted to drink, and is sure that if she casts him off, the good influence she wields will be lost, and he will probably go utterly to ruin, ought she to run the risk of marrying him in the hope of saving him?

5. What are the most cogent reasons to be advanced in support of woman's right to preach and teach in spiritual affairs?

6. In view of Christ's acceptance of invitations from publicans and sinners, should the Christian accept an invitation to a party at which he knows there will be much drinking of intoxicants, playing at cards and other amusements in which he cannot consistently indulge?

7. What is the origin of the fable concerning "the man in the moon?"

8. Should a Christian attend a church in which the sermons are helpful to him when he does not agree with the creed of the church, and there is a church accessible with the creed of which he does agree, but in which the sermons are dull and lifeless?

9. Does a girl, in adopting a business career, sacrifice more than she gains?

10. Name a metaphor which is used to symbolize the body, the church, the grave and heaven, and quote the passages in which it is so used.

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

Questions of the Week

1. By whom and for what purpose was the Peacock Throne built?

It was built by a French artificer named Austin, for Shah Jehan, one of the Mogul emperors of India. His reign was marked by the most lavish expenditure. His love of display knew no bounds. The first anniversary of his accession is said to have cost nearly $10,000,000. The capital city, Delhi, was rebuilt by him in a style of wondrous beauty. To satisfy his extreme vanity, he built the famous Peacock throne, at a cost of $32,000,000. It was one blazing mass of precious stones: diamonds, sapphires, emeralds, rubies, opals, and pearls, so arranged as to represent the plumage of a peacock in its natural state. It is now in Teheran, Persia. JOHN H. SHERRARD.

2. In what passage of the Old Testament is a duty of paramount importance, having the prospect of the happiest result, expressed in five words?

In Job 22: 21: "Acquaint now thyself with him." The result, which is certainly the happiest conceivable, is stated in the same verse: "And be at peace, thereby good shall come unto thee." EDWARD WRIGHT.

3. What is the origin of the bridal wreath of orange blossoms?

Orange blossoms were first used at weddings by the Saracens, who regarded them as the emblems of fecundity. Like many another, this custom was introduced into Europe by the Crusaders. There is a legend of a certain Spanish king, whose soldiers had brought him an orange tree from Morocco, and he caused it to be planted in the royal gardens and tended with great care. The blossoms were much coveted, as they were the only ones of their kind in the kingdom. One day, a branch was accidentally broken off and the gardener gave it to his pretty daughter who forthwith placed it in her tresses. A courtier seeing her, offered her a large sum of money for the precious flowers. As she was engaged to be married, but was too poor to have a dowry, she accepted his offer and used the money for her dowry. Thereafter the wreath of orange blossoms was much sought after for weddings.

EDITH C. ROBINSON.

4. Should children so young that they cannot understand the service, be taken to church, or should the father who owing to his business sees little of them during the week, stay home with them and try to instil religious principles in their minds?

Children may be very early accustomed to attend suitable church services, but great care should be taken not to make church attendance an occasion of dread and dislike. They should, at first, attend Sunday School, with an occasional attendance at some other service, which will then have the charm of novelty. As they grow older they should be induced, without compulsion, to attend Endeavor or League meetings, and still later, should be present at the evening preaching. If the pastor has the good sense to make his service short, this will not be burdensome. A colt, too early hitched to a heavy load, often becomes permanently balky: Parents take note. If the course here outlined be followed, there will still be abundant time for the father to become acquainted with the children, and church attendance will be made attractive rather than odious. C. A. FOWLER.

5. What was the name of the lad who held the basket containing the loaves and fishes that fed the multitude?

The name of the boy was Ben-Ezra. He was the son of Miriam, which name is the Hebrew for Mary, a very popular name of that period. This Miriam was the sister of Philip, one of the twelve disciples. Furthermore, "Ben," is a Hebrew word meaning "son." The lad's name means "the son of Ezra"—whence we know that Ezra was the name of Miriam's husband, the father of the boy. The information is not to be found in the Bible, but is preserved by tradition and referred to by ancient writers. A. M. SOHN.

6. How should a Christian voter cast his vote for a member of Congress, if one candidate is right on political questions but is an infidel and immoral of life; while his opponent is wrong in politics, but is a consistent Christian?

On this point there may be a fair difference of opinion. The need for good legislation would seem to favor the immoral candidate who has right political views. But then, can such a man be trusted to give effect to his views? Is he not more likely to follow the dictates of self-interest rather than of public duty? On the other hand, the consistent Christian, if not right on all political questions, may in time become so, since he wants to know the right and to do it. Right men will in time produce right measures. Besides, almost all legislation is more or less of a compromise, and many questions have to be determined, not on the clear ground of right and wrong, but on the ground of expediency. In these circumstances who is to determine the right course? I take it that the man whose heart and life are right will make the fewest mistakes. For such reasons as these I conclude that the minimum of risk will be taken in voting for the consistent Christian.

JOSEPH HAMILTON.

7. When did the word "news" as applied to the latest intelligence come into use and what is its significance?

The word "news" came into use about the middle of the seventeenth century. Many suppose it to be derived from the adjective new. Some declare that its origin is traceable to a custom in former times, of placing on the front page of the newspaper, the initial letters of the cardinal points of the compass, thus:

N In this way they made proclamation
W—E that the paper contained intelligence
S from the four quarters of the globe. But the letters finally came to assumn the form of the word "news," from which the term newspaper is derived; and the first published in English was in 1662. MRS. A. R. BLACKLY.

8. If a Christian man detects an employee robbing him, and decides for the sake of the culprit's family that he will not prosecute him, and subsequently sees him employed by another firm, ought he to inform that firm of the culprit's previous wrong-doing?

The employer should have avoided such a dilemma by keeping the employee in his own service and should have made his staying on condition of forgiveness. He did not do his duty to society by turning the man loose to prey on others. If he chose to refrain from prosecuting him, he should accept the consequences of his own magnanimity and keep the wrongdoer near him, so as to complete his reformation. If after a period of good behavior, the employee leaves him to go to another firm, then he is justified in keeping silence about the offence; but not in giving him a good character, if he is asked for one. If the question is put to him as to the employee's honesty, then he ought to give all the facts, but he is not bound officiously to go to the firm and give them warning. That would be to ruin the man and he might almost as well have prosecuted him in the first instance. To make an unusual use of a proverb, "One good turn deserves another," and having done the wrongdoer a good turn by forgiving him, he should do him another good turn by keeping him where he would be conscious that he would be watched and so would be kept from temptation. ERNEST MEYERS.

9. Who devised the tricolor, the national emblem of France, and under what circumstances?

When King Clovis marched on Poitiers to fight the Visigoths, he passed through Tours and took there as a banner St. Martin's cape which was blue. The first color adopted by the French was, therefore, blue, and blue remained until the acquisition of the Vexin. By this acquisition the kings of France became the protectors of St. Denis' Abbey, the banner of which, known as the Oriflamme was red, and this banner became a kind of national flag. At Bouvines, in 1214, the blue royal flag was carried at the head of the French knighthood while the red Oriflamme was the standard of the commoners. The white flag was the personal banner of Jeanne d'Arc, but finally superceded all the others and became the sign of royal power. On the other hand the colors of the city of Paris were red and blue; so when General Lafayette, in 1789 offered to Louis XIV. the tricolored cockade the combination of the three colors was emblematic of the union of the power of the king and the powers of the nation.

J. F. ROBERTSON.

10. Are all the commands of the apostles obligatory on Christians of the present day? are some of them, such as Paul's rules in reference to women, to be regarded as relating to his time only and having no obligation on us?

They should not be slavishly or unintelligently obeyed. It is easy to see from the records of the Apostolic time, the reason why some of their commands were given. If the times have so changed that the reason for the command no longer exists, then we are justified in ignoring the command. A case in point is that of I. Cor. 11: 5, where Paul forbids a woman to pray with her head uncovered, that is, unveiled. If in his day a woman appeared without her veil in public, she would at once be set down as immodest and a scandal would ensue. But now, there would be no such inference drawn; therefore, the reason having ceased to exist, the prohibition is no longer obligatory. The references to eating meat offered to idols (I. Cor. 8: 1-8 and other passages), show that the epistles were primarily intended for a particular church and to meet special difficulties. Our duty is to see on what great principle the apostles acted and apply that principle to our own problems. The apostles were writing for sane and intelligent men, not for children. The close of the same chapter (I Cor. 8: 9-13) states the principle in this case, and it is of permanent application.

Miscellaneous Questions

M. E. B., Fargo, O. Would you advise a young man about to engage in missionary work or any special Christian work, to become a member of a secret order or lodge?

No; if he is earnest in his purpose to devote his life to the Lord's work, he should lay aside "every weight," and avoid all connection that might prove an impediment in his new field. (See Heb. 12: 1).

W. L. H., Glenside, Pa., writes suggesting that, by way of a simple rebuke to profanity when one hears the Divine name sinfully used he should say to the swearer: "My friend only use that name when you cry for mercy."

A. H. H., Chicago, Ill. We cannot discuss politics in these columns. You should support the party and the candidates that are approved by your conscience, and which you believe would give the country the most upright government.

Mrs. R. B. L. 1. Send to American Tract Society, New York. 2. Publishing the stories of good deeds stirs to emulation. Photographs give a human interest to the recital. 3. Full faith in God would make such acts unnecessary.

O. P. K., Killeen, Tex. Both violate the moral law, in degree and are, besides, encouraging others to do likewise. In addition, B is assisting men to violate the State law. The Christian profession does not harmonize with such conduct.

DR. TALMAGE IN RUSSIA'S CAPITAL

Editorial Correspondence

THE FAMOUS CATHEDRAL OF ST. ISAAC, ST. PETERSBURG

WITHIN a short time e saw in the apital of Russia baptism, a edding and a urch service. he babe to be aptized was ree days of ge. The god-ther and the od-mother ood in the ca-edral, in the and of each a ndle, not to ve light, for it as day-time, ut in solemn eremony. Two riests officiated, e one read-g from a book nd intoning the words, the other respond-g in what I suppose to be a Russian men." The priests were quite richly robed, nd conspicuous on their ecclesiastical attire as the cross. How wonderfully strange that e rough wood of that instrument of torture at was planted centuries ago on the hill utside Jerusalem, horizontal piece against erpendicular piece, should have become the hief symbol of these three great religions of e world—the Greek, the Roman Catholic nd the Protestant! Nothing like the cross to npress an audience, or solemnize a marriage, r inflame a host in battle!

After quite a prolonged making of prayers nd readings from the Scriptures, one of the riests opened a small vial of oil and dipped to it a brush and put a drop upon the fore-ead and the chin and the eyelids and the ands and the toes of the child. I took the eaning of this to be that the infant was to e wholly consecrated. Then more prayers nd more readings and crossings of the fore-ead and breast by priests and god-father and od-mother and audience. Then the priest nrolled the child from the blanket in which was wrapped, and the little one, without any waddling clothes, was put clear under a vase f tepid water, and the second time and the ird time completely buried in baptism. Then e infant was lifted and wrapped again in the lanket, while the god-mother hushed as well s she could the affrighted child's crying. hen, three times, those who had administered nd those who had been administered unto alked around the sacred vessel in which the hild had been immersed. More prayers and ore readings, and then all the participants in e ceremony kissed the book from which the eremony had been read. Then the lights ere extinguished and the scene ended. No oubt that everything done that day had a ymbolical meaning, and whether one liked or isliked the ceremony, he must be impressed ith the desire of all good parentage the world ver to have children start life with a blessing.

But we turn to another occasion. We saw a reat flutter of excitement and delight at the oor of a cathedral. We knew right away it as a wedding, and not many seconds of time assed before we stood near the altar to see mething we had never witnessed—a Russian edding. The bride was fair and looked appy, and excited our admiration for the anner in which she endured the marriage ervice of more than half an hour in length. he did not look different from an American ride. The same bouquet in her hand, the ame white veil, the same satin dress with long ain. But everything else was as different as ossible. Two priests officiated. The deep ass voice of the one and the soft vocalization f the other were something memorable. here seemed to be but one word of promise n the part of those about to be united. They ook the sacrament standing, the priest hold-ng the wine to their lips. There was a going o and fro from a room behind the altar which eemed a "holy of holies." A priest, with his ack to the couple, read again and again from n ornamented book. A lighted candle in the and of the bride and one in the hand of the ridegroom.

After a while, from a room in the rear of he altar, a man advanced with two crowns nd two rings upon a platter. The crowns seemed of silver adorned with precious stones, or imitations of precious stones. These crowns were then waved by the priest over the heads of those to be wedded, and waved three times, and the waving followed the shape of a cross. Then two attendants held the crowns above the heads of the candidates for marriage, and at no time did the crowns touch the heads. The priest put a ring upon the hand of the bride and a ring on the hand of the bridegroom. Then the priest exchanged the rings, and the one that had been put upon the hand of the bride he put upon the hand of the bridegroom, and that which he had put upon the hand of the bridegroom he put upon the hand of the bride. Then the priest took hold of the joined hands of bride and bridegroom and led them three times around the altar, the lady attendant of the bride, by considerable skill, keeping the long trail of dress moving aright in the procession. Then the priest advanced to the happy pair and blew out the lights, and the crowns were put back upon the platter. The bride and groom then ascended the steps near a picture of Christ and kissed it. I testify that they were thoroughly married. The priests disappeared and the wedded couple turned around to receive the congratulations of friends, and the groom was kissed by the men as well as by the women. It was only by suppression of ourselves that we did not join the congratulating group and express our good wishes that the yoke might set easy on both necks while the twain pull the load of life up the steep hill. Blessed marriage! Inaugurated in the Garden of Eden, and a perfect relation until sin entered. But do not put all the blame on Eve. She never would have tempted Adam with the apple if he had not coaxed for a bite of it.

And now we hear the sound of singing, the mighty bass overpowering the other parts, for we are entering the cathedral of St. Isaac. It is Sabbath morning in St. Petersburg. There is no roll of organs. The Greek Church has no instruments of music, but makes up, by special drill of great choirs, for absence of key and pedal. We move into the building under the hoisted inscription in letters of bronze, "To the King of kings," and between two great pillars of Finland granite, there being 112 of them, soaring into Corinthian capitals, and along by columns of richest malachite, and by pedestals of porphyry, and under arches that seem like hovering eternities, and join a vast assemblage in a building so large that no human voice can fill it. There are sunrises and sunsets in marble, and a very carnage of color that seems deluged with blood of battle-fields. Though I could not hear a distinct word, I was impressed and overpowered with the solemnities. There are no seats, and so all stand except as they kneel. Side by side the affluent and the beggared, the richly robed and the ragged, those hard in crime and innocent childhood. Many thousands, all bowing, all making the sign of the cross, many of them not only kneeling, but reverently putting their forehead down against the cold stone floor.

In the midst of the service there comes down upon the assemblage an awful hush, and the multitudes are as silent as the dead, when the "royal door" of embellished panels back of the altar slowly opens, and the chief of the ecclesiastics enters, carrying the "holy eucharist," and to offer prayers for the imperial household. We lean against a pillar of lapis lazuli and inhale the redolence of the incense swung from the censors, and gaze with enchantment now at the figures in bronze representing "The Adoration of the Magi," and now at the group showing us the "Angel at the Tomb," and then looking at very dark blocks of stone illumined with flashes of light, so that the granite seems to have been cut out of some midnight irradiated with aurora borealis. A building worth kingdoms in cost of money, yet the sanctuary of many who have not where to lay their heads. All up and down this immensity of architecture a kissing of the pictures of Christ, and a lighting of candles by worshipers who have purchased them at the doorways, and then these candles devoutly placed in sockets provided for them. Oh, what music! It sounds as if rained from heaven. It seems made up of the sublimest parts of great oratorios. Even the echoes seemed charged with solemnities. The reverberations of that service will linger in our ears until they are closed forever. What a procession of grand marches! What an enthronement of halleiujahs! What doxologies in stone! That cathedral is the frozen prayer of a great nation.

It is worth a journey across all the continents and all the seas to attend the ten o'clock Sabbath morning service in St. Isaac's Church in St. Petersburg. How many superstitions mingled in the service I do not conjecture. I cannot be critical. It is the best way of feeling their way up to God and heaven that they know of. That they are in earnest no one who has been present at such a service can doubt for a moment. They do the best they can in the way of worship. I have no doubt there will be millions of people in heaven who never thought as we do. The thirty or forty genial Christians with whom we sat at the Lord's Supper in Holy Communion an hour afterward in the British and American chapel are not all the people who will get to heaven from St. Petersburg. Beware of Wolves in Sheep's Clothing

A TIMELY WORD OF WARNING TO CONTRIBUTORS TO THE INDIA FAMINE FUND

THE New York Tribune recently exposed a well-organized attempt to defraud the public. It appears that a group of evil-designing persons with a view to swindling sympathetic and charitable people, banded together, adopted a name strikingly similar to that used by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the Committee of One Hundred in connection with India relief operations, and then put forth systematic efforts to raise funds, under the pretense that they were to be used for India Famine and Orphan Relief. They had appointed a general manager, district manager, local manager and other officers, and were evidently reaping a bountiful harvest, when, fortunately for the cause of charity, their iniquitous career was brought to a sudden end.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received by wire and letter numerous inquiries as to the reliability of this, that or the other self-constituted Eastern or Western, Local or District Manager of India Famine Relief Work, nearly all of whom were entire strangers and unknown to us. Of course there are many good people engaged in soliciting funds for this beneficent purpose, doing so without hope of fee or reward, and who are deserving of unstinted commendation, but wolves in disguise will occasionally get into the sheep-fold, and as the diversion of a single dollar from this fund may mean the sacrifice of a life, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in view of the Tribune's exposure, deems it a sacred duty to put the friends of India on their guard, lest in remitting funds they employ roundabout or questionable channels of transmission, either of which is apt to entail a total loss of the amount involved.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding, and that every dollar intended for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD India Famine Relief Work may promptly and surely reach its real destination, we beg to state the following:

First: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not authorize any person or persons in any section of the country to officially represent its India Famine or Orphan Relief Work.

Second: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot assume responsibility for funds not actually paid over to it.

Third: Make your checks payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD India Fund. It is a dangerous experiment to draw checks or money orders to the order of self-constituted managers.

Fourth: For every contribution paid over to it THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sends an official receipt from its headquarters in New York.

Fifth: If you have given money intended for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief operations and have not received such official receipt from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and postmarked New York City, the money has not yet been paid over to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Sixth: The only Relief Ship sent to India was sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and there is no other vessel now loading anywhere for that purpose.

Seventh: If you think you have occasion to believe that you have been imposed upon in this matter by any one claiming to represent THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, write us, stating the date of payment, amount of payment and to whom paid, and we will endeavor to trace the transaction.

...MY VISIT TO CHINA'S CAPITAL...

PEKIN, CITY OF GODS, TEMPLES, PALACES AND DIRT, NOW THREATENED WITH INVASION

BY W. J. JOHNSTON

CHINESE DEITY WARDING OFF EVIL SPIRITS

A GOD OF THE FIVE TOWE TEMPLE

NO other city is so much in the public mind at the present time as is Pekin. Reading and thinking men and women the world over are wondering when the allied troops will enter the Chinese capital, and if they will be in time to save the lives of the besieged ministers. As a matter of fact, before this issue of the paper reaches the subscribers, the cable may bring news of the occupation of the city by the militant Western powers. Will the foreign governments consider overtures of peace until they have taught John Chinaman a salutary lesson? Must the allied forces contest every foot of the ground, or will the hordes of the strong and fanatically-determined, but badly trained and poorly-officered Chinese, after a few reverses, flee before the disciplined and well-led armies of invasion, as they did before the Japanese in 1894? Will the attacking troops be obliged to batter down the massive walls surrounding the capital, or will the authorities, by that time weary of the struggle, open the gates to their foreign foes? When the latter are there, will they and their respective governments agree on the next step, and the next? What is to become of the Dowager-Empress, of the Emperor, of the Manchu dynasty, which is itself foreign? And what of the future? There must be safeguards to prevent outbreaks of this kind occurring again. The rights of traders and other representatives of Western civilizations and Western governments must now be clearly defined. The missionary question and the status of native Christians will also have to be taken up and properly settled once for all.

A STREET SCENE IN PEKIN

that after they have devoted their lives to one method, it would be manifestly unfair to substitute another, and thereby throw them out of employment, with nothing practical in the way of education to fall back upon. Prof. Tenney was at that time on his way to Pekin, with the view to submitting to the authorities a plan by which Western methods might be introduced gradually, in such a manner as not to interfere with men in office at the present time. His idea, which, to all who have considered it, seems sensible and feasible, was to give students the choice of the new or the old, grading them equally for like proficiency in either, and following the same rule with regard to promotio

I found the capital of the Chinese Empire one of the most interesting a picturesque of cities. Caravans of camels, driven by ferocious-looking Tartars a carrying tea for Russia; hundreds of gray donkeys, ridden by all sorts and cor tions of Chinese: carts conveying the silk-robed official or member of the nobili Mongolians in sheepskins; yellow-clad priests from Tibet; prosperous Chin merchants with their hands so completely lost in their wide slee as to make them appear armless; women peeping out fr their seclusion at the unusual sight of a foreigner— these made a kaleidoscopic panorama one is l likely to forget. Pekin is certainly the dirti city in the world. American consuls a others took me to see the most squa quarters of other Chinese tow for which they claimed that tinction, but none of th could hold a candle to kin in filth and absence municipal oversight. T streets are unpaved a so uneven that only t modes of locomot are feasible. The le uncomfortable is donkey-back, wh the other alternat is traveling in a tw wheeled springless ca

"WAN SHON TSE," THE EMPRESS' TEMPLE

CHIEN MEN, OR FRONT GATE, BY WHICH THE ALLIES MUST ENTER

These are some of the problems which associate themselves with Pekin, and make it the theme of so many discussions. It is because I have just returned from an extended tour around the world, during which I traveled considerably in China—particularly in Northern China—that the Editor has asked me to let him reproduce, for the benefit of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, some of the photographs I brought back with me, and also to jot down a few impressions suggested by my visit to Pekin.

I may begin by saying that, whatever the result, so far as the present dynasty is concerned, of the conflict now in progress between oriental conservatism and occidental progressiveness, those best acquainted with conditions in the Celestial Empire think that the ultimate outcome of the difficulty will be of distinct benefit even to China. The upheaval may, for example, eradicate some of the crying evils of official corruption, as well as reform the absurd system of competitive examinations in poetry and the musty old classics, on which alone government appointments are now based.

After noting the excellent effect of the introduction of Western methods into Japan, I was unable to understand why China should be so backward in this respect. Traveling between Tien-Tsin and Pekin with a well-known American educator in China—Prof. C. D. Tenney, president of the Imperial Tien-Tsin University—I learned one of the principal reasons for it. Although many Chinese admit the utter uselessness of the present system, any attempt to introduce a radical change is met with the most violent opposition, particularly on the part of the literati and officials. These say, and say truly, which one soon finds to be a rumbling and creaking instrument of torture Pekin lies in almost the same latitude as New York, and its climate is v similar. There are slightly greater extremes of heat and cold—six or seven degr each way—but the average for the year in Pekin is 53 degrees against 51 degrees New York. The rainy season continues during July and August, but notwithsta ing the rains a temperature of 100 degrees is not unusual at this season of the ye Toward the end of November, on the other hand, the river Pei-ho freezes up, a Pekin is for several months isolated from the rest of the world.

The name Pekin means northern court or capital, as distinguished from N king, the southern capital. Historians say that as far back as 1121 B. C. a c occupied the site of Peking.

The population is not so dense as we have been led to suppose. Two centu ago, Pekin was believed to have 3,000.(inhabitants, but there are now thou to be only about 800,000. There never been a census, so anything like exact estimate is impossible.

Pekin is geometrical in outline. T Chinese or outer city is in the form of oblong. Adjoining it on the north is Manchu or Tartar City, which is a squa four and a half miles each way, wh walls run almost exactly to the four poi of the compass. Within the Manchu c lies the Imperial city, and in the cen of the whole city is the palace of Emperor. Surrounded by wall and m and thoroughly guarded, this quarte so inaccessible that it is known as the "f bidden" town. The visitor, therefo must content himself with a glimpse its yellow tile roofs.

CHINESE BURYING-GROUNDS IN THE SUBURBS

SHEH-HO-YIEN NATIVE SHOPS

IMPERIAL CAVALRY

IN THE REAR OF THE SUMMER PALACE

The imperial city occupies about one-fifth of the Tartar city, beside the Palace includes within its walls temples, many public buildings, residences of officials, private dwellings, shops and some of the foreign legations. One of the most interesting sights in the imperial city is Prospect Hill, so called because it is said to consist of coal, which in case of a siege would be used for fuel by the city. It was in a pavilion on this hill that the last of the Ming emperors, Tsung-Cheng, committed suicide, after hearing that the Manchus had conquered his capital. The hill is adorned with many temples.

In the Tartar city are located the Tsung-li-Yamen, or Chinese Foreign Office, and the headquarters of Sir Robert Hart, the Inspector-general of Imperial Chinese Customs. Nearby are clustered the American, British and other legations, foreign banks and business houses.

The principal sights of the Chinese city are the temple or altar of heaven and the temple of agriculture. Thither goes the Emperor each spring, to pray for a prosperous year, and to start with a gold-handled plow the first furrow, after which the Chinese multitudes begin to sow their fields. The temples of Pekin and its environs are famous the world over. The Lama Temple is a monastery of the Buddhist religion, and contains more than a thousand priests or Lamas, principally Mongols, with a few Thibetans. It possesses a colossal statue of Buddha, seventy feet in height. Two elephants of cast bronze with email cloisonne before this temple are considered among the best productions of Chinese art.

The Confucian Temple dates back as far as the thirteenth century, although the present buildings were erected during this dynasty. Here the Emperor or his representative comes to worship the great sage twice a year.

THE CITY OF PEKIN WITHIN THE WALL

The Temple of Heaven was erected during the Ming dynasty, although there is no doubt that its place was occupied by an altar even before that time. Connected with it is the Palace of Abstinence, where the Emperor passes a night in watching and meditation, previous to offering his sacrifices. Near it is the large terrace, nine feet high and faced with green-glazed tiles, where a whole bullock is sacrificed at the time of sacrifice. Near by is the "altar for prayers on behalf of the harvest." Opposite is the Temple of Agriculture, where on a special piece of ground kept for the purpose, the Emperor, as already mentioned, plows in the spring, to set an example of industry to his subjects. The grain sown by him is consecrated by the priests and afterward offered by him as a sacrifice.

In striking contrast to these temples are the Christian churches erected by the various missions, the oldest of which, the Roman Catholic Cathedral, was built in 1601. Such is the veneration paid by the Chinese to their ancestors, that the railway from Tien-Tsin to Pekin, although passing over a level country, winds tortuously, in order to avoid running over graves which the company was unable to buy.

In China, as well as in other parts of the Orient, I liked to talk, when I could, with the natives themselves. I remember one such chat which gave me an excellent insight into the character and self-complacency of the people. The man held an important official position, which brought him considerably into contact with foreigners. He spoke and wrote perfect English, having taken the English course in one of the universities. I told him I was glad to notice his proficiency in this respect, and added that I thought English would soon be almost the universal language of the world. He laughed.

"You must not think," he replied, "that we out here learn English for its own sake."

I looked at him with an interrogation point in each eye, and he went on:

"It is only to help qualify us for better paying positions than we should otherwise be able to command that we learn English."

"Is Christianity making much progress in this section?" I next asked.

"No, and it ought not to."

"Why?" I ventured to inquire.

"Oh, you have nothing to teach us in the matter of religion. Our own religion is much better than yours."

"But," I persisted, "some of your natives do become Christians."

"Always from ulterior motives," he rejoined. "If I could get a sufficiently better paying position than I now have, I might become a Christian. If by becoming a Christian I could marry a wealthy foreigner, I might do it. There would have to be a good inducement."

It is impossible for one who has not visited China to appreciate the depths of egotism and prejudice of the people, and how bitterly jealous they are of everything foreign. The spiritual missionary, however well intentioned he may be, gets no credit for unselfishness or sincerity from the natives, who themselves seem devoid of such qualities. In the public mind, the missionary is the forerunner of the trader and the soldier; of railway and other concessions to foreigners; of seizure of territory; of partition and every other form of national disaster, and that is one of the principal reasons why the missionary finds his task so difficult in China.

A BAD BARGAIN

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Mark 8: 36: . . .

What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

MEN of all occupations are to be found in the assemblies of the house of God, but in these days of extensive business operations, a large proportion are engaged from Monday morning to Saturday night in bargain-making. In many of the families, across the breakfast-table and the tea-table are discussed questions of loss and gain. You are every day asking yourself: "What is the value of this? What is the value of that?" You would not think of giving something of greater value for that which is of lesser value. You would not think of selling that which cost you ten dollars for five dollars. If you had a property that was worth fifteen thousand dollars, you would not sell it for four thousand dollars. You are intelligent in all matters of bargain-making. Are you as wise in the things that pertain to the matters of the soul? Christ adapted his instructions to the circumstances of those to whom he spoke. When he talked to fishermen, he spoke of the Gospel net. When he talked to the farmers, he said, "A sower went forth to sow." When he talked to the shepherds, he told the parable of the lost sheep. And am I not right when speaking to an audience made up of bargain-makers, that I address them in the words of my text, asking, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

I propose, as far as possible, to estimate and compare the value of the two properties.

First, I have to say that the world is a very grand property. Its flowers are God's thoughts in bloom. Its rocks are God's thoughts in stone. Its dew-drops are God's thoughts in pearl. The hills, how beautiful they billow up, the edge of the wave white with the foam of crocuses! How beautiful the rainbow, the arched bridge on which heaven and earth come and talk to each other in tears, after the storm is over! How bright the oar of the saffron cloud that rows across the deep sea of heaven! How beautiful the spring, with bridal-blossoms in her hair! I wonder who it is that beats time on a June morning for the bird orchestra. How gently the harebell tolls its fragrance on the air! There may be grander worlds, swarthier worlds, larger worlds than this; but I think that this is a most exquisite world—a mignonette on the bosom of immensity! "Oh," you say, "take my soul! give me that world! I am willing to take it in exchange. I am ready now for the bargain. It is so beautiful a world, so sweet a world, so grand a world!"

But let us look more minutely into the value of this world. You will not buy property unless you can get a good title to it. After you have looked at the property and found out that it suits you, you send an attorney to the public office, and he examines the book of deeds and the book of mortgages and the book of judgments and the book of liens, and he decides whether the title is good before you will have anything to do with it. There might be a splendid property, and in every way exactly suited to your want; but if you cannot get a good title, you will not take it. Now, I am here to say that it is impossible to get a good title to this world. If I settle down upon it, in the very year I so settle down upon it as a permanent possession, I may be driven away from it. Ay, in five minutes after I give up my soul for the world, I may have to part with the world; and what kind of a title do you call that?

In courts of law, if you want to get a man off a property, you must serve upon him a writ of ejectment, giving him a certain time to vacate the premises; but when Death comes to us and serves a writ of ejectment, he does not give us one second of forewarning. He says, "Off of this place! You have no right any longer to the possession." We might cry out, "I gave you a hundred thousand dollars for that property;" the plea would be of no avail. We might say, "We have a warrantee deed for that property;" the plea would be of no avail. We might say, "We have a lien on that storehouse;" that would do us no good. Death is blind, and he cannot see a seal and cannot read an indenture. So that, first and last, I want to tell you that when you propose that I give up my soul for the world, you cannot give me the first item of title.

Having examined the title of a property, your next question is about insurance. You would not be silly enough to buy a large warehouse that could not possibly be insured. You would not have anything to do with such a property. Now, I ask you what assurance can you give me that this world is not going to be burned up? Absolutely none. Geologists tell us that it is already on fire; that the heart of the world is one great living coal; that it is just like a ship on fire at sea, the flames not bursting out because the hatches are kept down. And yet you propose to palm off on me, in return for my soul, a world for which, in the first place, you give no title, and in the second place, for which you can give no insurance.

Astronomers have swept their telescopes through the sky, and have found out that there have been fifteen worlds, in the last two centuries, that have disappeared. At first, they looked just like other worlds. Then they got deeply red—they were on fire. Then they got ashen, showing they were burned down. Then they disappeared, showing that even the ashes were scattered. And if the geologist be right in his prophecy, then our world is to go in the same way. And yet you want me to exchange my soul for it. Ah, no; it is a world that is burning now. Suppose you brought an insurance agent to look at your property for the purpose of giving you a policy upon it, and while he stood in front of the house, he should say: "That house is on fire now in the basement," you could not get any insurance upon it. Yet you talk about this world as though it were a safe investment, as though you could get some insurance upon it, when down in the basement it is on fire.

I remark, also, that this world is a property, with which everybody who has taken it as a possession has had trouble. Now, between my house and my church in Brooklyn, there was a reach of land which was not built on. I asked what was the matter, and they replied that everybody who had anything to do with that property got into trouble about it. It is just so with this world; everybody that has had anything to do with it, as a possession has been in perplexity. How was it with Lord Byron? Did he not sell his immortal soul for the purpose of getting the world? Was he satisfied with the possession? Alas! alas! the poem graphically describes his case when it says:

> Drank every cup of joy,
> Heard every trump of fame;
> Drank early, deeply drank,
> Drank draughts which common millions might have quenched,
> Then died of thirst, because there was no more to drink.

Oh, yes; he had trouble with it; and so did Napoleon. After conquering nations by the force of the sword, the victor lies down to die, his entire possession the military boots that he insisted on having upon his feet while he was dying.

Here is a man who has had a large estate for forty or fifty years. He lies down to die. You say: "That man is worth millions and millions of dollars." Is he? You call up a surveyor, with his compass and chains, and you say: "There is a property extending three miles in one direction, and three miles in another direction." Is that the way to measure that man's property? No! You do not want any surveyor, with compass and chains. That is not the way to measure that man's property now. It is an undertaker you need, who will come and put his finger in his vest pocket, and take out a tape-line, and he will measure five feet nine inches one way, and two feet and a half the other way. That is the man's property. Oh, no; I forgot; not so much as that, for he does not own even the place in which he lies in the cemetery. The deed to that belongs to the executors and heirs. Oh, what a property you propose to give me for my soul!

There is the world now. I shall say no more about it. Make up your mind for yourself, as I shall, before God, have to make up my mind for myself, about the value of this world. I cannot afford to make a mistake for my soul, and you cannot afford to make a mistake for your soul.

Now, let us look at the other property—the soul. We cannot make a bargain without seeing the comparative value. The soul! How shall I estimate the value of it? Well, by its exquisite organization. It is the most wonderful piece of mechanism ever put together. Machinery is of value in proportion as it is mighty and silent at the same time. You look at the engine and the machinery in the Philadelphia Mint, and, as you see it performing its wonderful work, you will be surprised to find how silently it goes. Machinery that roars and tears soon destroys itself; but silent machinery is often most effective. Now, so it is with the soul of man, with all its tremendous faculties—it moves in silence. Judgment, without any racket, lifting its scales; memory, without any noise, bringing down all its treasures; conscience, taking its judgment-seat without any excitement; the understanding and the will all doing their work. Velocity, majesty, might, but silence—silence. You listen at the door of your heart. You can hear no sound. The soul is all quiet. It is so delicate an instrument that no human hand can touch it. With one sweep of its wing, it circles the universe, and overvaults the throne of God. Why, in the hour of death the soul is so mighty, it throws aside the body as though it were a toy. It drives back medical skill as impotent. It breaks through the circle of loved ones who stand around the dying couch. With one leap, it springs beyond star and moon and sun and chasms of immensity. It is superior to all material things! No fire can consume it; no floods can drown it; no rocks can crush it; no walls can impede it; no time can exhaust it. It wants no bridge on which to cross a chasm. It wants no plummet with which to sound a depth. A soul so mighty, so swift, so silent, must be a priceless soul.

I calculate the value of the soul, also, by its capacity for happiness. How much joy it can get in this world, out of friendships, out of books, out of clouds, out of the sea, out of flowers, out of ten thousand things; and yet all the joy it has here does not test its capacity. You are in a concert before the curtain hoists, and you hear the instruments preparing—the sharp snap of the broken string, the scraping of the bow across the viol. "There is no music in that," you say. It is only getting ready for the music. And all the enjoyment of the soul in this world, the enjoyment we think is real enjoyment, is only preparative; it is only anticipative; it is only the first stages of the thing; it is only the entrance, the beginning of that which shall be the orchestral harmonies and splendors of the redeemed.

You cannot test the full power of the soul for happiness in this world. How much power the soul has here to find enjoyment in friendships! but oh, the grander friendships for the soul in the skies! How sweet the flowers here! but how much sweeter they will be there! I do not think that when flowers die on earth, they die forever. In the sunny valleys of heaven, shall not the marigold creep? On the hills of heaven, will not the amaranth bloom? On the amethystine walls of heaven, will not the jasmine climb? "My beloved is come down into his garden to gather lilies." No flowers in heaven? Where, then, do they get their garlands for the brows of the righteous?

Christ is glorious to our souls now, but how much grander our appreciation after a while! A conqueror comes back after the battle. He has been fighting for us. He comes upon the platform. He has one arm in a sling and the other arm holds a crutch. As he mounts the platform, oh, the enthusiasm of the audience! They say, "That man fought for us, and imperiled his life for us;" and how wild the huzza that follows huzza! When the Lord Jesus Christ shall at last stand out before the multitudes of the redeemed of heaven and we meet him face to face and feel that he was wounded in the head and wounded in the hands and wounded in the feet and wounded in the side for us, methinks we will be overwhelmed. We will sit some time gazing in silence, until some leader amidst the white-robed choir shall lift the baton of light, and give the signal that it is time to wake the song of jubilee; and all heaven then will break forth into, "Hosanna! hosanna! Worthy is the Lamb that was slain."

I calculate further the value of the soul by the price that has been paid for it. In St. Petersburg there is a diamond that the government paid two hundred thousand dollars for. "Well," you say, "it must have been very valuable, or the government would not have paid two hundred thousand dollars for it." I want to see what my soul is worth, and what your soul is worth, by seeing what has been paid for it. For that immortal soul the richest blood that was ever shed, the deepest groan that was ever uttered, all the griefs of earth compressed into one tear, all the sufferings of earth gathered into one rapier of pain and struck through his holy heart. Does it not imply tremendous value?

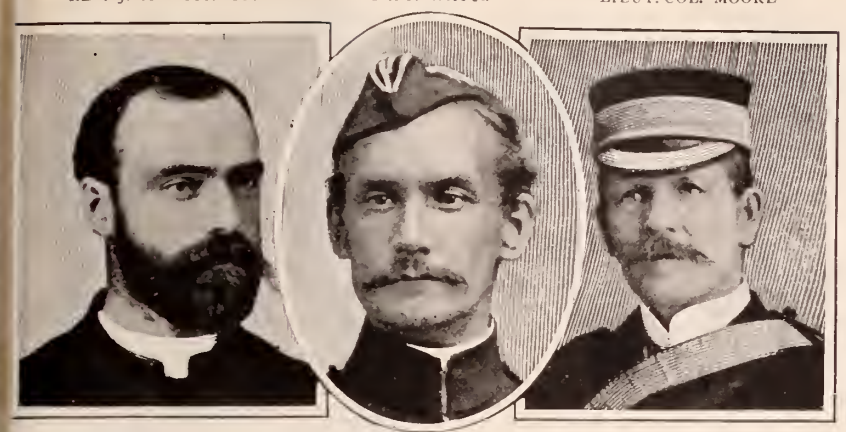
I argue, also, the value of the soul from the home that has been fitted up for it in the future. One would have thought that a street of adamant would have done. No; it is a street of gold. One would have thought that a wall of granite would have done. No; it is the flame of sardonyx mingling with the green of emerald. One would have thought that an occasional doxology would have done. No; it is a perpetual song. If the ages of heaven marched in a straight line, some day the last regiment, perhaps, might pass out of sight; but no, the ages of heaven do not march in a straight line, but in a circle around about the throne of God; forever and forever, tramp, tramp! A soul so bought, so equipped, so provided for must be a priceless soul, a majestic soul, a tremendous soul.

Now, you have seen the two properties—the world, the soul. One perishable, the other immortal. One unsatisfying, the other capable of ever-increasing felicity. Will you trade? Will you trade even? Remember, it is the only investment you can make. If a man sell a bill of goods worth five thousand dollars, and he is cheated out of it, he may get five thousand dollars somewhere else; but a man who invests his soul, invests all. Losing that, he loses all. Saving that, he saves all. In the light of my text, it seems to me as if you were offering your soul to the highest bidder; and I hear you say, "What is bid for it, my deathless spirit? What is bid for it?" Satan says, "I will bid the world." You say, "Begone! that is no equivalent. Sell my soul for the world? No! Begone!" But there is some one else in the audience not so wise as that. He says, "What is bid for my immortal soul?" Satan says, "I will bid the world." "The world? Going at that, going at that, going! Gone!" Gone forever!

Well, there are a great many people who say, "I will not sell my soul for the world. I find the world is an unsatisfying portion." What, then, will you do with your soul? Some one whispers here, "I will give my soul to Christ." Will you? That is the wisest resolution you ever made. Will you give it to Christ? When? To-morrow? No; now. I congratulate you if you have come to such a decision. Oh, if the eternal Spirit of God would now come down upon you and show you the vanity of this world and the immense importance of Christ's religion and the infinite value of your own immortal souls, what an hour this would be! what a moment this would be! Do you know that Christ has bought your soul? Do you know that he has paid an infinite price for it? Do you know that he is worthy of it? Will you give it to him?

God help you rightly to cipher out this sum in Gospel arithmetic. "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

REV. J. M. WITHYCOMBE CAPT. WATTS LIEUT.-COL. MOORE



Canada's Militant Christians

The Young Men of the Churches of Prince Edward Island in Military Organization

BY REV. G. EDWIN TALMAGE

MANY pastors in the United States have learned by experience the advantages of bringing the boys of their churches into military ganization. They have testified that it as developed their natures physically and iritually, and has induced habits of der, punctuality and decision that have ad a good influence on their subsequent reers. Canada has not been slow in lopting the idea, and I recently witnessed exhibition of its success that may be interest to the readers of THE CHRISIAN HERALD. Very often, when a plant taken from one country to anther, it changes its nature, and metimes it even acquires new roperties and value. The peole of Prince Edward Island, lyg in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, e quite interested in their own eculiar development of the Boys' rigade.

Prince Edward Island is one f the distinct provinces in the ominion of Canada. It has its wn capital, parliament and lieunant-governor, and resembles ne of our smaller States. There e three counties in the province, nd the boys of the brigade are uite hopeful that before another ear there may be a full regiment, ith a separate brigade in each ounty. The last weeks in July itnessed a grand gathering and ncampment of all the boys at harlottetown, the capital of the rovince, and all of the citizens ere very much interested, visitg the camp and watching the arades. The daily rations and ne expenses were provided for illingly by the citizens. This ear there were about 120 boys camp; next year there will oubtless be many more.

At the last grand drill and inection, the colonel made an adress, congratulating the companies upon eir drill and military bearing as well as eir behavior. He said that, in all his xperience in camp life, he had never had etter behaved men under his direction. he colonel was Lieut.-Col. Moore, of ne Canadian Artillery, who gladly gave f his service and his experience, and ho stationed the camp in the governent grounds, near Victoria Park. Durg the grand inspection, the various ompanies went through the evolutions nd drill with military precision. Many f the movements were new to them and ere only learned while at camp.

This movement began three years ago, ith an effort on the part of the Rev. J. I. Withycombe, Rector of St. Mary's hurch, Summerside, to interest the boys f his parish. He decided to copy the oys' Brigade as it is found in the United tates, and to adapt it to Canadian conitions. In this he has been quite sucessful. The boys adopted the uniform f the Canadian Artillery, and drilled ith great regularity. There was no ilitary officer in Summerside, so Mr. Withycombe was compelled to learn the anual himself. At the grand inspection, he looked every inch the soldier and so lid his boys.

For two years it seemed impossible to aise any other companies. Pastors looked at it askance. They thought it was unwieldy, too expensive, not likely to last. But two years convinced them, and now there is a company in the Methodist Church of Charlottetown, which also wears the artillery uniform. This company is in charge of Mr. Watts, the organist of the church, and a very popular man in Charlottetown. The St. James Presbyterian Church organized a company under the direction of Major Stewart. The boys adopted the Highland uniform, and looked well in their kilts and plaids. It will be seen that the boys are always in charge of the best men in the church, who throw in their lot and interest with the boys and thus win and hold them. The Highland company took the trophy that was given by Paymaster (Prof.) L. B. Miller, and were very proud of the silver cup, which was presented to them by Mrs. Miller. In order to win this, although one of the youngest of the companies, they had drilled day after day.

A "BOYS' BRIGADE" IN HIGHLAND DRESS AND KHAKI ON PARADE

The pastor of the Presbyterian church is in South Africa, where he is chaplain of the Canadian contingent. One night, Mrs. Fullerton, his wife, sent a load of ice cream to the camp, and made all of the boys her debtors.

Two of the companies were organized in the two Episcopal churches, St. Peter and St. Paul. They adopted the khaki uniform which is so very popular to-day. The rector of St. Paul is the chaplain of the brigade.

When it was decided to have an encampment, Col. Moore agreed to be commandant, and placed tents and bedding at the disposal of the troops. The quartermaster agreed to superintend the distribution of the rations.

On Sunday, the boys marched to church preceded by the band, each denomination worshiping in its own church and all reforming in line to return to camp. It was quite thrilling to see all of these boys in uniform, and to watch them as they took part heartily in the services or listened to the sermon. In St. Paul's, some of the boys belonged to the choir, and took their places in the chancel, but clad in their khaki uniform.

PREMIERS FOR WAR OR PEACE

The Great Statesmen who Control the Destinies of the Nations

SEE PORTRAITS ON FIRST PAGE

AT a time when a great world-conflict seems to threaten the nations, as an outcome of the troubles in China, it is opportune to regard, with more than passing attention, the men who, standing at the head of affairs in the various Cabinets, are the real arbiters of the situation. It rests with them, to a large extent, to decide for war or peace. It is clearly of the first importance that the leaders in the various Cabinets should be men of the highest ability, patriots as well as statesmen.

On the first page of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are presented the portraits of the leading premiers of the globe at the present day. Best known of these is Lord Salisbury, the Prime Minister of Great Britain. He is seventy years old, and is a pronounced type of the English Conservative. He was trained in the political school of Disraeli, and has been in public life since 1854, when he entered Parliament for Stamford, and at once was recognized as an able debater. His first prominent position was as Secretary for India in Lord Derby's Cabinet of 1866. He was Secretary for India in the Disraeli Cabinet, and was Britain's representative at the Constantinople Conference. In 1878, he succeeded Lord Derby as Foreign Secretary, and in the same year he accompanied the Earl of Beaconsfield to the famous Congress at Berlin. The death of the latter made Lord Salisbury head of the Conservative party, and he is now serving, for the third time, as Prime Minister. He is a consistent advocate of pacific methods in diplomacy.

Prince Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst, Chancellor of the German empire, is almost eighty, but is still vigorous, intellectually and physically. He is described as "the smallest member of the Reichstag," being not more than five feet in height and with a correspondingly slight figure. His face indicates the diplomat rather than the statesman, with more of acumen and refinement than inherent strength. He is a man of indomitable will and has great influence with the Emperor. He is brief in his speeches, and intense in his opposition to political self-seekers. He is recognized as a good leader and successful minister.

Waldeck-Rousseau, the French Premier and Minister of the Interior, is a comparatively young man, having been born in 1846, but has already had a wide experience in public affairs. He was Minister of the Interior in the Gambetta Cabinet, and again held that office in the Ferry Cabinet in 1883. He is classed as an extreme moderate in his political convictions. He is one of the most successful lawyers and advocates in France, and gave up an annual professional income of 500,000 francs, when he became Premier.

In Russia, the Prime Minister is President of the Council of Ministers. The present holder of this important post is Mr. Dournovo. He comes of an old family of the Russian nobility. Before becoming Prime Minister in 1898, he was Minister of the Interior. He is essentially a man of peace, conservative and unaggressive in his methods. He is a great favorite of the Czar and the Empress Dowager, and was one of the most trusted advisers and confidential counselors of the present Czar's father.

Prime Minister Luigi Pelloux, of Italy, is a soldier rather than a statesman. He is sixty years of age, and had been Minister of War several times when, upon the fall of the Rudini Ministry after the great bread riots in Milan, the late King Humbert called upon him to form a Cabinet. He belongs to the left, or opposition party which, in Italy, represents the progressive or liberal element, and believes in the methods of the camp rather than those of the Cabinet.

In Holland, M. W. H. de Beaufort is President of the Cabinet and Minister of Foreign Affairs. He won considerable reputation by the manner in which he presided over the deliberations of the Peace Conference held at the Hague last year. He is a moderate Liberal, a member of the Second Chamber of the Dutch Parliament, and a Regent of the University of Utrecht. He is a man of wealth, a philanthropist, and a friend of peace.

In Denmark is presented the strange spectacle of one of the most exalted positions in the kingdom and one of the smallest offices being held simultaneously by the same man. Hannibal Schested is not only Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs, but he is also the Mayor of Brohorm, his native town. He is a great land owner and served for many years in the Landstinget or Senate. He has long been well-known as a strong leader of the Conservative party, and he has been Premier since April of this year.

Dr. von Korber, Prime Minister of Austria, has spent the greater part of his public life in the Ministries of Commerce and Railroads. In 1897 he was appointed Minister of Commerce, and he became Premier early in the present year. He is said to possess a phenomenal business capacity and a wonderful memory.

De Smet De Naeyer has held the office of Prime Minister of Belgium, with the exception of a few months, continuously since 1894, when he succeeded De Beernaert as Premier and Chief of the Cabinet. His chief work as Prime Minister has been the successful passing of the law giving each party proportional representation in Parliament, guaranteeing to the Conservatives, Liberals and Socialists a representation proportionate to their real voting strength. He advocates the diplomacy that makes for peace.

The present Grand Vizier of the Ottoman Empire, Khalil Rifaat Pacha, is also the President of the Council, and has held the dual office for about six years. He is seventy-five years of age, not at all a "jingo," but a most conservative official, and more than a match for the average European diplomat.

Concerning our own Secretary of State, Hon. John Hay, and the Premier of Canada, Sir Wilfred Laurier, it is not necessary to enter into detail. Both are able, earnest men, above partisanship and holding broad and statesmanlike views on questions of international interest.

On the whole, the premiers may be regarded as eminently men of peace, who believe in war only as a last resort; yet men who in great emergencies are equal to any demand that courage or patriotism may impose upon them.

LAYMEN CALLED TO THE JOY OF HARVEST

THE SEVENTY SENT FORTH

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 2: Luke 10: 1-11; 17-20.

Golden Text, Luke 10: 2: The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few.

"PEACE BE TO THIS HOUSE"

LEARNED men have translated this lesson from Greek into English, but God bids all of us make the more important translation from English into action. Every Bible book is given to us that we may turn it into a book of acts. It is the supreme work of the teacher to show how each lesson may not only be learned but lived. Why should not every Sunday School, every young people's society, every church, repeat, in every essential particular, the story of the sending forth of the seventy, in this very first week of the month in which the spiritual harvest, seriously interrupted by the Summer, is resumed.

Discouragements Defied After these things. It was November in the last autumn of Christ's earthly life. He had left Galilee for the last time, having been practically rejected because he had refused to become a temporal king. Less than five hundred disciples was the fruitage of almost three years of miracles and matchless teaching. He had gone from Galilee into Samaria, only to be yet more bitterly rejected, even Oriental hospitality being refused, at which John and James, the impetuous "sons of thunder," had called for fire from heaven to destroy the village thus offending—a spirit Jesus rebuked, saying that he came not to destroy but to save. No less wonderful than this triumph over revenge, was Christ's proof against discouragement. "After these things" he went right on offering the Gospel as if there had been no obstacles encountered—a rebuke to our discouragement under far less provocation. This is a time when Christian work is more than usually difficult. In whole denominations Sunday School attendance is declining under the temptations of the Sunday trolley, the Sunday wheel and the Sunday paper, which last many thousand boys are selling, who, but for it, would be in Sunday Schools. Young Men's Christian Association secretaries are mourning that at the very hour of their chief meeting, on Sunday afternoon, more of their so-called "active members," professing Christians, are "active" with wheels and golf sticks, whenever the weather is favorable, than are at the meeting. And, worst of all, conversions are relatively decreasing in nearly all denominations. But "after these things," and even because of them, should come the sending out of the seventy in every town and countryside.

Laymen Sent Out Two and Two The Lord appointed seventy and sent them two and two. (See Eccl. 4: 9-12; Mark 6: 7). The two great words of Christian duty are "Come" and "Go"; "Come unto me," "Go and disciple." We must first come to Christ to love and learn, then go forth to live and labor. It is often assumed that the command to "Go" belongs only to the preachers. The Endeavor leaders have devised an excellent ideal and with good results, but many think they are endeavoring when they are only eating. Like many older folks, on whom they are expected to improve, they talk as if their only relation to the preacher was to be "fed." "He does not feed me" is the supreme criticism, as if Christians came to church only for rations. They should rather come to church like soldiers, with loaded rifles, to get their orders and assignments to duty. "It is working between meals that is killing me," said a melancholy idler. Why should not every Sunday School, after an abridged study of this lesson, go out two and two, each two to carry to one block, indicated on a little card, some leaflet about conversion, or the observance of the Lord's Day, or temperance, with a card or paper announcing the autumn plans of all the churches in the section canvassed? Let it not be merely a throwing of literature into front yards, but real hand-to-hand and heart-to-heart harvesting, with kindly spoken words that shall plow the furrows for the printed seed thoughts. Some years ago the Endeavorers of St. Paul, going two and two, put 30,000 copies of the Sunday law, with arguments against Sunday saloons, especially, into the homes of that city, and so became one of the forces that broke the "ring" that had long enslaved the city. A preacher's wife, in New York, while her husband preached one Sabbath morning, gave out a beautiful colored paper to children in the neighboring streets, on which was printed an invitation to attend her Sunday School class for all that were not connected with any other. As a result, sixty-eight children were added to the class that afternoon, about one per minute for the time devoted to the harvesting. In Ceylon, it is the regular custom for native Bible-women and other lay members of the churches to go out in little groups of two or more every Sunday afternoon, carrying the Gospel heard on that morning from the white missionaries in the city into the villages, hamlets and country homes. Why should not such translations of the story of the seventy be undertaken everywhere, especially in rural districts, such as the land of shepherds, Perea, where these seventy laymen labored, giving to God, not their money, but themselves, not all their time, like the apostles, but what they could spare from business?

Every one of us, even the child, has a group of missionaries that we can send out two and two in God's service, whatever others may do:

> Two little eyes to look to God,
> Two little ears to hear his word,
> Two little lips to speak his praise,
> Two little feet to walk his ways.

The Harvest Ripe, The Reapers Unready The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. Multitudes waiting to be saved, ready in their sense of need, if only some living witness of Christ's power to meet that need would come and tell them lovingly and tactfully of him—that was what the "great harvest" meant when Christ spoke the words of Perea, and that, in a grander sense, is true of the world to-day, when every barbed-wire fence of hostile edicts that shut us from the spiritual harvest fields is broken down. Alas! the hindrances are now mostly not in the front, but in the rear, and the chief obstacle is, not so much, in foreign missions at least, that "laborers are few," as that givers are few; and selfish traders and politicians, many that stand ready to destroy rather than save the heathen; and the sense of human sin and brotherhood weak. At the Kentucky Chautauqua, a man who would like to be considered a Christian statesman, said recently that he would sooner try to convert Kentucky horses than Chinamen. And many professedly Christian men are talking in the same strain, partly because discussions of future punishment have made so many feel that heathen souls are in no danger of hell, as if, even in that case, the hell of their present degradation were not enough to arouse our utmost efforts in their behalf. We have become so used to the violation of law that it does not seem to be enough for us that we have the King's marching orders: "Go ye into all the world." It should be sufficient reason for hearty support of missions that he who knows the heathen's present and future commands us to go. Every one of us is called to "Go," in Christ's name, to disciple others, whether near or far. When we pray for laborers, therefore, let us say, first of all, "Here am I, send me." If our prayer is for a substitute to do our work, it will be a mockery. "The apostles are all dead," said a teacher. "Who will do their work to-day?" She expected the children to say, as many an older person would have done, "The preachers," but a little girl raised her hand to say, "Please, I'll be one to help Jesus."

The Might of Gentleness I send you forth as lambs among wolves. He was sending them among shepherds, from whose occupation he drew this illustration. These Pereans were a mixed race, descended from the tribes of Manasseh, Gad, Reuben on the one side, and Ammonites, Moabites and Edomites on the other. They would be, in many cases, hostile, and the wolfish Pharisees would also be encountered. But the very gentleness of the lamb and the Divine Shepherd's protection would be their defence. Gentleness has won more victories than force.

The Christian Worker's Commission Carry neither purse nor scrip. Note several things about this commission: 1. Though it was given to laymen that were to give only a fraction of their time to Christian work, it was almost identical with the commission given to the apostles who were called to devote their time wholly to the ministry (Matt. 9: 36 ff). It is a question worthy of serious discussion whether we have not made more distinction between clergy and laity than the Bible makes, and whether in so doing we have not given laymen an excuse for neglecting duties that God has placed upon them. 2. As to the financial side, the New Testament suggests adaptation, for while both twelve and seventy in their temporary journeys were to rely upon the usual hospitality of the Orient, in later days the apostles had a treasury (John 12: 6; 13: 29). 3. What they received in hospitality from those they served in spiritual things, was to be accounted not as alms but as salary. 4. When the message was rejected they were to shake off the dust by way of saying they were free from the responsibility and the consequences of rejecting the truth; but even in such a departure they were to leave with a message of mercy, inviting them to come under the protection and direction of Christ the King. 5. Salutation of the lengthy, formal, heartless sort, and formal visits were to be avoided as wasting God's time, a hint some need even in the Occident. 6. They were to minister to the sick, opening the way to show God's pity and power to heal the soul by manifesting his tenderness in bodily ills. Here is one of the particulars in which modern missions, in our cities and in foreign fields, are only of late adequately adopting the divine method, and it has been followed by most encouraging results. Famine ministries and hospitals are saving body and soul in a multitude of cases. 7. These men, as they went, proclaimed "the kingdom of God"; that is, that through the kingship of Christ—accepted by men, first individually and at last nationally—the wrongs the oppressed and weak had suffered for ages from masters and rulers would be righted (Luke 4: 18, 19).

TWO NATIVE GOSPEL WORKERS IN CEYLON HOLDING A VILLAGE SERVICE

Great Sermons to Small Audiences We speak of the seventy as preaching, but it was only such preaching as unlettered men, women and children can do anywhere. Francis d'Assisi once stepped down into the cloisters of the monastery and said to a young monk: "Brother, let us go down into the town and preach." So they went forth, conversing as they went with little groups here and there all along the principal streets of the town, then out into the outskirts and back to the gate of the monastery. There the young monk said: "When shall we begin to preach?" The reply was: "Our preaching is done for to-day." If any one will take up the Red Letter Testament or any book showing the words of Christ separately, he will find that most of the sermons and conversations of Christ were spoken either to one person or to groups of a dozen or less. Almost the only sermons preached to larger audiences were the second part of the Sermon on the Mount and the sermon at Nazareth. We shall hardly keep up with births and deaths in the conversion of the millions unsaved until we convert conversation to God's service.

The Joy of Harvest And the seventy returned with joy. They had not been promised the highest miraculous power (Mark 1: 27): the power to cast out devils; but their faith had outrun the promise, and it was of this supreme victory alone that they boasted and rejoiced as they came back to Christ.

Jesus saw beyond this casting out of devils the final overthrow of the kingdom of evil, and, leaping in hope the years of struggle not yet passed, he said, for their encouragement and ours: "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven"; that is, from his present heights of power. When God seems to be dead and Evil enthroned, let us take hope in this sure word of prophecy: "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." And let us not forget that nothing can really "hurt" those that serve Christ—not even death.

TO NAVIGATE THE AIR

ONE of the most successful experiments yet reported in aerial navigation, was made recently on the Lake of Geneva. It was the trial of an air-ship constructed by Count Zeppelin, a famous European aeronaut. As will be seen by our illustration here is no resemblance between the air-ship and the ordinary balloon. It is a cigar-shaped cylinder, over four hundred feet in length and nearly forty feet in diameter. The interior is filled with two thousand cylinders, which are capable of holding 32,000 feet of hydrogen. Its entire weight is about nine tons. It has two benzine engines which supply the motor power. On the day of trial the machine was taken out to the centre of the Lake of Geneva and anchored to a large pontoon. The inventor with four companions, entered it and the order was given to cast off. The machine slowly rose to a height of 1,200 feet, and, guided by the steersman, sailed over the lake to the shore. An accident to the steering gear cut short the experiment there, but it was found that the air-ship had traveled three and a-half miles in seventeen minutes, and during that time had been perfectly under control. Count Zeppelin declared himself fully satisfied with the result of the trial and said that when the steering gear had been repaired and improved, he would make another ascent. The air-ship is the result of thirty years of study and experiment. It cost a quarter of a million dollars, of which the German Government has, it is understood, contributed a part. The inventor is enthusiastic over his success and is convinced that eventually he will solve the problem of aerial navigation. His object primarily is that of turning his vessel to military use, the advantages of balloons having been repeatedly demonstrated in recent campaigns. It is not expected that aerial navigation can ever become a practical mode of ordinary travel. Still less can the Count be credited with the spiritual ambition which evoked the denunciation of the ancient prophet:

Thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High (Isa. 14. 13, 14).

Syndicating a Lawyer

An interesting reminiscence of the early career of Chief Justice Russell, who died in England last week, is related by one of his friends. When the famous judge was a practising barrister, his services were extensively sought, owing to his eloquence and his marvelous skill in cross-examination. He appeared in nearly all the important cases, and was earning big fees. His income was said to be nearly half a million dollars a year. Yet he had a worried look, and to one of his friends who asked him if he was in trouble, he confessed that he was pressed by debts and had no money to meet them. The fact was that old acquaintances followed him everywhere, asking for loans and getting his assistance in all kinds of foolish schemes. He was a warm-hearted man who could not bear to say no to a needy friend. His friends talked the matter over and suggested to the great lawyer a plan for his relief. It was that he should turn all his earnings over to a syndicate of three or four friends who should make him a liberal allowance sufficient for his personal expenses, and use the large balance to the settlement of his affairs. Russell gladly consented. At the end of two years, when, as he supposed, his debts must have largely increased, he was astonished to learn that they had all been paid and there was a substantial balance in the bank. How had it been done? he asked in amazement and was told that it was the result only of an orderly and economical administration of his own earnings. He confessed that no such result could ever have been obtained under his own management. There are many who have learned that the management of their own lives, not in finance alone, is better not in their own hands, but directed and controlled by divine wisdom:

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart and lean not unto thy own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him and he will direct thy paths (Prov. 3:5, 6).

A Fatal Chase

The pursuit of a butterfly cost a twelve-year-old boy his life in New York a few days ago. His home stands near the bluff at Webster avenue and 170th street, and he had often been on the grassy height at play with his companions. During the school vacation his mother has allowed him to wheel his baby brother there in the perambulator. On August 9 he was out as usual with his little charge. Just as he neared the edge of the bluff a butterfly with variegated wings flew over the perambulator and the baby reached out for it. He missed it, and then the boy chased it over the field. The butterfly led him this way and that, the boy making dashes at it with his hat. He did not notice where he was going, and as the butterfly soared just over his head he was looking up at it and following when it went beyond the edge of the bluff and the boy fell over. His mangled body was picked up a few minutes later and carried home to his sorrowing mother. It was a sad penalty for boyish heedlessness. If he had been older he might have been more careful as to the path he was taking. But there are many grown men who are still more heedless in the matters of the soul. In the pursuit of wealth or fame they venture into dangerous paths and often to their eternal ruin.

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition (I. Timothy 6:9).

COUNT ZEPPELIN'S AIR-SHIP PREPARING FOR ITS TRIAL VOYAGE

A Unique Dwelling

A remarkable discovery has been made in New Mexico by some eminent archæologists from California. In making excavations recently in Pajarsto Canon, between Bland and Espanola, they found a building more than six hundred years old. It was built entirely of stone carefully dressed, and was 560 feet long by 450 feet wide. It had three stories, and contained fifteen hundred rooms. In one of the rooms an old furnace for smelting was found, near which was a large iron bar, deeply incrusted with rust, also pieces of rich copper ore, as well as gold ornaments and a piece of beautiful turquoise. Twenty-five pieces of pottery of great beauty and brilliancy were in the room. They were heavy, fully one-quarter of an inch thick, and decorated inside and outside with unique designs, showing some degree of uniformity. One of the designs represented the picture of a three-frame building, with smokestack and smoke curling out of it. Some cloth was found, woven in spirals almost like a huge spider's nest. Around the fireplace stood a dozen large pots, each with bones in it, showing that the inhabitants abandoned the room while they were preparing a meal. Near some of the smelter slag was found scorched corn, together with the bones of birds and other animals. Several baskets in the room were more beautiful than those woven by the Navajos to-day, but they crumbled to dust when touched. Iron knives, stone battle axes, and polished stone reflectors, and several musical instruments, including a fife, were in evidence and well preserved. It is supposed that they must have been suddenly attacked by some stronger people, and either been killed or driven away. There were indications that a whole tribe had occupied this one building, and had probably lived a communal life. Very little can now be known of this strange prehistoric people, but this discovery shows that to them Christ's description of heaven would have had a familiar meaning.

In my Father's house are many mansions (John 14:2).

Death of a Veteran

The departure of Dr. Cyrus Hamlin on August 8 removes one of the most eminent and devoted of our missionaries from the scene of his labors. He was in his eighty-ninth year, and had been sixty-three years in active missionary labor. He went to Turkey under the auspices of the American Board in 1837. There he soon perceived that the great need of the country was an institution for the higher education of the converts to the Christian faith. After a seven years' contest with Turkish officials, he obtained an imperial edict under which Robert College in Constantinople became such an institution as he had planned. Throughout Turkey, Armenia and all the East the fame of that college has spread. The education afforded there was superior to anything of the kind in the Turkish dominions. It was mainly due to the training they gained there that the leaders of the Armenians, in spite of the prejudices against them, have obtained high employment in government and commercial service. Dr. Hamlin consecrated all his varied abilities to the work, wrote several text-books for the college, and translated many valuable books into Armenian. Since his retirement from the presidency of Robert College, he served for a time on the staff of the Seminary of Bangor, Me., and of Middlebury College. To the last he maintained a deep interest in Turkish affairs and his advice in all missionary matters was eagerly sought. He was a man of profound learning and might have reached eminence in many professions, but he preferred to devote himself wholly to Christ's service and to the cause of suffering humanity. He had fully earned the blessing promised for the well spent life:

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in its season (Job 5:26).

To Separate Gold from Sand

Where gold exists in a finely divided state in rocky matrix or in sand, it is highly important to concentrate it or remove a lage proportion of the baser substance before the ore goes to the amalgamator or other extractor. As much gold is found in dry and arid regions, where water is very scarce and expensive, a dry process for concentration has been urgently sought. Several inventors have produced electrical solutions of the problem, one having been patented quite recently. The gold-bearing rock is crushed in stamp mills to a fine sand, and this is poured into a metallic hopper, from the bottom of which it pours out in a fine stream, much as the sand falls from the upper part of an hour-glass. Near the falling stream of gold-bearing sand is placed a highly electrified cylinder or knob. As the stream falls, electrical repulsion is produced, but the particles of sand, being non-conductors, are not so highly charged as the particles of gold, and hence are not so violently repelled. Consequently the stream divides into two parts. The sand falls nearly straight down, while the gold is driven to one side, and is caught in a separate receptacle. The electricity reaches both the sand and the gold, but the gold alone is responsive to its influence. Perhaps the final separation of people may be conducted on a similar principle. A test may be applied which will affect only those who have the new nature:

They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit (Rom. 8:5).

BRIEF NOTES

School attendance in Cuba under American protection has increased from 10,000 to 1,130,000.

Dr. F. E. Clark, President of the Christian Endeavor Society, held a convention in Pekin during his recent visit. Minister Conger presided at one of the meetings.

The Young Women's Conference at Northfield instead of falling below those of previous years, has far exceeded the record of the past. The attendance has been unusually great, and the exercises have been very interesting. Among the leaders have been Dr. Pauline Root, Mrs. Lucy Waterbury and Dr. Chamberlain of India.

The Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. desires to have it made known that a Bible class is now being formed which will hold its first meeting on Oct. 4. It will meet every Thursday at seven o'clock. Eminent teachers have promised to take charge of the studies. Among them are Professor George A. Hubbell of Erasmus Hall and Rev. R. Stanley Povey. Applications for membership should be sent in early.

The tent work in New York is proving a source of blessing to multitudes. It is easy to see that many are present at the meetings to whom a religious service of any kind is a novelty. They pay close attention and there are indications that a deep impression is being made. The committee in charge of the services need assistance in the payment of expenses. Contributions may be sent to Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, the Y. M. C. A., West Fifty-seventh street, New York.

Professor Herman V. Hilprecht, who in the spring of the present year went to the East to superintend excavations in behalf of the University of Pennsylvania, has written that he has discovered the great temple library and priest's school of Nippur, which was devastated by the Elamites 228 B.C. He says of the literary portion of the discovery: "The library consists of sixteen thousand volumes written on stones, and covers the entire theological, astronomical, linguistic and mathematical knowledge of those days.

AND I d'no as I thought of anybody or anything there in Venice so much as I did of John Ruskin, who give even the stones of Venice a language that will go on speakin' long after the stuns have mouldered back into dust. And then the dust will keep his memory green, and folks will ponder the Ethics of the Dust long after that dust has passed into other changing forms and disappeared.

Great mind, great lovin' heart, who had but one thought, to make the world more full of beauty, knowledge, sincerity and goodness. His pure, bright intellect, his life white as the lilies, his living thoughts and noble idees they rap at the human heart, as well as mind, with their powerful sesame, and you have to open your heart's door and take them in. Prophet of earth and heaven, the air, the clouds, the birds and trees, the rocks and waters, translatin' the marvelous words so our duller eyes and ears can see and hear.

As I walked along over them stones of Venice, and in the Galleries of Modern Painters and ancient ones, my heart kep' sayin' onbeknown to myself and them round me, "John Ruskin, noble soul, great teacher, childlike, wise interpreter of the beauty and ministry of common things, hail and farewell!" For he had gone — it wuz true that he who had loved the flowers so and said to a friend who had sent him some: "I am trying to find out if there are flowers that do not fade." He had found out now, wreathes of heavenly immortelles are laid on his tired forward, not tired now, and he has his chance to talk to Moses and Plato, as he said he wanted to, and he is satisfied. Love and Sympathy that he longed for comforts and consoles him, and Beauty and Goodness wait on him.

Robert Strong felt just as I did about Ruskin, their idees about helpin' the poor, and the brotherhood of man, and fatherhood of God, wuz as congenial and blent together like sun and dew on a May morning. Robert Strong said no other writer had done him the good Ruskin had.

And I guess Dorothy thought so, too; she almost always thought jest as Robert did.

Josiah on Gondolas

In wanderin' round this uneek city Josiah said the most he thought on wuz of tellin' Deacon Henzy and Uncle Sime Bentley about what he see there. And shadowy idees seemed to fill his mind about tryin' to turn the Jonesville creek through the streets and goin' from our house to Thomas Jefferson's in a gondola.

Arvilly said she would gin anything to canvas some of them old Doges for the Twin Crimes. But I told her I guessed they didn't need to learn anything about crime, and she gin up they didn't.

The first thing Miss Meechim wanted to see wuz the church of St. Mark, so we all set off one day to see it. San Marco, as they call it, is one of the most interestin' churches to visitors on the Continent. It wuz begun way back in the tenth century, and it has been in process of building ever since, and I don't know how long they lay out to keep at it. They have spent thirty millions on it, so I hearn, and the news come pretty straight to me, and I d'no but they'll spend as much agin' before they git through. But when you see all its magnificent sculpture, columns, statutes, mosaic work, ornaments of every kind, its grand arches, its five domes and spires and all the exquisite work on it I d'no as I'd took the job for any less, and so I told Josiah.

But he kep' up his old idee he had voiced in many a similar spot, that it wuz done by day's works and the workmen didn't hurry, and that it would have been cheaper to had it done by the job. But how could they, dribblin' along as they did ten hundred years?

The four horses over the main entrance are very noted. They are said to have been carved way, way back by Augustus to celebrate a triumph over Antony and to have passed through the hands of Nero, Constantine and Napoleon. Napoleon, a greedy creeter always, took 'em to Paris, but had to bring 'em back.

For horses that are so old and have been driv round and showed off by so many conquerors, they look pretty sound and hearty. But Josiah didn't like their looks nigh so well as he duz the mair's, and sez he, "That off one looks balky."

But I sez, "Distance lends enchantment; the mair can't begin with 'em."

The altar piece is said to have cost three million. It is of gold and silver, and full of precious stuns. It wuz made in Constantinople a thousand years ago, and has got inscriptions on it that I presoom read well if anybody could read 'em. But I couldn't nor Josiah. But Robert Strong read some on 'em to Dorothy, for I heard him. They are writ in Latin and Greek.

Letters from Home

When we got back to the tarven that night we found a hull pile of letters from Jonesville, and amongst the rest I got a letter from Elder Minkley, good old man of God, and Arvilly got one too; he sets store by Arvilly now, he and his wife duz, and they pity her dretfully for what she has went through, and make allowances for her hashness, but never shall I forgit the way she talked to him right in my own settin' room when she first come home from Cuba after her husband had been murdered by the licensed Canteen.

She come to our house one day, and Elder Minkley, good old soul, come in just after she did for a all-day's visit, poor creeter! I guess he wuz sorry enough he come, some of the time; I guess he wished he wuz back in his study perusin' the book of martyrs or anything else depressin', and would have thought 'em fur livelier than what he got into.

The way on't wuz, Arvilly had met Miss Deacon Sypher at the gate and she bein' dretful onfaculized with no more tact than a settin' hen, had tackled Arvilly for a contribution to buy a flag to send to our boys in Cuba, and talked enthusiastic about the war's holy mission. And I spoze Sister Sypher wuz skairt almost into fits to hear Arvilly go on, 'tennyrate she left her sudden and to once, and started home cross lots almost on the run, and Arvilly come into the house talkin' and mutterin'.

"Drusilly Sypher knows a sight about it; our army gone to redress wrongs and protect innocence! they better look to home and redress wrongs here; half the citizens of this country in legal bondage, and the hull country cowering under a crime and danger protected and legalized; if I didn't want to make myself a mark for demon laughter I'd quit such talk till I repented my sins in sackcloth and ashes."

"Well, well, Arvilly, set down, set down," sez I, for she wuz rampagin' round the room back and forth, "set down, and here," sez I, handin' her a bottle, "smell of the camfire, Arvilly, you look bad," and she did look frightful bad, pale and fiery, and burnin' mad at sunthin' or somebody.

But she waived it off with scorn: "Camfire can't heal the smart, or sweeten the air of the country; no, it needs fire from on high to burn it out. And it will come," sez she, "it will come."

Why, she acted real wild and by the side of herself, and I pitied her like a dog, and wuz at my wit's end what to say to her, and I wuz glad enough to see Elder Minkley, good old saint, comin' up the steps and I went to open the door with alacrity and my left hand, my right hand wuz in the dough, I wuz makin' fried cakes, and I shook hands with him the same, and I sez:

"How glad I am to see you this morning, Brother Minkley," little thinkin' what wuz to come.

He took off his hat and overcoat and hung 'em up in the hall and looked in the glass in the hall rack with his mild, benevolent eyes, and brushed his thin, gray hair up on the bald spot over his benign forward, and follered me into the settin' room, and I sez, "Here is she that wuz sister Arvilly Lanfear."

And the good old soul advanced with a warm, meller smile on his face, and sez:

"How do you do, Sister Arvilly."

But Arvilly's eyes snapped worse than ever; she never noticed his outstretched hand, and she sez, "Don't you sister me."

"Why! why!" sez he, "what is the matter?" His welcomin' hand dropped weakly by his side, and bein' dretful confused and by the side of himself, he sez:

"I hain't seen you before sence you—you—"

READING LETTERS FROM HOME ON THE PIAZZA AT VENICE

Brother Minkley Startled

"Deserted from the army," sez she, finishin' the sentence for him. "Yes, I deserted, I am proud to say; I never had a right before under this nation's laws and I took that right; I deserted and they couldn't help themselves; mebby them men see how it would feel to grin and bear for once, just as wimmen have to all the time."

Brother Minkley had by this time begun to find and recover himself, and he sez with real good nature: "I meant to say, dear sister, that I hadn't seen you before since you lost your husband."

"Since you murdered him," sez she.

"I — I murder a man?" He looked pale and trembled like a popple leaf.

"Yes, you and all other good men who stood by like Pilate, consentin' to his death," Arvilly went on.

Elder Minkley looked too dazed and agitated to speak, and Arvilly continued: "Do you pretend to say, Elder Minkley, that there is an evil law on the face of the earth that the Church of Christ couldn't overthrow if it chose to do so?"

He sez, "The power of the Church is great, Sister Arvilly, but no-license laws don't stop drinking; liquor is sold somehow; folks that want it will get it."

"What a argument!" sez Arvillly liftin' her eyes to heaven. "But you hain't answered my question," sez she, short as pie crust, mince pie crust, "Is there an evil law existing to-day that the Church of Christ could not overthrow if it tried to?"

"Well, no," he admitted, "I believe that the Church of Christ is invincible."

"Do you vote, Elder Minkley?"

"Well, no, as it were, Sister Arvilly. I have felt for years that politics was too vile for me to mix myself with."

Sez Arvilly, "Do you believe in following the Lord Jesus Christ?"

Sez Elder Minkley, his good-natured face lighting up, "My Divine Master; yes, I will follow him to the stake, to the death, if need be."

"Did he turn away from sinners and the evils of the sinful world and say they wuz too vile for him to mix with?"

"I—I—Sister Arvilly—I why—I don't know what you mean?"

"Yes, you do know what I mean!" sez the intripid but agonized Arvilly.

"By your criminal indifference and neglect, you encourage the evil power that rules and ruins."

Elder Minkley's face began to look red—red as blood—and sez he, "You present the subject in a way I never thought on before, Sister Arvilly. I will think of it; I will pray over it."

"Will you vote as you pray?" sez Arvilly anxiously.

"I will!" sez Elder Minkley, solemnly, "I will!"

Arvilly come forward and took holt of his hand. Her stern mean softened; there wuz tears in her keen eyes; she looked different. Sez she, "Next Sunday I shall set under your preachin', Elder; I hain't felt like settin' under it before." And, sure enough, she did go to meetin' the next Sunday and from that day they have been the best of friends.

But to resoom forwards: I had a letter from Philury, she said he wuz all well.

It wuz a letter that brought me some comfort and quite a lot of care; it wuz some like a peppermint lozenge, considerably sweet with a sharp tang to it, makin' me think of the sweetness and repose of home with its accompaniment of anxiety and labor.

The children writ real good letters to their pa and me, full of affection and thoughtfulness. Thomas J. told us considerable about the Help Union and the good that Ernest White and his helpers wuz accomplishing in Boontown and Jonesville. And Tirzah Ann wanted to know if reeres had gone out and hoops comin' in; he had hearn so and felt anxious. There had been a rumor in Jonesville to that effect, but she couldn't place full dependence on it.

Thomas J.'s and Maggie's letters wuz full of gratefulness for Tommy's restored health and what I'd done for him. No matter what else they said that idee wuz runnin' along under the rest of their thoughts, some like the accompaniment of a melodean to a sam tune in meetin'. And Tommy himself had letters from his pa and ma full of love and good advice, about half and half.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA—A NATIVE VOTE OF THANKS TO CHRISTIAN AMERICA

India's Gratitude to America

Testimonies of Missionaries and Officials to the Appreciation of the People of the Gifts of Our Readers

RECENT letters and cablegrams from India show that the conditions in the famine districts are not improved except in hope. There is now a prospect that in about six weeks' time a small harvest may be gathered; but it will be limited, owing to the farmers having lost their cattle, with which farming operations are conducted, by their own physical weakness, resulting from lack of proper food, and by their inability to obtain seed for sowing. Probably no land at all would have been sown, had not the government advanced funds for the purpose. Already nearly two million dollars have been appropriated as loans to the farmers to buy cattle and seed, these loans to be for a year without interest and wherever there is inability to pay without hardship, the loan is to be turned into a gift. In the meantime and until the harvest is gathered, the suffering will be extreme. The numbers on the relief camps have not perceptibly diminished and cholera is still reaping its awful harvest. For at least six weeks yet there is urgent need of further remittances in order that the noble work done during the past months may be carried to its triumphant conclusion.

Our readers will be deeply gratified to learn from the following extract from a letter recently received from Rev. E. F. Frease, of Baroda, that the magnificent gift of the cargo of corn sent on the Quito has proved even a greater blessing to the starving people than we had dared hope. Mr. Frease writes:

"Reports have reached me as to the reception of the corn which prove that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could not have done a wiser thing than it did in sending this cargo. Two or three times the quantity of corn sent in the Quito could have been used to the best possible advantage, even at this late period of the famine. There can now be no question that the sending of corn was one of the very best forms of famine relief. I assure you that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD corn is proving an inestimable blessing."

The Irish Presbyterian Mission, whose stations are in the heart of the famine district, participated in the relief contributed by our readers. At a general meeting of its missionaries, held at Anand, the following resolution was unanimously passed: "Report having been made of the substantial assistance rendered to this mission from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, this meeting desires to place on record their deep gratitude to the generous donors. Their liberal gifts of corn, blankets and money have proved most helpful at this time, when the worst crisis of the famine is being so acutely felt throughout these districts. These gifts have enabled the Mission to conduct relief measures on a far larger scale than would otherwise have been possible. To the proprietor of that journal and its generous and compassionate readers we tender our heartfelt thanks for this offering of love."

A practical tribute of appreciation of American generosity has also come to hand in a letter from the United States Consul at Bombay, Mr. W. T. Fee. He writes that the railroads which carried the corn from the Quito to the interior districts originally charged largely reduced rates for the freight. Since payment was made, the directors have met and having heard from Mr. Fee and Mr. Benjamin Aitken the circumstances connected with the gift, they promptly returned to the committee thirty-five thousand rupees (about $11,666), which meant that they carried the cargo below the actual expenses involved. They said that they made the rebate to show their appreciation of "the gift of the big-hearted American people."

Rev. W. O. Ballantine, Presbyterian Missionary at Rahuri, writes that he has received a consignment of corn, and sits "right down to thank the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for this most timely and welcome gift." Applications come for it not only from the very poor, but from people who are able and willing to pay for it. Some small quantity of the consignment to Rahuri has been sold to them and the money immediately used for famine relief.

All the missionaries plead earnestly for a continuance of help. The people who have been kept alive thus far cannot be deserted now in the last crisis and there are others who have managed to survive the pressure whose resources are now utterly exhausted. For both classes, as well as for the orphans, the missionaries plead in pathetically eloquent terms, acknowledging the liberal gifts already received, which have enabled them to save the lives of thousands of the sufferers. But it is clear from their letters that more help must be sent; the need is urgent and we are sure that the love which has done so much for them thus far will carry on the good work to the end.

GRAIN FROM THE QUITO'S CARGO BEING DISTRIBUTED IN LOWER COLABA, BOMBAY

SAVING THE TENEMENT WAIFS

TRIALS OF OVER-BURDENED MOTHERS — SUFFERING OF THE CHILDREN—OUR FRESH-AIR HOME WORK . .

THE hot waves that have visited New York this summer have meant untold suffering to dwellers in the crowded tenement districts; and many little ones have been gathered by the grim reaper, Death. It is difficult for one living in the open country or even in cool, roomy town houses to realize the situation in Cherry, Hester, James, and other densely populated streets of the cosmopolitan East Side. In every one of the dark, gloomy tenements many families live. In the hot mornings as the children wake from their troubled slumber in close, stuffy quarters where many have breathed the same vitiated air through the miserable night, they wander down on the street to play; there is nowhere else to go. There are no friendly trees to cast a shadow on blistering sidewalks; here and there on corners, under shelter, maybe, of a bar-room awning, little groups congregate; many larger children carry smaller ones in their arms or trundle them in rickety perambulators. The mothers of some of these waifs go out to work and do not return until night: the children pick up lunch as best they can. Night comes, the crowd on the sidewalks becomes more and more dense; little ones roam the streets till late, for home (?) is too hot and wretched to be inviting. Mothers stand in doorways or sit on curbstones with babies in their arms, that their little ones may get the benefit of every possible breath of air. A Sunday School teacher who recently brought a large company of candidates for an outing, writes:

"The efforts of these mothers of the slums to keep their little ones alive are very pathetic. I know one workingwoman who has been getting up at five every morning to take her ailing child to the docks, as the doctor told her that would be helpful. I know of another who walked the streets all night with a sick child in her arms. What a godsend THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fresh-Air Fund is to mothers, as well as children of the slums, none can comprehend so well as the missionaries who see the wretchedness of tenement homes, the struggle of tenement mothers, and then their joy and gratitude when members of their little broods are taken off their hands to beautiful, health-giving Mont-Lawn for ten long blessed days."

During the seven summers since it was first opened, not one death has occurred at Mont-Lawn among the more than 12,000 children entertained, though many weak, suffering children have recovered strength there. Occasionally, a trivial accident has happened; a little lad or lass has fallen from a tree or received a hurt in too violent play. In every case, the child or its parent has spoken of such accident as a providence, since it secured the little one a longer stay at the Home. We have now a small convalescent there, Annie, a wild, unruly little street-waif. Annie is on the swift road to recovery, and is very cheerful. She listens eagerly to stories and learns many Bible texts. Her character shows a marked change for the better. "I guess there was good in being hurt," she says.

Our readers will look with pleasure upon our picture of little lads and lassies around the pump under shady trees near the Home. They have cooperated with us in giving these small people their delightful outing, the good food they eat, the clothes they wear. It costs only $3 to send a child to Mont-Lawn for ten days, this sum covering transportation both ways, food, clothing, medical and caretakers' attention, etc.; $6 sends two children; $9, three; $12, four; $36 sends twelve, and $50 makes seventeen waifs happy for ten days. Gifts of clothing, hats, shoes, coats, trousers, dresses, blouses that your children have outgrown, will be thankfully accepted, should you kindly send them to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y. Contributions of money should be addressed to this office. All donations will be promptly acknowledged in these columns. The following has been received:

Answered Prayers

Mrs. F.J.C. writes: "We know prayer is answered, not only in sickness, but in other ways. We were laboring under a heavy cloud for over two years—sickness, loss of employment, etc.—and yet our heavenly Father took care of us all the way through, saw that we had enough to eat and a roof to cover us, although, at the time, it did seem as though our prayers did not go above the ceiling; but they did, and in his time and in his way they were answered. At first only a rift in the cloud, which broadened and broadened, till there was brightness ahead, and the cloud lifted. We were discouraged at times, but we had faith, and knew if it was his will, all would come out right, and it has."

Mrs. F. A. M., Hamilton, N.Y., writes: "I promised the Lord that if he would spare my children's lives, I would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I give him the glory and the praise."

Mrs. P. M., Russia, Herkimer County, N.Y., writes: "My mother was very sick; I thought she would die. I prayed for her recovery, promising, if my prayer was answered, that I would acknowledge the same in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. My mother is now well."

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

.. The Open Cage ..

THIS beautiful picture reminds me of a little incident in my life some years ago. My home was in a Southern town near tide-water, where ships came and went, and the fringing trees grew close to the river's brink. One summer, when most people were seeking cooler quarters at the North, I decided to stay by the stuff and the family; and friends who were leaving brought me their dogs and cats and other pets to care for in their absence. I demurred at taking charge of a wonderfully sweet-voiced canary, which was greatly prized by its owner, fearing that accident or the cat's paws or some untoward illness might befall it.

"But," pleaded Myrtle, "you have a bird of your own and nothing ever happens to it; I ask only that you should look after my bird as you do after your own. If accident comes, I will not blame you, but fate."

On this consideration I accepted the trust, and for eight weeks that bird was on my mind. The cats seemed possessed to make love to the canary, and my own little warbler had some narrow escapes. Still, all went well, until one morning as I was giving the birdies their seed and water, a cry was heard from the kitchen that a little colored child, the cook's daughter, had badly scalded her hand. Hastily finishing my task, I ran to her aid, leaving ajar the cage door of the visiting bird. Returning in a moment I heard a whirr of wings and saw a yellow flash in the sunlight. The bird had flown. He was making for the willows by the river, for the tall old elm at the foot of the garden, for the clump of bushes on the island opposite our home.

Good-by, birdie. My heart sank; a caged bird, unused to freedom, could not even secure his living, and foes menaced him on every side. As I heard his triumphant song, poured mockingly from the top of a tall tree, I sat down and cried. And just then the postman stopped with letters, and the uppermost one was from Myrtle, announcing her immediate return.

"No good in cryin', honey," said a comforting voice, and a big black hand was laid on my shoulder. Mammy was used to the task of consolation. She had cared for the children of two generations, and a wee baby toddler of the third generation now tagged after her ample gingham skirts.

"Honey," she said, "dat bird done flown; but he mighty suttin to come back; set you own bird in de window, and you go out in the field with Gypsy's cage in your hand; your bird will sing and call him, and his seed and water will call him, too. I know he'll come back; and I'll pray for it, honey."

"Do you pray about such things?" I asked.

"Surely, child; the good Book say, 'Not a sparrer fall to the ground without your Father.' A canary's wuth more than a sparrer."

The lady in the picture has a bird in her cage and she is setting her birds free, but I went out with the empty cage for another purpose, and my little friend lilted in the window in answer to my vagrant in the tree-top. And by and by there was again a whirr of wings and a flash of yellow gold, and the wanderer returned to his home. Ever since, this has been my rule.

FREED CAPTIVES

When obstacles and trials seem Like prison walls to be,
I do the little I can do
And leave the rest to Thee.

For, I know that God heard old mammy's prayer that day, and I am sure that nothing is ever too small to be carried to the great God, who can look after the little things as well as after the great things.

FREED CAPTIVES

Out to the freedom of air and sky,
To the forest glades, and the maple boughs,
To the fields in the golden sun that lie,
To the upland hills where the cattle browse.
Up and away, ye birds of air.
God gave you pinions for joyous flight;
Wherever ye go, you will be his care,
In the sunny day, in the shadowy night.

Out to the freedom of air and sky,
Fly little birdlings, haste to fly.

Tramping

Tramping across country in thick boots and a short skirt, climbing fences, fording brooks, resting on the green grass, and looking up into the sky from the prone and mossy trunk of a tree, hewn last year and left in the forest, is as good for soul and body as golfing, or playing tennis. Few forms of exercise surpass walking in their quickening of the blood and their inspiration and good cheer. The woman who in town takes a car at the corner and rides to the shops, who never walks a step when she can help herself, and never stirs from her door except in full costume for the street, grows very informal in the free outdoor life of the summer in the hills, and finds that she can walk miles without much effort and resultant fatigue. Happy is the summer tramp of the feminine variety.

Good Housekeeping

The house was full of summer boarders. It was the same house in which two or three weeks ago, the veranda talk turned upon the relative ease of men's and women's work. One August evening when it was cool enough to wear shawls and wraps of one or another kind when sitting out of doors, a group of friends lingered in the moonlight and to the droning music of the crickets and katydids, discussed a homely subject, namely, good housekeeping.

"When I was a girl," said the dear old lady, "housekeeping was harder than it now is, for we had not canning factories, and home-made pickles and preserves were not manufactured for the market. The pride of my life used to be my pantry with rows upon rows of lucent jars of jam and jelly, with berries, peaches, quinces, and pears preserved in their season, and with strings of dried fruit, pared and quartered, ready for the stewing process in the winter. In the city in these days, the change is very great; people buy almost everything. That's why they have so much more time."

"Well," remarked the minister's wife, "in country parishes and on the farms a little back from the railroad, women still 'do up' their own fruits and take pleasure in making a very ample provision for the winter; the housekeeper there, however, shuts up a large part of her house in cold weather while in town the furnace-heated house or apartment must all be kept in complete order, and there is so much bric-a-brac, there are so many pillows and rugs and portieres, that I cannot see much lessening of care. If I had my way I would take down every curtain, and store all the superfluous photographs and curios; the housekeeper would live longer."

"I wish," said the matron from Philadelphia, "that every housewife could pattern by our summer hostess. Here she is with forty people in her house—people of all ages, from eighty to two years—babies, boys, girls, young women, older women, young men and men with silver hair, and in sweet serenity she makes her home a haven of peace for these wayfarers. She is never in a hurry, never fidgets, never seems to be doing much, but the work gets done, three meals a day are served, and we rise in the morning and retire at night without a care, while she who is caring for us is as genial and gentle all the while as if looking after forty persons and their comfort were mere play. This is good housekeeping."

The summer hostess said, "Thanks."

A MOUNTAIN CLIMBER

Gains 12 lbs. on Change of Food

When a change in food can rebuild a man 77 years of age, it is evidence that there is some value in a knowledge that can discriminate in the selection of proper food to rebuild the body. A few months ago the physician attending Warren S. Johnson of Colfax, Cal., 77 years old, told him that death from old age would soon claim him. He suffered from general weakness and debility.

An old lady advised him to quit coffee and drink Postum Cereal Food Coffee .and to eat Grape-Nuts breakfast food every morning. He took the advice and has gained 12 pounds. Says he is as well as he ever was, and can take long trips in the mountains, which he has been unable to do for a long time.

There is a reason for this; in the first place, coffee acts as a direct nerve destroyer on many highly organized people, both young and old, and many people haven't the knowledge to select, nourishing, healthful, rebuilding food.

Both Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts breakfast food are made from selected parts of the field grains that contain delicate particles of phosphate of potash and albumen. These two elements combine in the human body to quickly rebuild the gray matter in the brain and in the nerve centers throughout the body.

Direct, sure, and certain results come from their use and can be proven by any person that cares to make the trial. Both the Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts are kept by all first-class grocers.

YOUNG COLONISTS GATHERING IN THE PUMPKINS

A MODEL COLONY OF BOY-FARMERS

HOW WAYWARD LADS ARE BEING RECLAIMED A BENEFICENT ENTERPRISE IN ULSTER COUNTY

UP in Ulster county, N. Y., right under the Shawangunk Mountains, within an easy drive of Lakes Mohawk and Minnewaska, and of Poughkeepsie, Kingston and Rhinebeck, is a beautiful, fertile, well-watered farm where all the toilers are lads between twelve and fifteen. Very happy toilers they are; work is not compulsory; they are paid for what they do in "Colony money," and with this they pay for lodging and board and for such comforts and luxuries as they choose to purchase at the Colony store.

HARVESTING CORN

A BUSY GROUP OF BOY CARPENTERS

It is a pleasant sight to see the laddies hoeing away merrily, trundling wheelbarrows, gathering apples, harvesting corn or pumpkins, looking after the live stock, or even in the more domestic occupations of laundry work or assisting the matron in keeping the big farm-house clean and trim. There is a carpenter shop, too, in which the small men learn how to do many useful things. Cobbling is another art all may acquire, and the purpose of the Industrial Colony Association, under which the institution was organized in 1897, is to establish a good trade school in connection with the farm.

The Colony government is that of a miniature county, Ulster being the model adopted. It is conducted by the boys themselves, who make and enforce the laws, pay the taxes and fill the offices. The boys are taught to be independent by being thrown on their own resources. They are not coaxed to work, but they know they must pay for food, lodging and clothing, and that the only way to do this is to work and earn the money. A boy can break a law if he chooses, but if he does he is arrested by the boy-sheriff, tried before the court (made up of boys), and if found guilty, fined or imprisoned. To fail to find work, and thus become a pauper and subsist on the charity of the boy-community and be treated to their scorn, is a trial which, as a rule, the most hardy find too severe to invite.

The citizens of this youthful government are boys of the slums. Preference is given to incorrigibles. A bad lad, a "hopeless case," is just the one the Colony likes to take hold of and to transform into a manly, industrious, self-respecting boy. Many remarkable transformations are recorded. Thus two brothers, who had been arrested for burglary in Brooklyn, and who formed a plot and broke into the Colony store soon after their arrival, are to-day law-abiding, trustworthy citizens. One of these lads became, by steady work and trustworthiness, foreman of the Colony laundry. Mr. Wynkoop, Superintendent of the Colony, receives many letters from grateful mothers, thanking him for what the Colony has done for their boys. One says: "My son is an entirely new boy since his stay with you." Another: "It is a grand place for a boy with a wayward disposition." The average summer population is thirty-five; winter, twelve. But the work has passed its experimental stage, demonstrated its usefulness, and the management propose to enlarge it as rapidly as contributions permit. Earnest efforts are being made to purchase the farm, for which rent is now being paid; and as the work is commending itself to many, this worthy object will doubtless be accomplished. The association is composed of numerous prominent philanthropists, pastors and business men. General A. C. Barnes heads the Advisory Board; Herbert M. Williams is President of the Board of Directors; Rev. Frederic T. Steele is Secretary, and Charles W. Fuess, 34 Gramercy Park, New York, Treasurer. Superintendent Irving Wynkoop, Manager Adams, Mrs. Adams, the matron, and Dr. Karsted are in charge at the farm. Women's Auxiliary Committees at Kingston, Poughkeepsie and other places have rendered effectual assistance in maintaining the institution; farmers of the neighborhood have lent helping hands. The store has been stocked with shoes, hats and other supplies by thoughtful friends. On payment of $1 and approval of Board of Directors, any one can become a member of the association. The original scope of the Colony seems to have included summer work only, but the wisdom and necessity of housing some boys all winter have kept it open the year round. "Our plan is to give the boys right ideas, teach them how to work and get them positions where they can earn a living," says Rev. Edward Niles, one of the directors, to whom we are indebted for much information concerning this interesting and worthy enterprise. Our readers who desire to know more about the Industrial Colony Association, will have prompt replies to inquiries addressed to the secretary, Dr. Steele, 1124 Greene Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Bed Rock

A striking illustration of Scripture truth is given by Dr. Dill, of Fredericksburg, Va., in a New York periodical. He says: In the San Gorgonian pass, that opens the way through the Sierras to Southern California, I spent a few days of a July vacation. On either side of the pass rises a great mountain peak. Here towers fourteen thousand feet San Jacinto, and on that July day it wore a snow-cap. Opposite, rising also to its fourteen thousand feet, is old Gray Back. Each seems to vie with the other in speaking forth the praises of God. Does any one doubt that these two opposing mountains rest upon the same great bed-rock of the mighty Sierra Madre system? Must you tunnel them to believe it? So it is that in the mountain pass that leads to clear views of God's truth there rise opposing peaks. The finite mind may not be able to harmonize them or tunnel to the foundations, but they rest upon the bed-rock of God's truth.

I Want Everybody to Know

I HAVE such a wonderful Saviour
To help me wherever I go,
I have to keep telling his goodness,
For I want everybody to know.

CHORUS.

I want everybody to know
Of Jesus who loveth me so!
My time I will give as long as I live
To help everybody to know.

He helps me o'ercome all temptation
And makes me with gladness o'erflow;
He brings me a blessed salvation
That I want everybody to know.

He cheers me if I am in sorrow;
He presses me close to his heart
And tells of that brighter to-morrow,
Where troubles shall never have part.

He hearkens to humble confessing
And ever his mercy doth show;
He crowneth my life with his blessing,
And I want everybody to know.

COFFEE AND HEART DISEASE

Slowly and Surely Affects the Heart's Action

"My heart seemed to be jumping out of my body one morning after I had used some coffee, clear, without cream or sugar,—for I had been told that coffee would not hurt me if used that way. We were all greatly frightened at the serious condition of my heart until I remembered that it might be from the coffee.

"So when the trouble passed off, I concluded never to use coffee again. It had hurt me greatly, used in the ordinary way with cream and sugar, but I had hoped that it would be less harmful without the cream and sugar, but the result was no better.

"Since that time we have been using Postum Cereal Food Coffee and my heart has never troubled me at all. We are all delighted with the Postum because we know how to make it and know how valuable it is as a health beverage.

"In speaking to a friend lately about Postum Cereal, she said she did not like it. I found the reason was that it had not been made properly. After I told her to take four heaping teaspoons of Postum to the pint of water and let it boil full fifteen minutes after the real boiling started, she was greatly delighted with it and has been using it since and has been very much better in health. Yours truly," Mrs. L. S. McEllimmey, 1218 G St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

SEEKING SOULS*

The Seeker Authorized to go on his Quest with a Message of Love and Compassion

NO part of our Lord's teaching was so widely divergent from the accepted orthodoxy of the time as that in which he described the attitude of God to the world. The people to whom he spoke knew God as the Creator. Their sacred books had described in vivid imagery his making the world and the orbs of heaven. They knew him as the nation's ruler. He had been their King, and their historians and prophets had reiterated the lesson that all their national calamities were his punishments for their desertion of him. With his majesty, his justice, his power, they were familiar. It was an entirely new view that Jesus presented when he represented him as a Father, and not only as a Father, but as one concerned over the welfare of his children and distressed by their wrongdoing. Did it seem a wrong view? He appealed to their own experience, to their own feelings in the common affairs of life and declared that from the joy which comes to the human heart in the recovery of a lost treasure, they might learn the joy that was in heaven over the recovery of a wandering soul.

Primarily, the parables of the Lost Sheep and the Lost Coin were spoken to justify Christ's association with the dregs of Jewish society. The upper classes at first had been inclined to patronize the young Teacher. They were amazed at his lowering himself by mingling with men despised for their debased calling and with women who had lost their virtue. He not only preached to them and welcomed them to his audiences, but he mingled with them socially and accepted their hospitality. He evidently lost caste by such conduct. They murmured at him. In defending himself, Christ shows them how unlike they are to God. In other ways and in other places he teaches the loss that the sinner bears in wandering away from God. Here he shows that God is grieved, too. He suffers loss, and is glad when that loss is repaired, and the angels share his joy, knowing how much happier an ending this is than was feared. The significance of this teaching is obvious. A modern novelist has given expression to it. The daughter of a country deacon elopes, leaving a letter behind her, confessing the wrongdoing she is about to commit. Nothing more is heard from her for some months, and her father with a breaking heart himself proposes the erasure of her name from the church books. How he suffered over his loss, his neighbors could see. One of them, who ascertained the daughter's address in the great city to which she had gone, wrote her, telling her of his grief, and assuring her that if she returned she would be cordially welcomed. The girl had pictured her father as stern, unforgiving and relentless. As soon as she heard that he still loved her and yearned after her, she set out immediately for her home and was received with open arms. It was the fact of her father's love that had survived her wildoing, which brought her back.

A modern instance from real life shows the same truth. After the Franco-Prussian war of 1870 the Communists of Paris gained control of the city, killed the archbishop, burned the royal palace and destroyed many priceless art treasures. When they were suppressed and Thiers established order, the Communists were ruthlessly punished. The survivors grew callen, and though they dare not declare their hostility they hated the government and hated society. It was then that Dr. McAll went among them. The one message he delivered was, "God loves you." The people who supposed that they were hated of all, listened in amazement. That the message went to their hearts and before Dr. McAll died, he had drawn hundreds of the fiercest and most implacable of them into the Christian church. It makes all the difference in the world to the wrongdoer to know that he whom he has outraged is willing to forgive. Even in a quarrel between two friends, a reconciliation is brought nearer, if one of them learns that the other longs to be reconciled. Thus the Christian learns his mission. It is to tell the wanderers that God is not implacable, as they suppose, but is sorry to see them going to ruin and longs to have them return to him. It is a most delightful message to carry to sinners and there is abundant authority for it. It is a message of love, which as we know, is the strongest influence in the world. The picture of the shepherd's joy at finding the lost sheep and the woman's joy at recovering her lost coin are an equipment for soul-winning which should encourage all to enter on the work. The incentive is twofold, inasmuch as it is an inestimable blessing to the soul saved and it brings increased joy to the supernal beings who in some way know of it and celebrate it as another triumph of divine love.

THE SHAH IN THE OCCIDENT

THE protracted visit of Muzafer-ed-Din, Shah of Persia, to Paris, the recent cowardly attempt by an anarchist to assassinate him there, and the plans made by the monarch for an excursion to England, have brought him as much into public discussion as in 1896, when he ascended the peacock throne of Ivan upon the death of his father, Nasr-ed-Din, who, it will be remembered, died by the hand of a fanatic who shot him as he was entering the court of the shrine of Shah Abdul Azim, in Teheran. The coolness of Muzafer, when attacked, won encomiums from the Parisians. He seized his would-be assassin, holding him with both hands until the police took charge; and then continued the pleasure-drive for which he had just left the Palace of the Sovereigns, where he was stopping as the guest of France. "If the assassin has not succeeded in killing me it is because my hour is not yet come," said the Oriental fatalist. Following so closely upon Humbert's death and the threats made against other rulers, he recognized the attempt as a part of the announced anarchistic plan to destroy all the monarchs in the world.

His purpose to visit England was welcomed by the British press. His father was the first Eastern potentate to "set the fashion" for Oriental monarchs to undertake Western tours. Nasr-ed-Din made three journeys to Europe, wrote down his experiences and observations, and published them for the enlightenment of his subjects: and he introduced Western improvements into the commercial and industrial life of his country. There are many things connected with his conduct during his occupation as a guest of a suite of rooms in Buckingham Palace which are not pleasant to recall, and which will hardly be repeated at any time or place by his son. Muzafer's earliest announced plans for his English journey included visits to the Queen at Osborne, and to other places where his father was entertained in 1894. If the Shah's sojourn in the Occident shall be followed by as great an advancement in Persia as resulted from his father's, perhaps Ivan will make some strides toward the possession of Christianity—the keystone of Western progress and civilization.

HELPING INDIA'S ORPHANS

AMERICA'S children are doing their part in saving India's famine orphans. Many are contributing the contents of their banks and pledging themselves to save by little acts of self-denial or earn by deeds of service to generous friends, more pennies, nickels and dimes to send to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the fatherless and motherless boys of the world's most stricken and sorrowful land. In days to come hundreds of Hindus, Christianized through our agency, will bless the little American lads and lassies who, for Christ's sake, came to their help in their hour of utter destitution and bitter trial. A large book could not hold in detail the story of all the noble things youthful readers of this paper are doing for India. The letters received in this office from children are an inspiration to older workers. One communication from Harrisburg, Pa., contains $15, part of which was contributed as follows:

SUSIE, CHARLIE AND BERNARD HALE

We, little girls at the Home for the Friendless, have been saving our pennies for pleasure trips this summer, but feeling sorry for the poor Hindu children, we are willing to sacrifice our pleasure to save them. May the dear Lord raise up many friends for India's children.

Rev. Mr. Monroe recently brought in an offering from Susie, Charlie and Bernard Hale, three little Christian friends in Vermont, and told of other children who were planning to help the orphans. Many pastors and Sunday School teachers write us of how earnestly bands of children are laboring to fill mite-boxes and to make up the necessary sum—$15—to adopt an orphan. Every childish scrawl is appreciated, whether the contribution it contains be large or small.

One little man, James Gordon Mairs, had two boxes of nice candy given him and sold it "in penny's worth at a time,", until he had $1.35 for India's "poor little boys and girls." Little Claude, Stanton, Iowa, sent $1—his penny collection.

Cannot other people whom God has endowed with the gift of song, take a hint from this:

Miss Mabel Keith, Holdrege, Neb., aged sixteen, a graduade of Conn's Conservatory of Music, was moved to give her first concert for the India sufferers and sent the proceeds, $43.75 to feed the starving.

Rheumatic Gout

A prominent Philadelphia physician, lecturer in the University of Pennsylvania, writes: "Refering to Tartarlithine as a remedy for gout, I will say that I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases, with results that are wonderful. The chief feature is the rapidity with which patients improve under its use. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician with gouty manifestations, along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism, bilious headaches, and a gouty eczema, including the balls of the thumbs and between the fingers. I prescribed Tartarlithine, with plenty of water, and the avoidance of nitrogenous food; and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all uric acid manifestations. The habitual and general nervous irritability were all gone, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years."

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00, and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent free.

QUESTIONS OF THE WEEK

1. What is the origin of what is known as the ladies' "Leap-year privilege?"

Myth and history both have something to say on the matter. Myth refers to St. Patrick as originating the privilege. History tells us that in 1288 the following law was passed in Scotland: "It is statut and ordaint that during the rein of hir maist blissit Megeste, for ilk yeare knowne as lepe year, ilk mayden ladye of bothe highe and lowe estait shall hae liberte to bespeke ye man she likes, albeit he refuses to taik hir to be his lawful wyfe, he shall be mulcted in ye sum ane pundis or less, as his estait may be; except and awis gif he can make it appeare that he is betrothit to ane ither woman, he then shall be free." A few years later a similar law was passed in France and received the approval of the king. It is also said that before Columbus sailed on his famous voyage, a similar privilege was granted to the maidens of Genoa and Florence. The English in 1606 allowed the custom to become a part of the "common law," that "as often as every leap-yeare doth return, the ladyes have the sole privilege during the time." Up to within a century ago, it was another unwritten law of leap year that if a man should decline a proposal, he should soften the disappointment by the present of a silk dress.

EDITH C. ROBINSON.

2. What is the best estimate of the earth's weight, and how is it ascertained?

The estimated weight of the earth is 6,256,587,273,000.000 000,000 tons. The Cavendish Experiment is the best known method. It was first made by Henry Cavendish on the suggestion of Michel and has since been repeated by Reich of Freyburg and Francis Baily. In the apparatus used by Mr. Baily two small balls at the extremities of a fine rod are suspended by a wire, and their position carefully observed by the aid of a telescope. Large balls of lead placed on a turning frame, the centre of which is in the promulgation of the suspending wire, are then brought near them in such a way that they can affect them only by the force of their attraction. On the large balls being so placed, the small ones move towards them through a small space, which is carefully measured. The position of the large balls is then reversed. Many observations are made till the exact amount of the deviation of the small balls is ascertained beyond doubt. Then, by calculation, the amount of attraction of the large balls to produce this deviation is easily obtained. Having reached this, the next question is, what would their attraction be if they were as large as the earth? This is easily answered, and hence, as we know the attractive force of the earth, we can compare its mean density with that of lead. Mr. Baily's experiments lead to the result that the earth's mean density is 5.67 times that of water. GRANT L. BICE.

3. Who were the original "Seven Wise Men" of Greece, and why were they so designated?

The "Seven Wise Men of Greece" were the great philosopher Thales, of Miletus; the great law-giver Solon, of Athens; Periander, of Corinth; Chilo, of Sparta; Cleobulus, of Liddus; Pittacus, of Mitylene; and Bias, of Priene. The title of "Seven Wise Men," is said to have been given them under the following circumstances: Some fishermen, having cast their nets into the sea, sold the expected draught of fish to some persons standing by. But when the nets were drawn in, it was discovered that the nets contained instead of fish, a golden tripod. The fishermen refused to give it to the purchasers, saying that they had sold to them only the fish. After much quarreling, both parties decided to refer the decision to the citizens of Miletus, who at once consulted the oracle at Delphi. The oracle ordered the tripod to be given to the wisest man who could be found. It was first offered to Thales, who modestly declined it, saying there were others wiser than he. Thales sent it to Bias, but he likewise declined it, and sent it to another. Thus the golden tripod passed in succession through the hands of all who were ever afterward classed as the "Seven Wise Men of Greece." The seven sought to enlighten mankind by a great number of moral truths, maxims and proverbs. They lived about 625 B. C.

CORDIE LEE HARBERT.

[Excellent answers to this question have also been received from A. E. H., Salem, O.; Mrs. M. E. S., Norwalk, O., and Wm. H. B., Baltimore, Md. Many others answered, omitting to give the origin of the title of "Seven Wise Men."]

4. If a man commits a sin unknowingly, will it be counted against him, whether he afterwards finds out his sin or not?

It is a well established rule in the courts that ignorance of the law excuses no one; though ignorance is sometimes properly pleaded as an extenuating circumstance in mitigation of judgment, since the element of malice is wanting. Violations of natural law, physical or moral, receive retribution with equal certainty whether the violation be deliberate, accidental or involuntary. In God's government the application of these principles is modified by the plan of atonement through Christ. Our acts of repentance must include both conscious and unconscious sin, and each will be alike forgiven. If we have unknowingly wronged our neighbor we should make prompt restitution whenever the fact is brought to our knowledge. JOHN G. OSBORNE.

5. Did the Psalmist in Psalm 84: 3 mean to imply that birds really built nests on the temple altars? If not, what was his meaning?

The passage referred to in this question reads as follows: "Yea, the sparrow hath found a house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young, even thine altars, O Lord of hosts, my King and my God." I think the following rendering, taken from the Teacher's Bible, International Series, makes the Psalmist's meaning very clear and distinct: "As the sparrow findeth a house, and the swallow a nest for herself, so findeth my soul a safe refuge at thine altars."

6. What should be done with a church building which is in a city and is hallowed by sacred associations, when the members of the church have moved to the suburbs and few people attend its services?

First of all, let the building be used for church services of a character somewhat different from the ordinary. The fact that few people attend its services does not always prove that there are no people living near who are in need of religious teaching. Frequently there is a large population near such a church, but of a class to whom the ordinary service is not attractive. Try what a good bright lecture on some practical topic on a week evening would do. If it brings an audience, study the people who come and plan the Sunday service with a special view of attracting such people. Start a sewing school, a cooking school or a shorthand school in connection with the church and any other method of helping the people. They will appreciate the interest taken in their welfare and will be more likely to come to the Sunday service. By all means have a visitor and a nurse, who will go around the neighborhood and try to benefit the people. The places of those who have "moved to the suburbs" may be filled by people who perhaps will not pay so well, but who belong to the class to whom Christ wished his Gospel to be preached. Get as pastor some sympathetic, hard-working man such as the Roman Catholic Church would put in such a neighborhood, and support him while he gathers a congregation of thankful, loving people around him. Get Dr. Edward Judson, of New York, or Dr. A. J. Lyman, of Brooklyn, to tell his experience in a downtown church. That church building may become such a centre of light and helpfulness that its future history may be better than its past. Of course it will cost money at first, but perhaps if the people to whom the building is hallowed see it doing a good work, they will pay and will feel repaid in the preservation of the church.

7. Is it the duty of a pastor to instruct his hearers on the duties of Christian citizenship, or should he devote his sermons exclusively to the Gospel?

Yes, it is the duty of a pastor to instruct his people in the duties of Christian citizenship. The pastor, however, should not dwell on such topics too prominently or continuously, but rather indirectly, showing how the principles of Christianity apply to our whole life in its relations both to God and men. But we need to be on our guard not to pander to the secular spirit of the times. As a general rule, that minister will produce the best results who adheres most faithfully to the main doctrines of the Gospel. Get a man impregnated with Gospel principles and he will not have much difficulty in discovering his duties as a citizen.

8. Are recent events in China and South Africa in any way a fulfilment of prophecy?

There is, so far as I have been able to find, no specific prophecy which has been fulfilled by these wars. Perhaps some other of your readers may have been more successful. There is, of course, the general prophecy of "wars and rumors of wars" (Matt 24:6), which these, like other wars, fulfil. I know of no prediction relating to any land that can be identified with the Transvaal. China is mentioned only once (Isa. 49: 12), and then under its Asiatic name of Sinim. There is, however, a feature of this Chinese trouble very interesting to a student of prophecy. In Rev. 17: 12, 13 there is a prediction that ten kings will give their power and strength to the beast. It has always been urged that no such combination could ever take place, owing to the mutual jealousies of the great powers. But this Chinese trouble shows that union for a definite purpose is possible. We have seen Russia, France, Germany, the United States, Great Britain and Japan uniting their forces; and in the latest development, agreeing to place them under the command of the German general. Never before have six nations acted together for a common purpose. The precedent will not be forgotten, and may help to make the great final confederacy of the last days possible. A. D. P.

9. What will be the fate of the heathen after death?

The fact that this question has been so extensively discussed, and is so frequently asked, is evidence that it is one about which many are concerned. Without attempting to reproduce all the arguments pro and con, I here with present a few of the most prominent theories, with the bases advanced for their support:

First. The heathen are the descendants of nations that were once enlightened, and believers in the true God, but they gradually wandered away from the truth and finally forgot God, and God has been visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the succeeding generations, consequently they will be irretrievably lost.

Second. The heathen will be saved on account of their ignorance; as it would not be consistent with justice and mercy to punish them for not doing that which they have never had an opportunity of doing.

Third. God has planned a way for their escape; that is, that after death they will have the Gospel presented them with the privilege of accepting or rejecting, and will be dealt with according to their choice. The principal reason for this theory is that Christ died for all mankind, and, if the enlightened only are saved, then his death on the cross was a failure, since those who die in heathen darkness compose such a large proportion of the human race (See I. Peter 3: 19).

We may think what we please about this matter, but we will never know for certain until eternity reveals it; and no matter what we believe or say about it, we are accountable for our light and knowledge, and our plain duty is to carry the Gospel news of salvation to every creature if possible. If we have found the Great Treasure, Jesus, the Saviour, we shall want to tell it to others.

CHARLES D. HANGER.

10. What is the best method of conducting a Question-box meeting?

The leader should try to have at the meeting men who have made studies of special subjects, in order that if those subjects are brought up by questions, he may have some one capable of answering authoritatively. When the questions are gathered, the leader should read them over, referring a legal question to a lawyer; a historical question, to his student of history; a scientific question, to his scientist, etc. Questions of opinion he should answer himself, as if it is known beforehand that he will conduct the meeting, it is his opinion that the questioner desires. After the question is answered, a brief time, say two minutes each to three speakers, should be allowed for persons wishing to criticize or amend the answer given. OSCAR F. CLARKE.

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS

These pretty verses from Mr. Charles McKenzie, a Cleveland reader, will be read with interest by all who are touched by the sufferings of the India famine orphans:

Oh, I'm a little bronzeskin boy
Far away in tiger-land,
A little hungry bronzeskin boy,
So weak I cannot stand.

Because my mamma gives no eat,
No matter how I cry,
An' say we all be dead now soon
An' go up in the sky.

I lay all day an' look at sky
So very bright an' blue,
An' wonder if the boys up there
Ise always hungry too.

Reader. 1. Do you think that Dorcas was dead or only in a trance? How could Peter who was human, raise from the dead since that is only in the power of God? 2. How and where did the Saviour obtain the means to meet his daily necessities? Do you suppose that he worked at his trade as carpenter, or was he supported by friends or relations?

1. There is no reason to doubt that she was actually dead, and that the power to work the miracle was given to Peter in fulfilment of the Saviour's promise (see John 14: 12). 2. In his earlier years he worked as a carpenter, and when he began his public ministry, with his company of disciples, all his needs were doubtless supplied by his followers (see Matt. 27: 55).

One of our readers asks why it is that, in the dozens of our bored wells, the water just before a storm becomes "riley" or partly muddy. He says that from twelve to twenty-four hours before a storm, his well becomes muddy and stays so. We have referred his question to the Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C., and through the courtesy of the acting chief, we are enabled to answer as follows:

It is evident that, as we are told nothing about the location of the wells, or the character of the storms, or the persistence with which the phenomenon occurs, we can give only a suggestion as to the possible explanation. Extensive storms occur in the midst of areas of low pressure. When the barometric pressure is diminishing the air imprisoned within, the soil can more easily push its way out into the open. Wells are but holes that open their way into the lower strata and give the air contained therein an easier mode of egress. Every low barometer or storm that passes near the well facilitates the escape of gas and even of water, so that the well should stand higher when low pressures prevail. The bubbling up of the air through the water would undoubtedly make it "riley," and, especially so, if there is a deposit of fine mud and decaying vegetable matter at the bottom of the well. The trouble can be partly remedied in "dug" wells, by placing one or two broad flat stones in a slightly inclined position at the bottom of the well, so that rising bubbles and muddy water are turned off to one side. But for bored wells whose sides are cased with iron piping, we know of no remedy.

M. M., Bonita, Texas. I have often heard the expression "If you are in Rome do as Rome does." Is there any Scripture for such an idea?

The phrase is attributed to St. Ambrose, who, in his advice to Monica and her son, Augustine, said: "When I am at Milan, I do as they do in Milan; but when I am at Rome, I do as Rome does." The nearest approach to an equivalent in Scripture is found in Paul's expression. (See I. Cor. 9: 22).

C.M.I., Bridgeport, Conn. 1. Of what nationality was the king Abgarus of Edessa, mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of May 23? 2. In what book can I find the poem of which the title is "Edinburgh after Flodden," and the author Prof. Aytoun? 3. In this Christian country why is not the Bible—the book of religion of all Christians—taught in the public schools?

1. Edessa was in Mesopotamia, and is now a part of the Turkish empire. 2. You will find it in several collections of Scottish ballads. 3. Our public school system is unsectarian, and as children of many different religions attend, it was decided to keep them free from doctrinal teaching, so that Jew and Christian, Protestant and Romanist, might be on an educational equality.

Mrs. J. T. B., South Milwaukee, Wis. While I was collecting money for the India Relief Fund, a slip was handed to me. It was used as an argument for not sending money abroad. It does not seem reasonable to me that even one single missionary family could have so much invested in foot wear. Will you please give me your opinion?

The slip referred to is from a newspaper which prints the fact that Rev. Wm. Wheeler, one of the A. B. C. F. M. missionaries in Armenia, in making claim for damages to the mission property by the Turks and Kurds, enumerates among his effects $35 worth of shoes and the other missionaries a proportionately large amount of shoes and garments of various kinds. Enemies of missionary work were quick to grasp at what seemed an unpardonable extravagance; but a little further investigation would have shown the fact (since fully explained), that these articles were supplies for destitute and orphaned Armenians in the missionaries' charge and not the personal wardrobe of the missionaries themselves. This the newspapers failed to explain in the first instance, and thus a half-truth was made to serve all the purposes of a lie.

A tent is located n section of the city where t re is a large population u connected with evangelical c rches. Already many sat- i ctory points have been se- l ed in which work through t tent has been accomplish- e For the past week, within t tents and on Chestnut S eet Pier, the meetings have b n attended. by actual c nt, by 15,880. This does not take n consideration almost as large a num- l of those who listened outside or sat u n their doorsteps and heard the Gos- p sung and preached. The city author- i s granted the committee the use of a l ge recreation pier, which extends from C stnut street out upon the Delaware R er. The meetings on the pier are a ended every night by from three hun- d d to five hundred. When an actual t was taken in an audience of five hun- d d, it was discovered that not more t n six of the entire number were pro- f sed Christians. Week by week this l ge mass of unevangelized humanity b omes more and more interested. A g dly number last week came forward, e ressing earnest desire to lead a Chris- t n life, one young woman declaring that s had never before understood that C ist was a personal Saviour.

n one section, where there is a large i dent population of Jews, Catholics a l those of no religious preference, when t workers began it seemed for a time t t it would be almost impossible to con- d t the work because of the disturbing e nents. After a three week's campaign, s e seventy-five professed faith in Jesus C ist as their Saviour and on the c sing night, more than forty gathered r nd the platform expressing their appre- c tion of the services and their deter- m nation henceforth, by the grace of G d, to lead Christian lives. Many wept li little children.

A result which should not be overlooked is that while the pastors are away from the city, many Christian people take their absence as a license for general inactivity in Christian services, and this effort has provided work of a spiritual character for young and old in all sections of Philadelphia. By this means the pastors find, upon their return in the fall, that the Christian workers are ready and enthusiastic for the winter's campaign. The work is organized along the lines of the last command of our Saviour: "Go ye into all the world." The plan upon which the workers operate is one of going out to where the people live and pressing to their lips, in love, tenderness and earnestness, the cup of salvation. The old-time hymns are used in connection with the work and the old-style Gospel earnestly preached, proving that they have not lost their attractiveness in winning the unsaved.

The executive committee in charge of the tent campaign is backed by a committee of twenty laymen and ministers. It has been the policy of the committee from the first to take no collections in the services and to allow no books or special literature of evangelists or speakers to be sold. Funds for the prosecution of the work are contributed by Christian friends, the committee looking to those interested in the extension of the Kingdom to supply the means that are needed. Every night in the week, except Saturday, meetings are conducted under the leadership of the best available speakers. Among those who have already taken part are Rev. J. F. Carson, D.D.; Rev. Horatio H. Wells, of Cleveland, O.; Rev. Geo. B. Stewart, D.D., President of Auburn Theological Seminary; Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D., of Brooklyn; Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, of Logansport, Ind.; Rev. Thomas Needham, Rev. W. A. Williams, D.D., President Franklin College; Rev. J. W. Parker, Greensburg, Ind., together with a large number of local pastors. Eleven Princeton students have been engaged by the committee, two working in connection with each tent, their duty being to look after the details, under direction of the local committee, to help in after-meetings, follow up inquirers by personal visits, and to see that those who definitely accept Christ are introduced to the members or pastor of the church of their choice. The students have thus far visited in over three thousand homes. Through their efforts especially, assisted by volunteer workers, many thousands of pages of literature have been distributed, which literature has been furnished free of cost by the Presbyterian Board of Publications. Children's meetings are also conducted in the afternoons in the various tents. A great deal of interest has in this way been aroused.

It is difficult to tabulate the results, although reports are sent daily from the various sections and local districts to the central office. Hundreds have signed "inquirer's cards" which are used in connection with the services, upon which it is simply stated, "It is my purpose to lead a Christian life." In addition to this, many more have, by the uplifted hand, and in other ways, expressed interest and asked for prayers. Some who have not signed cards have confessed Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. In a thousand different ways the spiritual results of the season's work have been made manifest in changed lives.

One of our photographs shows one of the tent meetings in progress. Portraits are also given of Mr. John H. Converse, the chairman and a most active and efficient member of the executive committee, and Mr. W. H. Scott, the treasurer of the movement. All inquiries should be addressed to Rev. J. B. Ely, general secretary, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

Christian Work in the Canaries

Dr. and Mrs. Macknight, mission workers at Tafira, Las Palmas, in the Canary Islands, write encouragingly of the progress of their labors in that primitive part of the world. The work is a very attractive one. Mrs. Macknight's letter says:

We have rejoiced in the conversion of our cook, and of Antonio, and of the Senora, the schoolmistress of this village. On Sunday we had ten Spaniards at the Mission, and service ran over five hours with singing Sankey's translated hymns and reading. The Senora Boveda brought her three children, who sang "How Sweet the Name of Jesus Sounds" most beautifully. The children are all gifted in music, and their mother was a professional musician in Madrid. Their father died in the war in Cuba. We would like to be able to give these children a Christian education. There are many orphans on this island, including some whose fathers fell in the Spanish-American War. We have already received two at our house, and we feel led to gather in such children, and to care for them as our own means and our friends' generosity may allow. Instead of growing up in misery and in ignorance and thus becoming vagabonds, they should be under Christian care. We ask all to pray for the Boveda family, who are now receiving their first impressions of Gospel truth and liberty, and for those we are earnestly laboring to save. Any of your readers who may feel interested in this work can correspond with us here at Tafira and we will gladly reply.

A Gospel Steamboat for Africa

A steamboat has just been completed by the Trigg Shipbuilding Co., Richmond, Va., for missionary work on the rivers of West Africa. It is intended for a Society which is represented by Rev. S. H. Chester, of Nashville, Tenn., and which is especially interested in the cause of foreign missions. Some time ago, Mr. Chester and his associates raised a fund to defray the expense of constructing the boat. It was necessary that she should be of very light draught to be serviceable in the shallow streams, and that her general equipment should be suitable for a tropical climate. The photograph on this page gives an idea of the character of the little vessel, which is named the Lapsley. She will carry five or six passengers, besides engineer, fireman and pilot. She is a stern-wheeler, a paddle being fitted at the rear, so that it can be used in water less than two feet in depth. As coal is scarce in the Dark Continent, oil will be the fuel used. The deck is enclosed, in order to shut out the burning rays of the African sun. The cabin is in the centre of the vessel, the engine in the stern. The little steamer will have a speed of from eight to ten miles an hour. She will go from village to village along the banks of the various navigable rivers, and her company will do general evangelical work without regard to denomination.

Women in State Service

New York State is putting forth special efforts to secure a high class of women officers for its houses of refuge and reformatories for women and children. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in receipt of a letter from Hon. Herbert E. Mills, President of the State House of Refuge for Women, Hudson, N. Y., in which he asks us to call attention to positions in the State employ now open to women through the civil service system; and especially to those of the nature we have indicated, in which the duties are general supervision and control of housekeeping, and the requirements as to high character, good judgment and moral purpose are most exacting. Discipline in direct communication with the inmates affords an opportunity for those who desire to do important and difficult reformatory work. The salaries are $300 per year and maintenance; after six months of service there is an opportunity for promotion with increase of pay. Examinations are to be held Sept. 1. Apply for further information to the State Civil Service Commission, Albany, N. Y.

Answered Prayers

E. H. M., Monticello, Fla., writes: "I would like to acknowledge, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a direct answer to prayer, and I praise God for his goodness."

H., New York City, writes: "My son who was very low and whom we believed to have contracted an ailment that could not terminate other than fatally, has been restored to health in answer to prayer. I desire to acknowledge the goodness of God."

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

SCIONS OF ROYALTY

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Judges 8: 18: . . . . Each one resembled the children of a king.

ZEBAH and Zalmunna had been off to battle and when they came back they were asked what kind of people they had seen. They answered, that the people had a royal appearance; "each one resembled the children of a king." That description of people is not extinct. There are still many who have this appearance. Indeed, they are the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. Though now in exile, they shall yet come to their thrones. There are family names that stand for wealth, or patriotism, or intelligence. The name of Washington among us will always represent patriotism. The family of the Medici stood as the representative of letters. The family of the Rothschilds is significant of wealth, the loss of forty millions of dollars in 1848 putting them to no inconvenience; and within a few years they have loaned Russia twelve millions of dollars. Naples, twenty-five millions, Austria forty millions, and England two hundred millions; and the stroke of their pen on the counting-room desk shakes everything from the Irish Sea to the Danube. They open their hand, and there is war; they shut it and there is peace. The Romanoffs of Russia, the Hohenzollerns of Germany, the Bourbons of France, the Stuarts and Guelphs of Great Britain are houses whose names are intertwined with the history of their respective nations symbolic of imperial authority.

But I preach of a family more potential, more rich, and more extensive—the Royal House of Jesus, of whom the whole family in heaven and on earth is named. We are blood relations by the relationship of the Cross; all of us are the children of the King.

First, I speak of our family name. When we see a descendant of some one greatly celebrated in the last century, we look at him with profound interest. To have had conquerors, kings or princes in the ancestral line gives lustre to the family name. In our line was a King and a Conqueror. The Star in the East with baton of light woke up the eternal orchestra that made music at his birth. From thence he started forth to conquer all nations, not by trampling them down, but by lifting them up. St. John saw him on a white horse. When he returns, he will not bring the nations chained to his wheel or in iron cages; but I hear the stroke of the hoofs of the snow-white cavalcade that brings them to the gates in triumph.

Our family name takes lustre from the star that heralded him, and the spear that pierced him, and the crown that was given him. It gathers fragrance from the frankincense brought to his cradle, and the lilies that flung their sweetness into his sermons, and the box of alabaster that broke at his feet. The Comforter at Bethany. The Resurrector at Nain. The supernatural Oculist at Bethsaida. The Saviour of one world, and the Chief Joy of another. The storm his frown. The sunlight his smile. The spring morning his breath. The earthquake the stamp of his foot. The thunder the whisper of his voice. The ocean a drop on the tip of his finger. Heaven a sparkle on the bosom of his love. Eternity the twinkling of his eye. The universe the flying-dust of his chariot-wheels. Able to heal a heart-break, or hush a tempest, or drown a world, or flood immensity with his glory. What other family name could ever boast of such an illustrious personage?

Henceforth, swing out the coat of arms! Great families wear their coat of arms on the dress, or on the door of the coach, or on the helmet when they go out to battle, or on flags and ensigns. The heraldic sign is sometimes a lion, or a dragon, or an eagle. Our coat of arms worn right over the heart, hereafter shall be a Cross, a Lamb standing under it, and a Dove flying over it. Grandest of all escutcheons! Most significant of all family escutcheons! In every battle I must have it blazing on my flag—the Dove, the Cross, the Lamb; and when I fall, wrap me in that good old Christian flag, so that the family coat of arms shall be right over my breast, that all the world may see that I looked to the Dove of the Spirit, and clung to the Cross, and depended upon the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

Ashamed of Jesus!—that dear Friend,
On whom my hopes of heaven depend:
No! when I blush be this my shame—
That I no more revere his name.

Next, I speak of the family sorrows. If trouble come to one member of the family, all feel it. It is the custom, after the body is lowered into the grave, for all the relatives to come to the verge of the grave and look down into it. First those nearest the departed come, then those next of kin, until they have all looked into the grave. So, when trouble and grief go down through the heart of one member of the family, they go down through them all. The sadness of one is the sadness of all. A company of persons join hands around an electric battery; the two persons at the ends of the line touch the battery and all the circle feels the shock. Thus, by reason of the filial, maternal and paternal relations of life, we stand so close together that when trouble sets its battery, all feel the thrill of distress. In the great Christian family, the sorrow of one ought to be the sorrow of all. Is one persecuted? All are persecuted. Does one suffer loss? We all suffer loss. Is one bereaved? We are all bereaved.

Their streaming eyes together flow
For human guilt and mortal woe.

If you rejoice at another's misfortune, you are not one of the sheep, but one of the goats; and the vulture of sin hath alighted on your soul, and not the Dove of the Spirit.

Next, I notice the family property. After a man of large estate dies, the relatives assemble to hear the will read. So much of the property is willed to his sons, and so much to his daughters, and so much to benevolent societies. Our Lord Jesus hath died, and we are assembled to-day to hear the will read. He says: "My peace I give unto you." Through his apostle he says: "All things are yours." What! everything? Yes, everything! This world and the next. In distinguished families there are old pictures hanging on the wall. They are called the "heirlooms" of the estate. They are very old, and have come down from generation to generation. So I look upon all the beauties of the natural world as the heirlooms of our royal family. The morning breaks from the east. The mists travel up, hill above hill, mountain above mountain, until sky-lost. The forests are full of chirp, and buzz, and song. Tree's leaf and bird's wing flutter with gladness. Honey-makers in the log, and beak against the bark, and squirrels chattering on the rail, and the call of the hawk out of a clear sky, make you feel glad. The sun, which kindles conflagrations among the castles of cloud, and sets minaret and dome aflame, stoops to paint the lily white, and the buttercup yellow, and the forget-me-not blue. What can resist the sun? Light for the voyager over the deep! Light for the shepherd guarding the flocks afield! Light for the poor who have no lamps to burn! Light for the downcast and the lowly! Light for aching eyes, and burning brain and wasted captive! Light for the smooth brow of childhood and for the dim vision of the octogenarian! Light for queen's coronet and for sewing-girl's needle! Let there be light! Whose morning is this? My morning. Your morning. Our Father gave us the picture and hung it on the sky in loops of fire. It is the heirloom of our family. And so the night. It is the full moon. The mists from shore to shore gleam like shattered mirrors; and the ocean, under her glance, comes up with great tides, panting upon the beach, mingling, as it were, foam and fire. The poor man blesses God for throwing such a cheap light through the broken window-pane into his cabin; and to the sick it seems a light from the other shore which bounds this great deep of human pain and woe. If the sun seem like a song full and poured from brazen instruments that fill heaven and earth with great harmonies, the moon is plaintive and mild, standing beneath the throne of God, sending up her soft, sweet voice of praise, while the stars listen, and the sea. No mother ever more sweetly guarded the sick-cradle than all night long this pale watcher of the sky bends over the weary, heart-sick, slumbering earth. Whose is this black-framed, black-tasseled picture of the night? It is the heirlooom of our family. Ours the grandeur of the spring, the crystals of the snow, the coral of the beach, the odors of the garden, the harmonies of the air.

You cannot see a large estate in one morning. You must take several walks around it. The family property of this royal house of Jesus is so great that we must take several walks to get any idea of its extent. Let the first walk be around this earth. All these valleys, the harvests that wave in them, and the cattle that pasture them—all these mountains, and the precious things hidden beneath them, and the crown of glacier they cast at the feet of the Alpine hurricane—all these lakes, these islands, these continents, are ours. In the second walk go among the street-lamps of heaven, and see stretching off on every side a wilderness of worlds. For us they shine. For us they sang at a Saviour's nativity. For us they will wheel into line, and with their flaming torches add to the splendor of our triumph on the day for which all other days were made. In the third walk, go around the Eternal City. As we come near it, hark to the rush of its chariots, and the wedding-peal of its great towers. The bell of heaven has struck twelve. It is high noon. We look off upon the chaplets which never fade, the eyes that never weep, the temples that never close, the loved ones that never part, the procession that never halts, the trees that never wither, the walls that never can be captured, the sun that never sets, until we can no longer gaze, and we hide our eyes and exclaim: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him!" As these tides of glory rise, we have to retreat and hold fast lest we be swept off and drowned in the emotions of gladness, and thanksgiving, and triumph.

What think you of the family property? It is considered an honor to marry into a family where there is great wealth. The Lord, the bridegroom of earth and heaven, offers you his heart and his hand, saying in the words of the Canticles: "Rise up my love, my fair one, and come away;" and once having put on thy hand the signet-ring of his love, you will be endowed with all the wealth of earth, and all the honors of heaven.

Almost every family looks back to a homestead—some country-place where you grew up. You sat on the door-sill. You heard the foot-steps of the rain on the garret-roof. You swung on the gate. You ransacked the barn. You waded into the brook. You threshed the orchard for apples, and the neighboring woods for nuts; and everything around the old homestead is of interest to you. I tell you of the old homestead of eternity. "In my Father's house are many mansions." When we talk of mansions, we think of Chatsworth, and its park, nine miles in circumference, and its conservatory, that astonishes the world; its galleries of art, that contain the triumphs of Chantrey, Canova, and Thorwaldsen; of the kings and the queens who have walked its stately halls, or, flying over the heather, have hunted the grouse. But all the dwelling places of dukes, and princes, and queens, are as nothing to the family mansion that is already awaiting our arrival. The hand of the Lord Jesus lifted the pillars, and swung the doors, and planted the parks. Angels walk there, and the good of all ages. The poorest man in that house is a millionaire, and the lowliest a king, and the tamest word he speaks is an anthem, and the shortest life an eternity.

It took a Paxton to build for Chatsworth a covering for the wonderful flower, Victora Regia, five feet in diameter. But our Lily of the Valley shall need no shelter from the blast, and in the open gardens of God shall put forth its full bloom, and all heaven shall come to look at it, and its aroma shall be as though the cherubim had swung before the throne a thousand censers. I have not seen it yet. I am in a foreign land. But my Father is waiting for me to come home. I have brothers and sisters there. In the Bible I have letters from there, telling me what a fine place it is. It matters not much to me whether I am rich or poor, or whether the world hates me or loves me, or whether I go by land or by sea, if only I may lift my eyes at last on the family mansion. It is not a frail house, built in a month, soon to crumble, but an old mansion which is as firm as the day it was built. Its walls are covered with the ivy of many ages, and the urns at the gate-way are a-bloom with the century-plants of eternity. The Queen of Sheba hath walked its halls, and Esther, and the widow who gave two mites, and the poor men from the hospital—these last two perhaps outshining all the kings and queens of eternity.

A family mansion means reunion. Some of your families are very much scattered. The children married, and went off to St. Louis, or Chicago, or Charleston; but perhaps once a year you come together at the old place. How you wake up the old piano that has been silent for years. (Father and mother do not play on it. How you bring out the old relics, and rummage the garret, and open old scrap books, and shout, and laugh, and cry, and talk over old times, and, though you may be forty-five years of age, act as though you were sixteen! Yet soon it is good-by at the car-window, and good-by at the steamboat wharf. But how will we act at the reunion in the old family mansion of heaven? It is a good while since you parted at the door of the grave. There will be Grace, and Mary, and all the darlings of your household—not pale and sick and gasping for breath, as when you saw them last, but their eye bright with the lustre of heaven, and their cheek roseate with the flush of celestial summer.

What clasping of hands! What embracings! What coming together of lip to lip! What tears of joy! You say: "I thought there were no tears in heaven. There must be, for the Bible says that "God shall wipe them away;" and if there were no tears there, how could he wipe them away? They cannot be tears of grief or tears of disappointment. They must be tears of gladness. Christ will come and say: "What! child of heaven is it too much for thee? Dost thou break down under the gladness of this reunion? Then I will help thee." And, with his one arm around us and the other arm around our loved ones, he shall hold us up in the eternal jubilee.

While I speak, some of you with broken hearts can hardly hold your peace. You feel as if you would speak out and say: "Oh blessed day! speed on! Toward thee I press with blistered feet over the desert way. My eyes fail for the weeping. I faint from listening for feet that will not come, and the sound of voices that will not speak. Speed on, O day of reunion! And then, Lord Jesus, be not angry with me if after I have kissed thy blessed feet, I turn around to gather up the long-lost treasures of my heart. Oh! be not angry with me. On look at thee were heaven. But all these reunions are heaven encircling heaven, heaven overtopping heaven, heaven commingling with heaven!"

I was at Mount Vernon, and went into the dining-room in which our first president entertained the prominent men of this and other lands. It was a very interesting spot. But oh! the banqueting hall of the family mansion of which I speak! Spread the table, spread it wide, for a great multitude are to sit at it. From the Tree by the River gather the twelve manner of fruits for that table. Take the clusters from the heavenly vineyards, and press them into the golden tankards for that table. Take all the shot-torn flags of earthly conquest, and entwine them among the arches. Let David come with his harp, and Gabriel with his trumpet, and Miriam with the timbrel, for the prodigals are at home, and the captives are free, and the Father hath invited the mighty of heaven and the redeemed of earth to come and dine!

THE CZAR GREETS DR. TALMAGE

WELCOMES HIM AT HIS SUMMER PALACE AND CONVERSES ON INTERNATIONAL TOPICS — AN ESTIMATE OF RUSSIA'S RULER

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

EXCEPTING my interview with all the imperial family eight years ago, when I came here with Dr. Klopsch of New York on a mission of bread in time of famine, this visit has been the most interesting of my life.

y family have been as ·ally received as myself. ·fore leaving London, I .s told that the Russian nperor wished to see me ain, but I did not know til a few hours before esentation that my wife d daughters would be ited to appear at court. his reception is a revival the friendship formed 1892, which friendship s been strengthened by tens of regard and kind- communications again d again.

found the Emperor ong and well, looking t a day older than when et him before. He said· I was twenty-four when u were here the other ne; I am now thirty-two."

The cares of Empire ve not put one wrinkle his face, although he s passed since I saw n from being Crown nce to the throne. He ive feet ten inches in sture, is a blonde, of fair nplexion, and has blue e·s. He is all animation, fectly natural and vhout any assumption manner. Kindness and od cheer are dominant his make-up. He is personally at peace h all the world, notwithstanding that t Chinese have declared war against Ussia, and this country is always ready t defend itself.

The Emperor is the impersonation of t· principles adopted at his suggestion a The Hague. He by no means consid- e his movement at that time a failure, I thinks, as most of us do, that the od results of that convention will yet felt. He said to me:

How many important things have hap- ed since we met! My father, whom u saw on the throne, is gone. My moth- e has passed through three great sorrows s·e you were here: the loss of my father, t loss of my brother, and during the l· year the loss of her mother, the Queen o Denmark. But she endures all, and is wi and wished to see you, but in her o n palace. Since we last met, the Span- i· American war has occurred!"

He laughed heartily at the fact that in o battle the only loss of life was that of mule.

When I remarked that our war with Spain had raised a new crop of heroes, he ·plied: "Yes!" And then he easily c ed over the names of some of those, w), on sea and land, distinguished them- s·es in that conflict.

Speaking of the ship-load of bread- s fs, sent on the steamship Leo by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the alleviation of t famine in Russia, in 1892, he said:

How kind that was in you Americans t·end that help at a time when many of m poor countrymen so sorely needed it. I was a great mercy and we can never f·get it."

When I referred to the cordiality be- tween our nations, and the fact that I had talked with his father about the interest that Russia had taken in American affairs during our Civil War, he said:

"Oh, yes; my father told me all about our Russian fleets in the harbors of New York and San Francisco, to keep off your foreign enemies."

THE RUSSIAN ROYAL FAMILY

The Emperor expressed much interest in our coming Presidential election, but for which candidate he indicated a preference, I do not say. It would not be courteous to answer all the questions that have showered upon me from America and Europe concerning this interview. He remembered the royal present sent by himself and the one by his father through Count Cantacuzene, the Russian Minister at Washington, who telegraphed me to Brooklyn that he had a presentation to make me from his Emperor, but it must be on Russian soil, and so I was to appear, and did appear on a Russian warship in Philadelphia harbor to receive the gift.

Everything promises for the present Emperor a long and happy reign, for he is admired of all classes, and is of a temperament that will not take on the worries of responsible place. After we had expressed each for the other all good wishes I retired, feeling that I had been in the presence of a splendid man, and one who, by nature and education was well-fitted to reign over a vast Empire.

At the close of this interview, we were conducted by officers of the court into the room of the Empress. She talked with the ladies of my family as she would with sisters. She is very beautiful; her cheeks are aglow with health, and she has suavity in every posture and word. She is taller than the Emperor. She expresses her opinion without reserve. Evidently this royal marriage was a love match, and not a marital alliance for political and international ends. The Empress has three daughters, but no son. We heard their frolic and laughter in other rooms. The land that had an Empress Catherine the first, and an Empress Catherine the second, can never have another Empress, for the law now demands that a man and not a woman must govern Russia. Hence, with great interest this nation watches the imperial cradle. If there be no son in this family, then Michael, the brother of the present Emperor will inherit the throne.

When the present Empress was being instructed by a priest in regard to the religion of the Greek Church, which she was expected to adopt, she got tired of his instructions one day, and told the priest that she knew as much about the religion of the Greek Church as he did. Under this affront, the priest retired, declaring that she would have seven daughters, but never a son. The great masses of the people have heard of this prophecy; and, accustomed to believe what the priests say, they are depressed by it. May this prophecy prove a new illustration of the truth, long ago established, that ministers of religion sometimes make mistakes as well as other people!

But there was another pleasure to come. Before we left the dining-hall in the palace of Peterhof, we received an invitation from the Dowager Empress to visit her in her palace. A more delighted group than my family were you cannot imagine, for I had so often related to them how extraordinary a woman for graciousness and charm the former Empress of Russia was. We had to wait but a short time when the Dowager Empress entered the room. Although she had gone through so many bereavements, she looked exactly as when I saw her eight years ago. She made loving inquiry concerning her brother, the Crown Prince of Denmark, who had sent her a message by us. She was full of reminiscence. She said:

"Do you remember the hand-full of flowers I plucked from this arch, and sent them to your family? You stood there; and I, with my smaller children stood here. How well I remember that day, but oh, what changes!"

Then her eyes filled with tears and her voice trembled. Though she is the daughter of a king, and was the wife of an emperor, and is the sister of the King of Greece and is the mother of an emperor, her manners are as unaffected as those of any lady we ever saw. She laughed and joked with the ladies and asked familiar questions and interested us all as we have never been interested. She invited us to come, the day after, to her palace, and see the Queen of Greece, who is now visiting Russia, and who had received me at Athens years ago, but our plans would not allow it.

The imperial carriage that had met us at the train, returned us, and the representative of our American Embassy accompanied us to St. Petersburg, and we felt that we all had passed a day of absorbing interest, which we will probably never again experience; and we could not help praying that the royal personages whom we had seen and who had greeted us with such marked cordiality, might, on leaving thrones on earth, take thrones in heaven.

TWO METHODIST LEADERS

...The Newly Elected Presidents of the English Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Conferences

OUR Methodist friends will be glad to see the two portraits on this page. They are the chiefs, respectively, of the two great members of the Methodist family of Great Britain. Dr. Thomas Allen is the new President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference and Rev. Joseph Odell has just been elected President of the Primitive Methodist Conference.

Dr. Allen is sixty-three years old. He is the son of a small farmer, and as he said in his inaugural address, his earliest and ineffaceable impressions are of agricultural life. To this day the sight of a man plowing a crooked furrow stirs him to agricultural contempt. He joined the Wesleyan Church when he was only thirteen years of age and became a local preacher at eighteen. It was in his mother's farm kitchen, where the Methodists of the countryside held their services, that the lad preached his first sermon. He preached frequently in the neighboring villages and with such power that he was urged to become a candidate for the regular ministry. But he was poor; his father died when he was only three years old and nearly all his time had been devoted to helping his mother carry on the farm. However, the financial difficulty was surmounted and at the age of twenty young Allen was admitted to Didsbury College to study for the ministry. He received his first circuit appointment in 1859. From that time his stations have become increasingly important. The Conference sent him to the large cities and to fill the most difficult positions and he has performed the duty in every instance with credit to himself and benefit to his church. Three years ago he was called from circuit life to become Governor of the great Methodist College in Birmingham. He has now attained, by his election to the Presidency of the Conference, the highest honor in the gift of his church.

Rev. Joseph Odell, the new President of the Primitive Methodist Conference, is well-known in this country, having served in New York for four years as the Connectional Representative of his church. He is fifty-three years of age and has been thirty-five years in the ministry. He, too, comes from Birmingham, the great manufacturing metropolis of England. In his youth there was little promise of the eminence he has attained. His father was an athlete, famous in his neighborhood for his feats of strength and his wickedness. He had a hatred of religion and especially of Methodists; but late in life he was converted under the preaching of a Methodist revivalist. His son has naturally had great faith in revivals and has himself been a leader in that field. Some very remarkable conversions have occurred under his preaching. The conservative element in the church has at times been shocked by Mr. Odell's methods. It was at one time rumored that he would leave the Primitive Methodist Church to enter the Salvation Army; but he has remained and has now been elected to the presidential chair. In his inaugural address he humorously congratulated his brethren on their discovery that he was not so dangerous a man as they had imagined.

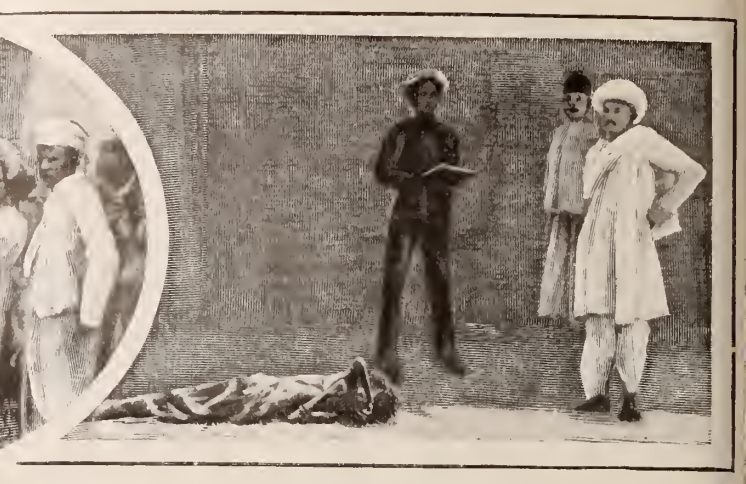
REMOVING A DEAD FAMINE VICTIM AT BARODA

REGISTERING PLAGUE REFUGEES

"WE COVERED HER WITH RAGS FOR DECENCY'S SAKE"



MY TOUR THROUGH FAMINE-STRICKEN INDIA

.. BY LOUIS KLOPSCH ..

IV.

"YOU surely will go to Agra and see the Taj Mahal before you sail?" said my companion, when I informed him that we were that day to begin the last trip before our return home. "Everybody that comes to India visits at least that," added he, by way of encouragement, when I shook my head negatively. We had come to see the famine fields and our time was getting short and every moment of it was mortgaged in advance up to the hour of our departure. Relief operations were of immediate and urgent importance, while sightseeing could be deferred. So we started off that night for Baroda, a city of 110,000 inhabitants, the capital of a native state of that name, arriving at 7. a. m.

The Gaekwar was off on a visit to England, there to be presented to the Prince of Wales and the Queen, hence there was no invitation awaiting us to visit the new and imposing princely palace, but nevertheless, on our way from the station, we passed through it and admired its magnificent architecture and sumptuous, modern furnishings. Strange to relate, there was not a soul to inquire into the why and wherefore of our presence. All was as quiet as the interior of a magnificent mausoleum. The garden surrounding the palace was in a fair state of cultivation, but no bird carrolled its morning lay, and neither the buzz of the bee, nor the chirp of the cricket relieved the mournful monotony of the oppressive silence.

We spent a few moments inspecting the never-failing well, dug at an expense of nine lakhs of rupees, or about $300,000. We then wended our way through the narrow, dirty streets of the capital to the place where once the poor-house was located; but on our arrival there we were informed that, owing to the abnormal increase in the number of its inmates, it had been removed to more capacious quarters a mile off. Thither we directed our steps, and in due time we reached the antithesis of the Gaekwar's Palace. As rich as were his quarters, so destitute was the poor-house. In my note-book I wrote a line that reads: "This is the worst I have yet seen;" and, as I recall it now, I marvel that I ever had the courage to pass into and through the filthy wards, and more filthy yard that constituted this shocking blot on civilization.

I had become accustomed to sights nauseating and revolting, but the Baroda poor-house stands out as the most terrible conglomeration of abject misery that ever met my gaze. The sun's rays penetrated my pith hat and dazed brain and eyes, while an effluvia of concentrated decomposition rendered breathing both difficult and dangerous. Almost stifled and stupefied we wended our way through the dead and the dying, with smallpox, dysentery, fever and cholera to the right and to the left, leaving terror behind us only to find horror awaiting us.

I left Baroda for the last of these letters because I was painfully conscious of the paucity of my vocabulary to do justice to the subject, and after I have written the worst, I shall feel that even then I have only faintly indicated the real condition of affairs.

A BATCH OF AIMLESS WANDERERS

At the entrance to the poor-house stood a woman, blind. I had often seen women who had lost their sight as the result of the horrible famine, but I had never seen one who looked as did this woman. Reduced to a living skeleton, the balls of her eyes were actually decaying in the sockets of her ghastly skull, and flies innumerable were acting the part of scavengers undisturbed.

She stood bareheaded in a sun which would have been fatal to me in less time than it takes to write this incident. Her claw-like hands inactively hung down her sides, until she heard our footsteps. Then they were raised appealingly in the direction of the sound, while she mumbled almost inaudibly her plaintive petition. Not realizing at first that she was blind, I walked up close to her, when another more frantic effort on her part brought her two hands into direct contact with my face.

I shuddered as I felt the cold, clammy touch, but being blind she could not see it. I quickly got beyond her reach, and then, as I supposed, unobserved, placed a rupee in her hand. In another instant a dozen other miserable remnants of humanity pressed forward, pleading vociferously for help. Just then the attendant appeared and promptly ordered them back. What might have happened but for his timely interference I dread to contemplate, as Mr. Frease and Mr. Hudson, who has since died of the cholera, with my other companions had advanced more quickly and were beyond the reach of my voice.

"TEN YEARS OLD AND YET WEIGHED ONLY THIRTY POUNDS"

I entered the first of many wards separated from one another by a bamboo partition. It was full of patients suffering from every manner of ailment. Cholera, dysentery and guinea-worm predominated. On some cots the unfortunates were doubled up. The temperature was torrid. The air was laden with an odor superlatively offensive. It was thick with effluvia of the vilest stamp. The cots were defiled, reeking with filth. Pain, misery, helplessness were on every hand. The agonizing groans of men and women writhing in cholera's fatal and unyielding grip were almost beyond endurance.

No attempt was made at treatment. I called for the physician. There was none. A hospital assistant with not as much knowledge of medicine as an apprentice in a pharmacy was in charge. "How many of these people will be saved?" I asked. "They come here to die," was the stoic response. It was the abomination of desolation. I would gladly have given at that moment all that I possessed had it been in my power to afford relief even for one single hour to those whose piteous gaze between the spasms mutely appealed to the white man for the help that they vaguely longed for yet did not expect, and which he unfortunately was unable to render. Never never shall I forget that sad experience. But what we saw in the first ward was only a specimen of all the others. We traveled from ward to ward only to repeat the same experience. Our heartstrings were wrung until the ever-present consciousness of our own utter helplessness became so oppressive that a continuation of the tour threatened to unnerve us.

We stepped out into the square skirted by the bamboo enclosure and into the brazen sun. There, before us on the ground without shade or protection of any kind, stark naked lay a number of women in the last throes of the cholera. Two of them were moaning piteously. They seemed unconscious, yet the contortions of their bodies indicated that they were suffering intense pain. We called an attendant and ordered him to carry the women under shelter from the burning rays.

We did not stop to think that we lacked thority to enforce our demands. Fornately there was no objection, and the omen were one by one carried under a of. One of them was practically dead. d at our request a few rags were thrown er her for decency's sake. She was t removed, and then and there she ed. We had seen enough. We were xious to get away. But it occurred to that thus far no children had been in idence. So we made inquiry conrning them and learned that they were pt in what is termed the kitchen. We ked to be shown there.

The kitchen in the Baroda poor-house ıst be seen to be realized. In a bamo enclosure under the supervision of a , turbaned Hindu, sat three hundred eletonized, diminutive creatures, mostly ked, all sickly and miserable and many them totally blind. In the entire numr there was not a single child which in r country would not be considered pelessly afflicted with marasmus.

Millions of flies gorged themselves on stering sores and on eyes sealed with ruseating exudations. The sight of ese poor little helpless human beings s saddening beyond description. Never ve I seen anything approximating in ject misery and utter destitution this thering of innocents. Not a cry esped their lips. The place was as silent the abode of death. Hardly a hand rred. Not a sound was heard. With e exception of the blinking of the eyes there was no indication of life. Had r own eyes been sightless, we could have ssed by this place in total ignorance of e presence of a living being. We lked in and no one paid the slightest ention to our movements.

The Hindu seemed as lifeless as the ldren. The sanitary conveniences and e kitchen were one. We proceeded, utiously advancing step by step, zig g fashion, in our efforts to escape pollion. We reached the centre of the closure. The Hindu looked on silently. The whole concern seemed dazed. e ourselves were dazed. Stupor was eping upon us. Death seemed to be circling the Baroda kitchen and all it ntained, first mercifully benumbing the ses, as the surgeon administers an esthetic before he performs the operon.

Suddenly there was a stir. Two men ring a can of milk appeared in front of e Baroda tent. The children became mated. The Hindu revived. He ne over to where we were standing and ormed us that milk was to be given to e feebler children. We followed him to e entrance and watched its distribution. soon as some of the tin cups were ed the children scrambled for them. ere was not enough for more than a rth of the number, and the more orous ones got what there was. The bler ones went without it.

Some of them were too weak to rise. They cried inaudibly, but their grief was more pitiful than if it had sought noisy expression. Perhaps punishment awaited every demonstration on their part, and hence they dared not complain. God only knows. We protested against the totally inadequate supply of milk and lack of proper management. The Hindu explained that more milk would be served in the evening. Eight long hours! And then perhaps only as much more. How could these hungry ones survive?

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

We asked the Hindu how many little ones died daily. He professed ignorance, but volunteered the information that their bodies were burned.

We crossed the square that led to the gate; but before we reached it we were surrounded by groups of starving people piteously pleading for a few pice with which to purchase grain. Tears actually trickled down the cheeks of many of the supplicants as they held up to our gaze their emaciated, shriveled little ones in ocular demonstration of their deplorable condition. Mothers swayed to and fro, moaning out unintelligible petitions.

Children prostrated themselves to the ground, chattering in a strange tongue and with frightful rapidity of utterance the story of their woes as though anxious to tell all before we made our escape. "Oh, my king," cried they, "it will be very well with you if you will help us, for we are very, very hungry." And, driven to despair at the thought that their appeal perhaps lacked eloquence or earnestness, they slapped their hollow stomachs and persuasively added, "I'm starving; if you will help me, God will give you many children." My heart almost sank within me.

Why should I have been called to witness all this suffering? Why not some wealthy man, who with a stroke of the pen could fill these empty stomachs and yet never miss the cost? I took one of the children in my arms. The mother said it was ten years of age. It could not have weighed more than thirty pounds. It was a skeleton absolutely denuded of flesh. The large glistening eyes were fixed on mine, as though eager to catch the promise of help. And yet I could not give any, for I remembered my experience at the gate. A rupee given at this moment might mean death, for these people were desperate. They were beyond reasoning. Their own sufferings and their children's woes had driven them nearly mad. If help was to be given, it had to be given generally and the few coins I had with me would not have satisfied a measurable fraction of the requirements. I handed the child back to its mother. It was but a matter of hours, and long before I left India for home the vultures had devoured or the flames consumed all that was left when the catastrophe overtook it.

As I write this, I verily believe that very few, if any, of the twelve hundred who were in the Baroda poor-house that morning ever came out alive. It was a veritable dead-house, and those who once entered seemed hopelessly doomed.

After early lunch and family prayers at the house of Rev. T. M. Hudson, we left Baroda, traveling eastward, witnessing a succession of scenes of suffering, desolation and misery. The rivers were dried up and along their sun-baked, kiln-dried beds, countless thousands of ragged, haggard, foot-sore beggars wandered aimlessly. They were bound they knew not whither. How many of them reached anywhere alive, God only knows. They were literally walking skeletons. They frequently died in their tracks. Thirty left a village for the relief works. Ten died while there. Ten died on the road homeward bound. Ten are awaiting death in the village to which they returned. These wanderers sink by the wayside from absolute exhaustion. Then, if near a village, they are picked up and carted to the hospital. They arrive unconscious, but their sunken eyes, heaving chest and hollow stomachs tell their own terrible story of inconceivable torture. Two girls were thus picked up. They retained consciousness, but speech had become painful. They were offered food. "Sahib," said the elder girl, "we have not eaten for four days. If we take food now we shall die. Let us rest until evening and then feed us." She died that day. The tissues and glands of her stomach were completely withered away. Truly, the present India Famine is the most appalling tragedy the world has ever witnessed.

This is the last of my letters descriptive of my tour of the famine fields of starving India. Ma-bab! rings in my ears. Would to God I had the means to be father and mother to them all and to give them enough to stay the pangs of hunger until Providence graciously sends a harvest so general and abundant that it shall satisfy every hungry man, woman and child in starving India!

DEAL GENTLY

IN our criticisms of others let us remember that we have faults which our friends have excused. How much would be left of us if all those who see inconsistencies in us should clip away from our character and reputation! It is an invariable rule that those who make the roughest work with the names of others are those who have themselves the most imperfections. We ought to be induced away from all harshness by the fact that we ourselves are to be brought to a high tribunal at the last, and that he shall have judgment without mercy that has shown no mercy. You are accustomed with rough grip violently to shake men for their misdeeds, waiting for no palliations. What will become of you when at last, with all your imperfections, you appear at the bar of your Maker?

DO NOT EXPECT TOO MUCH

THERE never was but one perfect pair, and they slipped down the banks of Paradise together. We occasionally find a man who says he never sins. We know he lies when he says it. We have had financial dealings with two or three perfect men, and they cheated us. Do not, therefore, look for an immaculate husband, for you will not find him. While you are thinking he is perfect he will some day, while in a great hurry to meet an engagement, find a shirt button off, and your delusion concerning him will break, or he will find that one of the children has been sharpening slate pencils with his razor. Let me tell women that there are no perfect men. We have been much among men and understand the whole tribe. On a clear morning, when they are well dressed, and the road is clean, they look admirably; but none of them enjoy having a passing vehicle splash mud on their newly blackened boots. None of them look placid when some one treads on their sore corns. If you want to find out that no man is perfect, just marry him. But I think that the two sexes, laying all sentimentalism aside, are about equal. If you secure for life the companionship of some one about as good as yourself, you are to be congratulated. Better have the two blades of a scissors as near as possible alike. Get married, but with your eyes wide open. Remember the old proverb: "You have tied a knot with your tongue you cannot undo with your teeth."

Send also your first contribution toward the support of your protege. An Appeal for the Famine Orphans

[Extract from a letter of Rev. E. F. Frease, July 20, 1900.]

What about the support of this great host of children? And is it any wonder that the Interdenominational Committee, although it did not have before it the full figures, felt it necessary to cable to you appeal for the support of these waifs? Here is certainly a mighty chorus for help from the helpless little ones such as the Christian Church has never heard before, and I am thankful indeed that these little ones have a friend and champion in yourself and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD staff, who will not fail them, but will carry their cause effectively before your hosts of readers.

OUR GRAIN GLADDENED INDIA

MANY letters continue to be received from missionaries, officials, and others in the India famine districts, testifying to the splendid life-saving results that have followed the distribution of the Quito's cargo of American grain. We give below a few extracts from some of these communications:

"The People Took to it Eagerly"

Rev. E. F. Frease, Secretary of the Interdenominational Missionary Committee, writes from Camp Baroda, India:

"Dr. Harpster said he had been convinced corn was the most effective form of relief possible. Whole classes of population who had been untouched by the ordinary form of relief, had been profoundly impressed by the distribution of corn. He was astonished to find that the people took to it eagerly, and seemed to know just how to prepare it. He also said that people came from thirty miles away on hearing the news. Dr. Harpster expressed himself as having never been so grateful for anything in his life as for the corn which had been sent him. I have received numerous applications for corn, and a number of applications from those who had not been included in the distribution.

Praised by the Government Officials

The Residency, Mount Abu,
July 15, 1900.

My dear Sir:—As the representative of the British Government in Rajputana, I desire to express to you, and through you to the numerous contributors to your fund in the United States of America, the hearty thanks of all those who are now engaged in the hard task of famine relief, for the generous allotments of grain and blankets made from your fund to the different Missions in Rajputana. This handsome benefaction will be of immense value in the capable hands of the men and women who have the honor to be your almoners. I feel confident that in no part of India is the generous assistance rendered by America more needed or more truly appreciated. W. H. C. WYLLIE, Acting Agent to the Gov. Gen'l in Rajputana.
DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH.

To Save the Starving Bhil Natives

F. G. Macartney, Supt. Bhil Mission, W. Khandish, writes:

"The two hundred and twenty bags of maize you sent me arrived at the railway station on the 6th inst. My plan is to distribute it to the most needy Bhil families we know, in certain neighboring villages where our preachers have been working during the past four years. From all accounts I hear, and from the reports of our agents also, the admissions of Government officers, I believe most half the Bhil population of W. Khandish has already perished."

Feeding 3,000 in One District

Rev. C. H. McGill, of the Church Missionary Society's Mission, Allahabad, writes:

"The Rev. A. Outram has now 3,000 being fed in the centres under his care round Kherwara. He is also distributing seed-grain to the cultivators who have prepared their fields. Cholera seems to have largely decreased in his centres. There has been the greatest difficulty in getting grain to Kherwara. But in spite of many obstacles Mr. Outram has managed to secure a supply of grain, which he has stored in his bungalow, sufficient to feed those at present on his lists till September. He has been fortunate in obtaining a gift of 100 tons of American maize from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Committee, which is carrying on the work which Dr. Klopsch maugurated."

It Far Exceeded Expectations

Rev. R. A. Hume, Ahmednagar, writes:

"The general testimony about the corn is that the good done is far more than was expected. The community, as a whole, sees the corn and is impressed by it as not by money. . . . There is a profound gratitude to all who send relief through you."

Where the Corn was Sorely Needed

Writing from Ahmadabad, Mary Taylor says:

"The distress here at present is very great. Two missionaries left us yesterday on the way to the Bhil district. They are helping to open up the country and will have to take a lot of grain with them to save the people, as they are to be saved at all. Even now they are feeding about 13,000 a day."

A Generous Councilman

A course probably unprecedented in modern politics has been taken by Dr. Washington Gladden, who was recently elected a Common Councilman of Columbus, O. He has duly received his salary for the office, and has promptly turned it over to the general expense fund of the city, thus giving his services gratuitously.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

.. The Fatal Peak ..

AN unusual number of accidents have occurred this season in Alpine climbing. During the past few weeks the European journals have chronicled more disasters than have occurred in the same period in former years. Some of the victims have been Americans, but the majority have come from England and Italy. The famous peak called the Matterhorn has been the scene of most of these disasters. It is the second highest of all the Alpine peaks, being 14,780 feet above the level of the sea. The ascent of it is always attended with danger, but the guides contend that scarcely any disaster is ever reported in which the victims are free from fault. They say that before the ascent is made, the guide instructs the novice how to proceed. A stout rope will connect him with the guide, and when they reach the dangerous parts he is to stand still while the guide goes on ahead. He is not to attempt to follow until the guide has secured a firm foothold or a stout clutch on the rocks with his iron hook. Then, at a signal from the guide, he may move up to where the guide is standing. When he is safely there, the guide again goes forward and secures another foothold and waits for the novice to follow him. Most of the accidents according to the stories of the guides have resulted from the novice following the guide while the latter was in motion. Slipping then, the guide is unable to arrest his descent, and both are involved in the same disaster. It is marvelous that when men who know little or nothing of the dangers of mountain-climbing are told how comparative safety may be secured, and that their lives and the lives of the guides depend on their obeying the rules implicitly, they should disregard them. But people act in the same way in the slippery paths of life. Even though Divine guidance is promised to all who seek it, the offer is too often rejected, or self-confidence leads to departing from it in some emergency.

Obey my voice and I will be your God and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well with you (Jer. 7:23).

The Envoys Rescued

A sensation of relief went through the civilized world when in a brief cable dispatch from Peking the news came that the envoys who had been so long besieged in the Chinese capital were found to be still alive. So frequent and so persistent have been the reports that all had perished that it seems as if they had risen from the dead. Conflicting reports have been received of their rescue. On the one hand is the statement that the foreign forces were cordially received by the Governor and allowed to march to the legations; and on the other hand that the foreigners had to fight their way to Peking and to force an entrance to the city by blowing open one of the gates. Even on the question of the presence of the Empress and her court, the statements are contradictory. One report has it that the Empress has taken the Emperor, against his will, and with her chief officers and her treasure, has removed the seat of government to Tsi-nan-Fu, Prince Tuan, the chief of the anti-foreign forces, protecting the rear guard. Another report makes the statement that the Empress is still in Peking and that the foreign forces have begun a bombardment of the Forbidden City, the court quarter of Peking. There appears, however, to be no dispute as to the safety of the representatives of the foreign governments, with the exception of the German minister, who was slain early in the outbreak. The allies have now a sufficient force in Pekin to protect the envoys from further molestation, and the fact that the Empress has appointed Li Hung Chang a plenipotentiary to sue for peace, indicates that her present attitude is conciliatory. It is evident, however, that she will have a difficult task in persuading the powers to leave the government of China in her hands, as she stands convicted by events, either of crime in inciting the anti-foreign movement or of weakness in being unable to suppress it. There will probably be a disposition on the part of the powers to partition the country, but it is understood that our government has already declared itself opposed to such a course and has suggested the convening of an international conference to decide on the future government of the country. The powers are naturally incensed at China's defiance and her barbarous actions and it will be difficult to save her from the fate predicted by the prophet against the ancient enemy of his people:

Many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them; and I will recompense them according to their deeds and according to the works of their own hands (Jer. 25:14).

His Bachelor Habit

There was a scene of distress in a hotel in Indianapolis recently, which caused some amusement to the managers and the guests. On the previous evening a young couple arrived, and in walking through the lobby attracted general attention, by their obviously newly-married appearance. The man signed the register, but the clerk had to remind him of his companion before he took up the pen again and added "and wife" to his signature. "Not used to it yet" was his apology to the clerk. The next afternoon he came down stairs alone and went out. About an hour later, a bell-boy passing his room heard a sound of weeping and an effort to open the door. He told the clerk of it, and the manager decided to go up and ascertain if there had been any trouble. He knocked on the door, and a tearful voice told him to come in. He had to use his master-key to open the door. The lady thanked him for coming, but said she did not need anything. Presently the guest returned in a great hurry and went up the stairs two at a time. Afterwards he explained to the manager what had occurred. His wife had been taking a nap, and he availed himself of the opportunity to go out to attend to some business. He had locked the door behind him, as his habit had been in his bachelor days, forgetting all about his wife whom he was imprisoning. When she waked and was about to go out, she discovered that she was an involuntary prisoner. It may be hoped that he succeeded in making his peace. His wife would naturally resent not so much her being in duress as the indication it afforded that her husband had so soon become oblivious of her existence. There are some people who have pledged themselves to Christ who sometimes act as if they too had forgotten their relations to him.

I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you (Gal. 1:6).

CLIMBING THE MATTERHORN, THE SCENE OF THE RECENT DISASTERS

Planning a Jewish State

Such a spectacle as was witnessed at Cooper Union, New York, when the Jews of the city were invited to celebrate the opening in London of the Fourth Zionist Congress, has seldom been seen here or in any other land. Three thousand enthusiastic Jews crowded the vast auditorium, all interested in the widespread movement to recover Palestine for Jewish occupation. This was the more remarkable because so many of the New York Jews belong to the Reformed School which professes neither the hope nor the desire to return to the land of their fathers. But even they are now interested in the movement and are astonished at the strength it has developed. It is only four years ago that the movement was born. It had its origin in a pamphlet under the title of "The Jewish State," by Dr. Theodore Herzl, a brilliant journalist of Vienna. He pointed out that the return to Palestine was a most desirable thing, not only for the Jews, but for all the nations of the earth, and he showed, too, how such a movement could be accomplished. He proposed not a return in colonies, not a pilgrimage on religious or sentimental grounds, nor a military effort to wrest the country from its Saracen lords, but a business-like arrangement to lease the land from the Sultan on terms advantageous to him. Dr. Herzl declares that, in spite of all reports to the contrary, the Sultan is disposed to entertain such a proposal, providing it brought him, as it certainly would, an increase of revenue. Dr. Herzl believes that the Jews, who would return if they could be assured of protection and permanency of tenure, would not be exclusively agriculturists nor traders, but manufacturers who would soon make the country famous in the marts of the world. The fourth Congress, which has just closed its sessions, was more hopeful than any of its predecessors, and now thousands of Jews in many lands are beginning to hope that the way is opening for a return to the land of their fathers.

DR. THEODORE HERZL

And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again to recover the remnant of his people which shall be lett . . . and shall gather together the dispersed of Judah from the corners of the earth (Isa. 11:11, 12).

He Learned by Experience

Among the reminiscences of Ruskin called forth by his death, is an incident of his childhood which he, himself, related: "One evening," he says, "when I was quite a little child, I wanted to touch the tea-urn, which was boiling merrily. It was an early taste for bronzes, I suppose; but I was resolute about it. My mother bade me keep my fingers back; I insisted on putting them forward. My nurse would have taken me away from the urn, but my mother said, 'Let him touch it, nurse.' So I touched it, and that was my first lesson in the meaning of the word liberty. It was the first piece of liberty I got, and the last which for some time I asked." There is no doubt that when the Christian looks back, in the clear light of his Father's house, over the events of his past life, he will see that many of the things which he prayed for and never received were like that urn—things which would have done him harm.

For this thing I besought the Lord thrice that it might depart from me. But he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee (II. Cor. 12:8).

BRIEF NOTES

Mr. Robert Arthington, whose gifts to missions have made his name famous the world over has just offered $50,000 to the London Missionary Society to begin a work among the Awemba tribes on the Southwest of Lake Tanganika in Central Africa.

The Baptist Missionary Society's latest report shows that it carries on work in Burma, Assam, South India, China, Japan, Africa and the Philippine Islands, employs 474 missionaries, twenty-four of whom are physicians, has 928 churches (596 self-supporting) and a church membership of 105,216.

The Russian Government is suppressing all private sales of intoxicating drink. It has undertaken the business on its own account. The result has been a large accession to the revenue. Out of the increase it has made a grant of $900,000 to the temperance societies of the empire, in the hope of decreasing the demand by promoting habits of sobriety.

The Rev. H. Loomis, of the American Bible Society, writes from Japan: "There is such a spirit of inquiry as has not been found before for many years. The prosperity and strength of Christian nations is so evident to the Japanese that they want to know how it is that Christianity has such an influence, and whether there is not something in its teachings that is needed in Japan."

"WHOSE · NEIGHBOR · AM · I?"

THE GOOD SAMARITAN ∴ BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 9: Luke 10: 25-37. | Golden Text, Lev. 19: 18: Love thy neighbor as thyself.

THE anarchists, who are attempting to rid the world of rulers by assassination, and the revolutionary socialists (not to be confused with Christian socialists) are atheists, professing to promote human brotherhood, while denying the divine Fatherhood, which is like promoting the growth of trees by cutting off their tap-roots. Manifestly only those who are taught to say "Our Father" can regard their fellowmen as all brothers. On the other hand, no professing Christian has really known the Father who does not count every man a brother.

How can I live eternally? "Eternal life" begins in living the life of love to God and man day by day. The perfect of "live" is "love." Such, in substance, was the question of the lawyer and the answer of Christ. The lawyer sought only to cross-question Christ for purposes of accusation, but Christ gave to that one unworthy hearer one of the greatest sermons of the ages. He had asked about life—not here, but hereafter—like many who talk and sing of heaven when present duties are waiting at their door. Christ taught him that true life is in keeping the very spirit of God's law, which is itself but love to God and our neighbor. "And who is my neighbor?" asked the questioner, to which Christ replied with the story of the Good Samaritan, that shows how true love to God will pour itself out in loving service wherever human sorrow and need are encountered.

I.—Human Sin and Sorrow

A certain man fell among thieves. The man of the parable, robbed on that lonely road leading through mountain gorges, on which the traveler still goes "down" (the Bible's literal accuracy appears here) to Jericho, is but a type of the sorrow mostly caused by sin, that is seen, more or less, in every journey of life. "Every heart knows its own bitterness," and every one needs sympathy for wounds of soul, if not of body. "All have sinned," and our own sin itself brings sorrow, besides the sorrows inflicted by the sins of others. How much the poor and weak and ignorant have suffered in every age from the rich and powerful and smart! It is not some coarse highwayman with a club that has left that sick girl half dead in her attic. She is the victim of overwork and inadequate wages and seduction in the shop of some broadcloth robber. Appetite, Greed and Lust are the chief robbers of the world, but the greatest of these is Greed. It was for muddy, bloody gold that the man in the story was stripped and wounded. And to-day it is mostly robbery on a grander scale that is filling the world with woe. Not individuals only and corporations, but even nations are stained with the blood of such robberies. It is a common saying that most wars nowadays are really "wars for markets." Governments are dominated by "business interests," and at their behest millions of our own brothers in Africa and other heathen lands have been drugged and robbed to fatten the fortunes of our rum-sellers. Dr. John G. Paton has for eight years pleaded in vain with our own Government to keep its robbers out the Jericho road they are working among the converted cannibals of the New Hebrides. And Asia's Jericho road is seen at Manila and elsewhere.

The Jericho Road of To-day

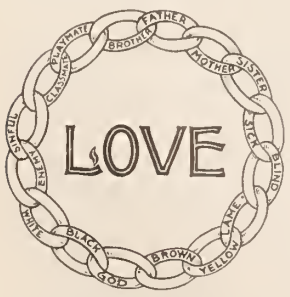
II.—Indifference to Others' Sin and Woe

There came down a certain priest that way. Surely the half-dead sufferer will now be succored, for a minister from the great theological Saints' Rest of Jericho, the city of priests and Levites, is approaching. He glances with momentary pity on this unfortunate, but presently bethinks himself that the robbers may not be far away, and that "self-preservation is the first law of nature." Besides, this unfortunate does not belong to his parish, and he has an address to make at a meeting in Jerusalem, and some fine ecclesiastical points to think out in the short time intervening, and can not be expected to spoil a day of his great life for this one man. And so he hurries on.

The Preacher's Lack of Wayside Religion



This picture of the Jewish priests, who had come to think that religion consisted chiefly of ritual, is not without application in our own day. The ministers are no doubt the best men we have, but in every age they are in danger of thinking that religion consists mostly of meetings, which are only meals preparatory to the real "service" which should follow. Out of church goes the preacher and his people likewise, feeling that the sermon is "done," when it is only "said," passing opportunities to practice it all along their path, which are often unseen and oftener unimproved. The shop windows on Jericho street are full of evil things that waylay and wound our thoughtless youth in the very soul; things that would be put away at a word of protest, which the "consecration" meeting never seems to suggest. It is regarded as so very meritorious to "feel" and sing and pray and talk in meetings and conventions that it would seem to be superfluous righteousness to add anything in the way of applied Christianity and wayside religion. Especially is it surprising that so many preachers consider the drunkard left half dead by the wayside, and other victims of immorality, no concern of theirs. They must give themselves to "spiritual religion." Let outside temperance societies look after morality, and let outside benevolent societies see to charity. This parable suggests that a religion that is truly spiritual will be also practical. Love to God will show itself in philanthropy, which belongs to the church and can not be passed on the other side without sinful neglect.

Likewise a Levite came and looked on him and passed by. This lay officer, the elder, having no sermon on his mind, stopped long enough to come close to the dying man and sigh, and then he also passed by on the other side, reflecting how many have to suffer in this world and how impossible it would be to help them all. If the man had been strong enough to get to the inn alone, this elder would have been glad to give him some money, or if there had been any city missionary about he would have paid him to take him there, but he was too busy to give time to such a case. There are many faithful church officers who give both time and money to the practical, as well as the spiritual aspect of religion, but the increasing tendency, in the rush of business and social duties, is for the church officers to pass by the temperance meeting and the charity work and hire a substitute to love his neighbor as himself, and even to throw the supreme privilege of teaching the children of others and his own upon the women and young people. No church officer can be what he should be who does not engage in some hand-to-hand work for God and man.

A Snap-shot of Church Officers

The priest saw the victim of misfortune, and passed by; the Levite not only saw the trouble, but pondered it, and yet would not help. There is yet another class who will not see or hear of need, whether of body or soul, so far as they can shut it out of sight, by orders to their clerks to keep from them all philanthropic appeals. The wealthy Levite of to-day, who has ten thousand assistants in production of wealth, should have at least one skilled assistant in its distribution.

III.—Saved by Love

But a certain Samaritan came where he was. This Samaritan had: (1) a watchful eye; (2) a sympathetic heart; (3) a freedom from bigotry; (4) a helpful hand; (5) liberality; (6) foresight. The combination of these qualities constituted him a "good Samaritan." He was not only good, but good for something. To the Jewish lawyer to whom the story was first told, with his strong prejudice against the mixed race of Samaritans, who were half Jewish, crossed with Canaanite and Assyrian blood, it was particularly galling to have goodness pictured in a Samaritan. It was as if one should talk of a good living Indian to a western cowboy, or of a "good Jew" to a New York merchant. How persistently the sin of race prejudice lingers, even in the Church of God! This parable is intended to teach that the very man whom a true disciple of Christ will be most careful not to pass by in his words and deeds of sympathy, will be those of other races, and especially of those races that the public opinion about him most condemns. Let the Christian Englishman be particularly watchful that he is not too ready to believe evil stories of the Boers, and that he leave them not out of his sympathies and prayers. And the Christian Boer himself should count it his greatest victory to triumph over the prejudices of his race against both the British and the negro. In North Carolina it will take much Christlikeness to maintain the supremacy of love amid the cries of "white supremacy." And over all the world there will be need of prayer that the people of China be not excluded from our circle of human brotherhood. In the blindness of bigotry, they are yet our blind brothers, and what brother needs our sympathy more than the blind one? Steam and telegraphy have brought the world into neighborhood. Christian missions are to make it also a brotherhood.

"Earth's Every Man My Friend."

Go thou and do likewise. Wherever you find a brother man who needs you in body and soul, and you are to "watch out" for him every day, that is the man who is the neighbor you are to love, and to whom you are to prove a neighbor indeed. Do not wait for some great opportunity. As ferries grow rich in gathering pennies from every passer-by, you will become rich in blessing by doing some little good every day. Remember the famous motto: "I shall not pass again this way. I cannot do much, but I can do something; and what I can do, I ought to do, and, by God's grace, I will do."

Good Samaritans of To-day

We should fill all the hours with the sweetest things
If we had but a day.

"HE HAD COMPASSION ON HIM AND WENT TO HIM AND BOUND UP HIS WOUNDS"

Two men were at work on a telegraph-pole standing many feet above a line of railway. A wire had broken and they were busy repairing the damage. The wind blew fiercely from the east and the pole rocked to and fro in the blast. Suddenly a strong gust caused one of the men to turn in his position. In doing so, he somehow pushed his companion, who, taken unawares, fell backwards. He clutched at his mate and both tumbled over amongst the wires.

For a moment, the two men hung without speaking a word. Then one of them said: "Bill, I can't reach the post, and I'm afraid if I move the wires will break." And as he spoke a wire broke.

"Well, mate, it's a big drop down into the grass," replied the other man, "but as you're married and have three kids, I don't see why I should stay here."

"No, don't do that, Bill. You'll get killed, surely. Let's hang a little longer."

But another wire broke, and Bill made up his mind.

"Good-by, mate," he said to the other, who had tears in his eyes, "Good-by."

Then he dropped—a fall of forty feet. He fell amongst some bushes and rolled down the embankment. When he rose, for he was not dead, he crawled up the embankment.

"I'm all right, mate; I'm going for help."

The station was half a mile distant. When the poor fellow who had risked his life for his mate told his tale he fainted away. The doctor said he had broken his arms and a couple of ribs; but his noble action saved his friend's life and his own.

To few will come opportunity for such heroic wayside service as that, but if we keep ever in mind the motto of Christ: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least," and are willing to do the least as well as greatest service, we shall enrich every day with some memory of helpfulness. It is too much forgotten that Christ's motto works both ways. Inasmuch as we have been unkind to any one, or neglectful of any one, we have been unkind or neglectful to him. And in every positive service to another, we can say to Christ: "Behold, through him, I give to thee."

A beautiful girl on a cold winter's day bought a paper of a ragged little Irish newsboy. "Poor little fellow, aren't you cold?" she said, as she paid him for the paper. "I was, ma'am, before you passed," was the quick reply.

In a five-story tenement in New York lived a lame, almost crippled pedler. "Fire!" rang out from below. He was able to walk and might perhaps have gotten down in time by the stairs, but he remembered a man in the tenement below who could not rise from his bed alone. To him he hastened, wrapped him with bedclothes and brought him to the fire-escape, where brave firemen rescued them both.

"Yes, my little boy is lame," said Mr. Scott.

"Nothing permanent, I hope?" asked his brother.

"We do not know yet. The doctor says that the leg is paralyzed, but that he hopes Walter may grow out of it."

Walter was a great favorite with his uncle, who used to watch the poor little boy trying to crawl along the floor. When his disabled limb made him fall in a heap, his uncle would lift him up and set him on his knee, and pet him.

But one day it occurred to Walter's uncle that he might assist in the recovery of that paralyzed leg.

"Why, Walter, mannie," said he, "you've quite given up even trying to crawl, and if you do not try your poor old leg will never grow strong and well."

Although Walter could not understand many things, being very small, yet he looked up from his seat on the floor with such intelligent eyes that his uncle thought he must understand him. So he continued:

"But we must not give up yet."

As he spoke he drew his shining gold watch from his pocket, and, hanging it first for a moment before the eyes of Walter to attract his attention, he began to drag it along the floor. The watch was just near enough to Walter to make him eager to grasp it, and yet he could not seize it without making an effort.

AN ORIENTAL INN.

Every day they played at this game, and Walter began to crawl a little. At first he could only creep with difficulty, but the slow, awkward movement of the child was soon replaced by more active use of his limbs, and before long he could freely use his paralyzed leg. This is the way Sir Walter Scott learned to walk.

... A TALK ABOUT ... THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

NOBODY who has given the subject any serious attention, and who has made it her business to inquire into it, can have failed to notice as a sign of the times a growing and perilous indifference to the Sunday School on the part of well-to-do families in our cities. The mission schools are thronged, and in an occasional church one finds a large and flourishing school, well taught, well organized, well attended. But churches can be found in the fashionable quarters with a beggarly dozen or two of children in their Bible Schools, and think themselves doing more than respectably if, all told—officers, teachers and scholars—they muster an average of a hundred names on their rolls.

You inquire why there are so few children and you are told that more and more small families are the rule, and that many married couples have no children. Yes, but ackpowledging this significant fact—token of a modern civilization, which prefers luxury to the dignity of true household life where parents and children compose the home—you still insist that children are not altogether obsolete. Then you are informed that their mothers prefer to give them religious instruction at home; that they do not like to delegate this to unknown and half-educated persons, etc., etc. This has a plausible sound. Alas! on investigation you are forced to the conclusion that in many nominally Christian families the boys and girls are growing up in dense ignorance of Bible truth. If these young people go away for a summer holiday of six or eight weeks, they are supplied with every outfit for sport—with clothing for every change of the weather, with balls and golf-sticks and bathing-suits and oars; but the trunk contains no Bible—that was overlooked in the packing, for the excellent reason that it is habitually overlooked in the daily life.

Granting that every Sunday School teacher is not a theological student, all fair-minded persons must admit that most teachers study the lesson thoroughly and faithfully, and that they are aided by lesson helps and lesson illustrations, lights and comments, which have been prepared by the foremost scholars of our age. A child attending the Sunday School regularly cannot but obtain a certain very desirable familiarity with the Scriptures; the hymns sung will linger in his memory and the prayers will lead him to Christ. The great advantage of the Sunday School is that it is openly and directly religious and that its one text-book is the Word. If parents would cooperate with teachers, going over the lesson in the family, and if more memorizing of the text were required, we should see a marked advance in spirituality and a greater responsiveness to the Gospel invitation in our young people. We ought to take steps at once everywhere to build up and strengthen the Sunday School, to aid it in keeping abreast of the home and to set it in the van in the battle with the adversary.

The Summer School for Parents

The twenty-seventh annual assembly closed at Chautauqua on August 24th, having successfully conducted its various departments to the great profit and pleasure of an immense gathering of attendants. If one wanted to learn nothing, if one's only object were pure enjoyment with instruction altogether omitted, Chautauqua would be an ideal spot for a summer visit, but there one receives inspiration for the soul as for the body in the very atmosphere, and the lecture courses and classes are most alluring to all, so that everybody is profited.

A great deal of attention is now given to the right training of parents, the right fitting of them for their duties. In accordance with the spirit of the day, a summer school for parents has been a new feature this year in the Chautauqua programme. Babyhood and childhood were considered by educators of marked ability, and such themes as the "Social Life of the Child," "Mother-Song and Child-Song," "Chivalry or the Spirit of the True Knight" were discussed at the Round Table. Parents who were present enjoyed a great opportunity for true culture.

Mother-Blindness

When a half dozen families are grouped under one roof, it is quite impossible not to be impressed with the blindness of the average mother. To an impartial outsider, Tommy and Ethel appear to be ordinary children, a little frisky and kiddish as is right, with their occasional tantrums and their usual levels of good behavior, just the average children of whom the average men and women are made. But converse with the mothers, and you will soon perceive that Tommy is a future Gladstone and Ethel a miniature Saint Ursula; that the talents of both are phenomenal, and the genius and beauty of each unsurpassed. The mother love translates every commonplace incident into a prophecy, and is too often blind to defects of manner and faults of speech, which will very painfully handicap the children by and by.

Take the Bible With You

In packing a trunk to go away from home for several weeks, or a bag for a night or two, always remember to put your Bible in a place where you can easily get at it. Our Bible reading may be best done in our own Book, the one which we are used to take up morning and evening for our daily study. If a person packs for the summer outing everything except the Bible, the inference is natural that he does not find it a necessity. An alarming ignorance of Bible truth is evident among our educated young people to-day, as has been proved by the questions sent out by Dr. Thwing, of Western Reserve University, to a hundred colleges, including some of the most prominent in East and West alike. The questions related to things familiar to all Bible readers, but the answers revealed that the young men and women had never been introduced to the heroes and the heroines, the events and incidents of the Old and the New Testament.

THE BREAD FROM OVER-SEA

This photograph represents a scene to touch every heart. When the Quito arrived in India, carrying THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S munificent gift of corn for the starving sufferers, the first kernels were dropped into the little outstretched hands of children by Miss Mary Stephens, daughter of the Rev. W. H. Stephens, of the Grant Road Methodist Episcopal Church. The scene suggests the following poem:

Hold out the little hands and take the gift from far away,
By wind and wave, by storm and sun, 'twas brought to you this day.
In homes across the ocean wide, the tale of need was told,
And loving hearts made haste to send their silver and their gold,
To buy the food your barren fields have known not how to give,
To send the succor which can save, and bid
the dying live.

Poor wasted babes, poor mothers torn by hunger's bitter pain,
Shall taste the bread by Christians brought;
shall gather strength again.
A song shall break from fainting souls, for love hath found a way
To feed the famine-stricken and to lift them up this day.
The gentle Lady of the Loaf, like Christ's own angel comes
Dispensing Western kindness in the darkened
Eastern homes.

They who have sent this freight of corn, send with it heart-felt prayer
That India's orphans might be kept close in our Shepherd's care;
That more than earthly bread might be in this rich cargo rife;
That they who ate might also feed upon the Bread of Life;
That He who fed the thousands by the Sea of Galilee, Might say to many a Hindu child, "Come thou and rest with Me.

Come thou and serve and take My yoke, and learn My gracious ways;
Come all the weary, lonely ones, and learn
Jehovah's praise."
God grant that soon our Master may be ruler o'er the hosts
That throng in teeming millions o'er India's plains and coasts;
God grant the West the honor, as it stoops to feed the least,
Of guiding Eastern pilgrims to the Master's marriage-feast.

Happiness is a Thing of Habit

Yesterday, my duty as school clerk called me to visit my neighbor. I felt depressed in spirit, for only four days before a severe hail storm had nearly destroyed my wheat fields. I had hoped to reduce my indebtedness and send my daughter away to school to prepare herself for a teacher. The way seemed dark, indeed, before me and I could not see in my care how "all things work together for good to those that love the Lord." My neighbor is out of debt, owns a large farm, has fine buildings, plenty of good horses and machinery, and grown children to do all of his work. Surely, I thought, he will meet this loss with good courage and cheerfully prepare to do next year's work.

But I found exactly the reverse true. He was so cast down, so utterly unnerved, so hopelessly depressed, that instantly my sympathies went out to him and for the time being I forgot my own loss, and came away thinking only of his trouble. Suddenly, as I drove along the road, it flashed upon me, "Happiness is surely a thing of habit." Here is my neighbor, with everything in the world to make life delightful, plenty of this world's good, and no debts to worry him, so miserable over the loss of a few hundred dollars that he hoped to get, that life does not seem to him worth living.

So, telling Jesus of my troubles and asking him to make a way out of them for me, I began humming a little song I had learned in my youth:

So let the wide world wag as it will,
I'll be gay and happy still.

I came home in good spirits, ready to take up my daily task and to trust. LUELLA.

Yes, and it is also a thing, or a habit of trust in our Heavenly Father, and of cheerful acquiescence in his loving will.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—WINNIE STEEL. A silence cloth under the table-cloth is of felt or canton flannel, and deadens the sound not only, but makes the table-cloth.

—ALICE MARGARET. In calling on a young lady who is visiting in your town, it is proper for you to ask for her hostess, even if you have never met her, and to include her in any invitation you may extend to your friend.

—E. W. Low-necked dresses are not worn to church or for any occasion except that which is highly ceremonious. Fashionable women often wear a low-cut dress to dinner, or they have the neck of the gown filled in with lace if they do not wish the flesh exposed.

—PERPLEXED. Be guided by the lady's wish. Surely you would not ask her to attend a festival against her will, or on an evening which she had devoted to something else; perhaps to the weekly prayer-meeting. Her wish should be your law in such matters while you are courting and after you win her.

—RENA D. You surprise me. Having rejected a suitor, you cannot be interested in his proposing to another lady, who accepts him. The affair is his and hers, not yours, and dignity requires your refraining from criticism. Did you expect the man to court you again? Surely you refused him in good faith.

—STIFF AND STAUNCH. You are no doubt right in the stand you take, but why be so disagreeable about it? We need not let our good be evil, through our fault-finding. If you disapprove of the little social club of which you speak, and which seems to me quite harmless, stay away by all means, but do not browbeat your sister, who has a right to go if she likes.

—MRS. E. A wife should not entertain strangers against the express desire of her husband and her invalid daughter. The stranger guests would be oppressed by the unspoken hostility of feeling in the home, and the hostess would be embarrassed in her task, not having the support of her family. The wife thus situated would better let the strangers be entertained elsewhere.

—A. W. R. You state your daughter's age as two, but from the context I judge her to be a young lady. Keep pace with her in her fun and in her friendships, if, as I fancy, she is twenty-two. Every bright and clever person does not care for books. Some find their tools elsewhere. A girl with an aptitude for business and a talent for conversation may get on very well, though she read little. She should, however, as a matter of duty to herself and to society, read the Bible and the newspaper—the first, to learn her obligations to God; the second, to keep informed of what is going on in the world. Read both these with her, and persuade her to take up a book of travels in connection with the present developments in China. This may lead to other reading.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

CHAPTER XXXIX.

SAMANTHA IN ITALY

ONE of the most interestin' places in Venice is the Doges Palace, and I spoze Josiah never gin up his idea about it until we stood right in front of it. But when he see that marble front, full of noble columns, elaborate carvin', arches, balustrades and base reliefs, he had to gin up such a place as that wuz never rared up to a dog or to any number on 'em, though he said when I convinced him of his mistake: "Snip wuz too good to mingle with 'em, he wuz likelier than any Doge that ever lived there, no matter whether you spelt 'em dog or doge."

And I sez soothin'ly: "Like as not and 'tennyrate how I would love to hear Snip bark out a welcome to us once more."

"Yes," sez Josiah, "it will be the happiest hour of my life when I behold Snip and the cat and the children and grandchildren and the rest of the Jonesvillians once more."

Here in the marbie pavement are two great bronze cisterns elegantly sculptured, and you can look up the Grand Staircase with two statutes at the top on either side, Neptune and Mars; and that wuz the place where the old Doges wuz crowned.

On the staircase on each side are beautiful statutes and columns, elaborate carving and richly colored marbles. The Hall of the Great Council is one hundred and seventy-five feet long and most a hundred in width, broad enough and high enough to entertain broader and nobler views than wuz promulgated there. But it contains costly and beautiful pictures; one by Tintoretto is eighty-four feet wide and most forty feet high, the largest picture on canvas in the world so I've hearn, and others by Paul Veronese and the other great masters.

Memories of the Doges

All round the wall, like a border in a Jonesville parlor, are the portraits of the Doges of Venice in their red robes and round-topped caps. But where Marino Faliero should have hung wuz a black curtain. Well, he wuz a mean creeter; it is a good thing he can be shut out with a curtain. Josiah said he thought it would be a crackin' good plan to have a black curtain hung before the pictures of some of our public men, but Arvilly said, in a real dry tone, that "If we begun that it would bring up the price of black cloth enormously."

She mourns yet quite a good deal in her best dresses, and looked ahead, and didn't want the price of crape and bombazine riz.

Among the pictures of these old Doges wuz one who led the army in an attack on Constantinople at the age of ninety-seven, when most old men are bed rid with a soap-stun and water gruel. And Francesco Foscari, who worked nobly for thirty-five years and wuz then abused shameful by the Ten and turned out of office.

Them old Doges had their ups and downs; riz up to power, throwed down agin. Mean as the old Harry, some on 'em, and some workin' well for the public. And some after servin' the public for years wuz banished, some beheaded, some had their eyes put out, one died of vexation, one who wuz deposed died when the bell rung in his successor. A few died in battle, but only a few on 'em passed away in their beds after a lingerin' and honorable sickness with their one wife and children weepin' about 'em.

You can see the open place in the wall where the written complaints wuz put aginst sombody or anybody, guilty or innocent, and wuz pretty sure to be acted upon by the dretful Ten settin' there in their black robes and black masks, fit color for their dark and cruel deeds.

We went down to see the dungeons, dark, cramped, filthy holes in the solid wall; only a little light sifted in from the corridor through a narrow slit. It seemed as if them places wuz so awful we couldn't bear to look at 'em. But we went down into still deeper dungeons way below the canal, in one of them dretful places where you can't hardly draw a breath. We see dim traces of writings on the walls some wretched prisoner waitin' for death had writ there. How did he feel when he writ it? I didn't want to know, nor have Josiah know.

We didn't make a very long stay in Venice, but journeyed on to Florence—Florence the beautiful. It lays in a quiet, sheltered valley with the Apennine Mountains risin' about it as if to keep off danger. The river Arno runs through it, spanned by handsome bridges. The old wall that used to surround it with its eight gates, has been destroyed some years ago.

AT THE GRAND STAIRCASE TO THE DOGES' PALACE

As I say, it is a beautiful city, although it wuz more grand and populous when it wuz the capital of Italy. Dorothy said it was well named the City of Flowers for there wuz flowers everywhere, the markets full of 'em, flower girls at every turn, balconies and windows overrunning with them, public gardens and private gardens sweet with their brightness and perfume.

The next morning after we arrived at Florence we sallied out sightseeing. We all went out together, but seperated after a while, promising to meet at luncheon time at our tarven, but we all went together as fur as the Cathedral. It is a noble buildin', covered with red, white and black marble, elegantly ornamented with panels and sculpture. And the hull meetin'-house is so beautiful, that it wuz remarked that "it ort to be kep' in a glass case."

In the Cathedral at Florence

Inside, the ceiling is one hundred and thirty-five feet high—good land! I told Josiah I wuz glad I did not have to whitewash or paper it overhead, for it most killed us Methodist Episcopal sisters to paper our meetin'-house ceilin' which wuz only twenty feet high, and put a hundred and thirty feet on top of that and where would we be, we never could done it in the world. The interior is full of statutes and pictures by Michael Angelo and other great sculptors and famous painters.

The Campanile or bell tower near it is most three hundred feet high, and a beautiful view is to be seen from the top way off onto the fur-off mountains, the city and the valley of the Arno, or that is I hearn so; I didn't climb up myself to see, bein' more'n willin' to take Dorothy's word and Robert Strong's to that effect.

The bronze doors in the Baptistry are a sight to see. Michael Angelo said they wuz worthy to be the gates of paradise, but I could tell Mr. Angelo, and would if he had said it to me, that he little knew how beautiful them gates are and we ortn't to compare anything earthly to em. Jest think, Mr. Angelo, I'd say, of an immense gate being made of one pearl, the idee! we can't hardly git it into our heads and idees here below and never will till the winds of heaven blow aginst our tired senses and brighten 'em up.

In the Great Art Galleries

But I wuzn't neighbor to Mr. Angelo; he died several years before I wuz born, four or five hundred years before, so of course I couldn't advise him for his good. He lost a sight and never knowed it, poor creeter!

The Ufizzi and Pitti galleries contain enough pictures and statutes to make 'em more'n comfortable I should think; beautiful pictures and beautiful statutes I must say. One of the most interestin' things to me in the hull collection wuz the original drawings of the old masters with their names signed to 'em in their own hand writin'. It wuz like liftin' up the mysterious curtain a little ways and peerin' into the past. Michael Angelo's sketches in chalk and charcoal; Titian's drawings, little buds, as you may say from which they bloomed into immortal beauty; Rubens, Albert Durer and a throng of others. And then there wuz the autograph portraits of the great painters, Guido, Rembrandt, De Vinci, Vandyke, Raphael, and also the greatest works of all these painters. It wuz a grand and inspirin' sight never to be forgot. Robert Strong and Dorothy wanted to see the statute of Dante; they set store by his writings. It is a splendid statute of white marble riz up in the Piazza Sante Croce; I hearn 'em talkin' about its bein' on a piazza and spozed it wuz built on some stoop and mistrusted he deserved a better pillow.

But it wuzn't on the piazza of a house, it wuz out-doors, and the pedestal wuz over twenty feet high, all covered with carvin's of seens took from his Divinia Commedia, and some lions, and the arms of Italy, and things. It wuz a good-lookin' statute, better lookin' as fur as beauty goes than Dante himself; he wuz kinder humbly I always thought, but then, I spoze, he didn't always wear that wreath on his head: mebby he looked better in a beaver hat or a fur cap. 'Tennyrate, Thomas J. always sot store by him. It wuz a noble statute, more'n fifty feet high, I presoom, with two figures standin' on each side and one on top. The one on the left seemed to have her hand outstretched telling to all the world just how Dante wuz used whilst he wuz alive, and the one on the right had just throwed herself down and wuz cryin' about it, and Dante, settin' on top, wuz leanin' his hand on his head and meditatin'. What his meditations wuz, I don't know, nor Josiah don't. Mebby he wuz thinkin' of Beatrice.

Dante and Savonarola

Thomas J. had read Dante's books a sight to his pa and me. The Divine Comedy, The Inferno, Bernadiso, New Life, etc., etc. Thomas Jefferson thought The Divine Comedy a powerful work, showing the story of how a man wuz tempted, and how sorrow lifts up the soul to new hites.

I never approved of his praisin' up Beatrice quite so much under the circumstances, and I dare presoom to say that he and Gemma (his pardner) had words about it. But then I couldn't hender it, it havin' all took place five or six hundred years before I wuz born.

Robert Strong said that his writings wuz full of eloquence, wit and pathos. His native land sets great store by his memory, though they acted in the usual genteel and fashionable way, and banished and persecuted him during his life. One thing he said I always liked. He wuz told he might return to his country under certain pains and penalties, but he refused and said:

"Far from a preacher of justice to pay those who have done him wrong as a favor. Can I not everywhere behold the mirrors of the sun and stars? Speculate on sweetest truths under any sky."

Robert Strong said his poetry wuz far finer in the original.

And I said, "Yes, he wuz very original, for Thomas Jefferson always said so."

He is buried in Ravenna, and the Florentines have begged for his ashes to rest in Florence. If when they burnt up some of his books to show their contempt of him they had done as they wanted to, dug up his body and burnt it, there wouldn't have been any ashes to quarrel about, for of course scornin' him so they would have cast his ashes to the winds. But now they worship him when his ear is dead to their praise, the great heart silent that their love would have made beat with ecstacy. Well, such is life. They treated Tasso just about the same who writ Jerusalem Delivered, they imprisoned him for a lunatic, and now how much store they set by him.

And I had these same thoughts, only more extreme ones, as we stood in the cell of that noble preacher of righteousness and denouncer of sin, Savonarola. He wuz so adored by the populace, and so great a crowd pressed to see him to kiss his robe and applaud him, that he had to have a guard. And then this same adoring crowd turned against him, imprisoned him for heresy, tortured him, burnt him to the stake. And when he stood on the fagots, which wuz to be his funeral bed of flame, and the bishop said to him:

"I excommunicate you from the church militant," he answered, "Thou canst not separate me from the Church Triumphant."

A great life and a great death. I thought of this a sight as I looked on his tomb. I sot store by Mr. Savonarola.

In the Church of Santa Croce we see the tomb of Machiavelli, a very wise, deep man and a wise patriot, but a man lied about the worst kind by them that hate liberty; the tomb of the poet, Alfieri, with Italy weepin' over it; the tombs of Michael Angelo and Galileo; the mother of the Bonapartes, and many, many others. Galileo's monument wuz a sizeable one, but none too big for the man who discovered the telescope and the motion of the earth. But just as the way of the world is because he found new stars and insisted that the earth did move, his enemies multiplied, he wuz persecuted and imprisoned. I sot great store by him, and so did Robert Strong, and I sez to him, "Robert, you too are discovering new and radiant stars in your City of Justice and proving that the world does move." And I gin a queer look onto Miss Meechim and sez:

"I hope you won't be persecuted for it."

Miss Meechim looked some like her sir name with the last letter changed to n. But to resoom: The galleries of Florence contains priceless pictures and statuary, so many of 'em that to enjoy them as you should, and want to, would take years. Why, in the hall of Niobe I wanted to stay for days to cry and weep and enjoy myself. I took my linen handkerchief out of my pocket to have it ready, for I laid out to weep some, and did, the mother's agony wuz so real, holdin' one child while the rest wuz grouped about her in dyin' agony. One of the sons looked so natural, and his expression of despair and sufferin' wuz so intense that Arvilly said:

"I believe he drinked, his face shows a guilty conscience, and his ma looks as jest as the mother of drunkards always looks."

I told her that the death of Niobe's children wuz caused by envy and jealousy, which duz just such things to-day as fur as they dast all the way from New York to Jonesville, and so on through the surroundin' world. Sez I, Apollo and Diana killed 'em all just because Niobe had such beautiful children and so many of 'em and wuz naterally proud and had boasted about 'em some, and Apollo and Diana didn't want their ma looked down on and run upon because she had only two children, and probable their ma bein' envious and jealous sot 'em up."

Josiah's View of Art

But Arvilly wouldn't give up; she said a ma would always try to cover up things and insisted on it to the last that she should always believe they drinked and got into a fight with Latony's boy and girl.

"No," sez I agin, "it wuz Envy and Jealousy that took aim and did this dretful deed."

Josiah sez: "Why didn't Ni—obe keep her mouth shet then?"

Well, it wuz vain to enjoy deep emotions in the face of such practicality. I put up my handkerchief and moved off into another room.

Besides pictures, these galleries contain rare gems of art in bronze, crystal, precious stones, coins, arms, helmets, etc., etc. Enough as I say to keep one's mind rousted up and busy for years and years.

Dorothy said she couldn't leave Florence without seeing the house where Elizabeth Barrett Browning lived and writ her immortal poems and I felt jest so; I felt that I must see the place sanctified by her pure spirit and genius. So Robert Strong got a carriage and took Dorothy and me there one fine afternoon. A plate let into the front of the house tells where she lived in body. But in sperit she inhabited the hull world, and duz now. Her home is in the hearts of all who love pure and exalted poetry.

Off for Rome

Here she lived her happy life as the wife of Robert Browning and mother of her boy. Here she passed on up to the higher school, for which she had prepared her sweet soul below, graduated in the earth school and promoted up to the higher one above.

I had a sight of emotions here and Robert and Dorothy quoted from her all the way back to our tarven, and so I did. I thought more of such poems as "Mother and Poet," and "The Sleep," etc. But they quoted a sight from "Geraldine's Courtship" and "Portuguese Songs," for so every heart selects its own nutriment. Their young hearts translated it into glowing language I mistrusted, though I didn't say nothin'.

From Florence we went to Rome. I had read a sight about Rome and how she sot on her seven hills and from her throne of glory ruled the world. But them hills are lowered down a good deal by the hand of Time, just as Rome's glory is; she don't rule the world now, fur from it.

There is in reality ten hills, but the ruins of old Rome—the Rome of Julius Cæsar—has filled in the hollers a good deal and the new city has grown old agin, as cities must, and I, and Josiah, and everybody and everything.

Robert Strong had writ ahead and got us some comfortable rooms in a tarven on the Corso. When Robert Strong first spoke on't Josiah looked agitated. He thought it wuz a buryin' ground. But it didn't have anything to do with a corse.

The Corso is one of the finest streets in Rome, and handsome shops are on each side on't, and carriages and folks in fine array and them not so fine are seen there. Most all of the big crowd wuz dressed as they do in Jonesville and Paris and London, though occasionally we met Italians in picturesque costooms.

There are three hundred and eighty Catholic meetin'-houses in Rome, quite a few on 'em dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and lots of costly gifts are laid on her altar. But the one I wanted to see and so did the rest of our party wuz the one that stood on the spot where once the circus of Nero stood, weak, mizable creeter. The most agreeable actin' to him and his cruel pardner, wuz the death struggles of martyrs and bloodshed and agony.

THE BRONZE DOORS IN THE BAPTISTERY

What a inspiring idee it is to think that right on that very spot, that bloody pagan pleasure house of hissen is changed into the biggest meetin'-house in the world. Of course we had seen St. Peters from a distance ever since we'd got nigh the city, and we sot out the very next mornin' after we got there, to see it at clost view.

Now I had thought, comparin' it to the Jonesville meetin'-house, which I guess is about fifty by sixty feet, and will, on a pinch, set four hundred and fifty, and comparin' that with the cathedral in New York I had thought that that Catholic Cathedral in New York was about as big a meetin'-house as a minister could handle easy; but the area of that is forty-three thousand, whilst St. Peter's at Rome is two hundred and twelve thousand.

The difference these figgers make in the two meetin'-houses is bigger than my writin' can show you, no matter how big a pen I use or how black my ink is.

ON THE BRIDGE OVER THE ARNO, AT FLORENCE

Her Arm Was a Shield

Rev. W. C. Hearn, of Talladega, Ala., writes for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the following beautiful incident of humble heroism on the part of a negro nurse-maid:

A few days ago, Mr. Handley, a clothier, was out driving with his family. Some part of the carriage was broken, and the horses became frightened and ran. The nurse, a young negress, had their babe in her lap, and, seeing the disaster coming, pressed the little one to her bosom, and threw up her arms over it as a shield. She received the blow of the collision upon her own body, bruising her shoulder and elbow and breaking the bone in two places, but she saved the child. The brave nurse girl was immediately taken home and promptly cared for. Her family, hearing of the accident, sent for her, but Mr. Handley, father of the child, said: "No, I can take better care of her than you can, and she shall have the best physician, and the best of care." Physicians proceeded to adjust the broken bones, and the patient is doing well. But for her unselfishness and prompt action, the child would have been crushed to death. In speaking to her of her injury and suffering, she replied: "I would rather have had the other arm broken, too, than to have that child hurt."

Two Heroes of the Slums

Yellow and Fox, who Risked their Lives to Save Playfellows from Drowning HEROISM among youthful dwellers in the tenements is as common as among any other boys and girls; they have hearts as tender and impulses as brave as can be found anywhere. The courageous endeavors of some East Side lads to save their comrades from a watery grave, and their successful rescue of one boy came recently to the knowledge of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; and then Mrs. St. James, a missionary neighbor of the young life-savers, brought them to this office.

"I know," she said, "that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD likes to make as much of the boys who do brave deeds saving life at home as for the soldiers, poor fellows, who have to go away from home and take life. These lads don't think they've done anything remarkable, but I want you to hear their story. Boys, tell us how it was Leo Drillick didn't drown."

"YELLOW" AND "FOX," LIFE-SAVERS

They were big, rough, tawny East Side lads — typical children of the docks. "Yellow" and "Fox" their associates call them. Yellow is eighteen, Fox fifteen. Fox said:

"De little feller—Hogan—went off de pier and Drillick after him. They went too far out and were being carried along in the current. We were on the pier and we see them in danger. I threw off my clothes and jumped in and struck out after them. Yellow went in, shoes, clothes and all and he got a couple of inches ahead of me——"

"When I got to Drillick," said Yellow, he had gone down for de last time. I got to him just in time to dive down by him and catch hold of him——"

"I went down with them two or three times," broke in Fox. "De little feller, Hogan, had me by de feet and Yellow had de other boy by the head."

"I was a long time fetching for de little feller," said Yellow. "I staid down under de water so long that they all thought I was drowned, too. I"—with a deep, sad look in his brown eyes—"got de little feller—lost sight of him—he disappeared. I staid under water so long I didn't know nothin'——"

"He was unconscious," translated the missionary, "but he came to quickly, and ——"

"I see Fox struggling with de other feller and swam towards him to help, and we got Drillick far as the scow——"

Fox took up the theme: "They dropped us a rope and I caught hold of it and it gave way with us—snapped—so that we dropped—went down again, under de boat, and as we was pullin' Drillick up again, he thought I was de little feller (Hogan) and took hold of my feet, an he was pulling one way and I was pulling de other——"

Neither could supply missing links here. They had told as much, and as clearly, of that blind, brave struggle with death under the water, as they could remember. What they had told, had been told confusedly and with evident effort to recall correctly the details of a terrible experience which had almost shaken intelligence.

"They didn't know any more," said Mrs. St. James. "They were just half-dead themselves with trying to save Drillick, who as long as he had any strength kept pulling them down, thinking—if he could think—that they were the poor 'little feller,' Hogan, that never came up again and whom he wanted to save so badly. By this time, the police had heard of the trouble, assistance from the pier reached the lads and they were brought up—all but poor little Hogan. The ambulance came and took Drillick, who we thought would never recover, to the Presbyterian Hospital. He is out now, and like these two, does not realize that he did anything extraordinary in risking his life to save another's. He is only sorrowful because the 'little feller' went down forever. This hot weather, all East Side children who can reach the docks are in the water most of the time, and a number are drowned. An hour before Hogan's death, another child about ten went out too far and never came back."

"Yellow's" real name is John Langer. His father is dead; his mother has been sick two months. Andrew Fox has no father. They are only street boys—the unconscious heroes of every-day life. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will interest itself in their future.

UNFAILING WELLS

ALL wells of happiness we dig,
For us their fulness to impart,
Must have their spring, their pure, sweet fount,
In love of God within the heart.
Then they will always, ever, be Full, sparkling, clear and running o'er—
Brooks by the way where we may drink,
To thirst for lasting joy no more.
All streams of life whose source is not
From this pure fount—Eternal Love—
Will in the end dry up—the years
An arid vale of Baca prove.

This heavenly love—not a base gift—
Brings ever with it sure reward.
Those who go out of self to serve,
Are living with the blessed Lord.
So let us love, for Love's own sake—
This is the one true happiness.
This shall enrich, enlarge the life,
Its sweetness other lives shall bless.
To love—to serve—herein is found
The secret of the purest joy.
Follow the Master, do his will,
And he shall all your powers employ.

His First Anniversary

The Story of a Desperado who was Converted in The Bowery Mission

HE certainly does not appear to be much of a desperado now. He is one of the quietest and gentlest of all the men that attend the Bowery Mission, and, however much it may surprise you, our congregation of homeless and ragged men contains a surprisingly large proportion of men of courtly manner and polished speech. He never attends a meeting without giving his testimony. It is generally only a few words, nervously and stammeringly uttered, in a very soft voice; then he steps into the background again, and for the rest of the meeting you will find him in some quiet corner, eagerly listening to other men, only the keen glance of his dark eyes showing how reverently he loves his God, his comrades and the dear old Mission.

Yet, among the many trophies of divine grace that have been won for Christ and the Kingdom at the Bowery Mission, very few have such a tragic history behind them as he who is the subject of this story. He must have been a man of extraordinary physical vitality, for although he has had a phenomenally tempestuous career and is now in his fifty-fifth year, he does not appear to be more than forty. Of middle height and wiry build, with a well-shaped head, just turning gray, and a pair of piercing hazel eyes, he would still be an exceedingly sprightly man were it not for a lameness caused by some of his toes having been shot off in one of the Indian wars under General Miles. One would never imagine that forty out of his fifty-five years of life had been spent in debauchery and sin. The only break in this long career of dissipation was a term of four and a half years spent in State prison, and the preliminary term of four months in the old Tombs prison while awaiting trial.

His parents were most respectable people, and all his family connections are to-day found in wealthy and aristocratic circles. He is the nephew of one of the most prominent and influential of present-day United States Senators. His two sisters are both the wives of prosperous business men, one of them a New York City millionaire. The latter is a devout Christian lady, who for many years prayed with an unshaken faith for the conversion of her erring brother. She is a regular reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and no one will peruse these lines, telling of the wonderful way in which her prayers were answered, with greater joy than she.

On one sad Thanksgiving Day, presuming on the prevailing charitable spirit of the season, he, somehow or other, stealthily gained admission to his sister's residence, and at the sight of the poor, ragged, shivering tramp that stood before her pleading for something to satisfy the gnawings of the terrible hunger that was upon him, her sisterly love melted all her stern resolves, and on getting a promise from him (alas! promises so often given before, and so often broken) she weepingly handed over to him fifty dollars with which to furnish him with clothing. When in the evening of that day he reeled into the saloon bar, which at that time was his headquarters, only thirteen cents of the fifty dollars remained, and he still wore his tramp's tattered rags.

When his father died in 1886 he inherited what to many men would have been quite a fortune. In a few short months not a penny remained—and not a penny had been righteously spent. Everything he flung wantonly away in riotous debauchery and vice.

At the age of twenty-two, he enlisted in the Fifth New York Troopers, and for five years was out at Fort Scott, Arizona and Fort Wichita, Colorado, seeing some very active and exciting service in the Indian wars which prevailed at that time. He had scarcely returned to New York City, after getting his discharge, when in a low saloon a dispute occurred in which he became involved. Whipping out of his hip pocket his revolver he shot and immediately killed one of the brawlers. Then there came the trial, the sentence, and the long term behind the gray walls of State prison. During his stay there, his old, grief-stricken mother kept up constant communication with him, and on the day of his release waited for him at the Grand Central depot. After meeting and greeting her, on some pretext he slipped away and within one hour from the time he left her he was arrested again for drunken brawling, only three blocks away in 39th street, and sent to Blackwell's Island. Was it any wonder that soon after the poor mother died of a broken heart?

Father and mother dead, and every door closed against him, he drifted, as so many thousands drift every year, to the Bowery. All the pride and ambition had gone out of his life. He did not want to work; would not work when he had the chance. For nearly eleven years he haunted the lowest and vilest resorts, living the aimless life of a Bowery tramp. During that time he paid frequent visits to the Bowery Mission, but not even the most sanguine worker there entertained much hope for him. And as the years went by, and the dull look on his weary face became duller, and that strange pall of gloom settled down upon him which is so characteristic of the chronic tramp, the hope became less.

Who shall dare to say that any man is hopeless after this? One night, the kindly janitor going his rounds from bench to bench, noticed the thin, worn face and haggard eyes, and spoke a cheery word to him. That kind word was the first star that appeared in the black sky above him. As he gazed up at it wonderingly, he caught sight of another. This time it was the sweet face of one of the sisters, who only smiled at him. She said nothing. But having seen these two stars he kept looking for others, and had not long to wait. Out they came, one by one, in all their glittering beauty. He began to listen to the testimonies. Something one of the men said one night was so like his own experience. It was falling from the lips of a young boy who, with radiant face, was telling how his mother prayed for him when "he was afar off," and there flashed before him the picture of that dear old face looking so wistfully into his own in the Grand Central depot, and to his own great surprise he found himself brushing the tears from his eyes. Then other stars of hope shone out. Passages of Scripture read from the platform seemed suddenly to glow before him with a strange and vivid meaning; the old hymns that had become so hackneyed in his ears that he had found no pleasure in singing them, startled him now with their beauty and force. He realized it was all true, and was meant for him. One night, twelve months ago, to the great surprise and delight of all the older workers of the mission, he gave his poor battered and beaten life to God.

We have just been celebrating his first anniversary. The first twelve months in the spiritual life of a Bowery Mission convert is a critical time. Oh, how eagerly it is watched! After the first milestone is passed, the road seems easier. But the new-born plant in so difficult a soil, is a great care. The frail bark pushed off into the breakers that dash against the coast line and show their white teeth, has to be ceaselessly steered and safeguarded. And when the comparatively deep and calm water is reached, can you wonder at our relief and rejoicing?

OUR · GRATEFUL · WAIFS · AT · MONT-LAWN

...QUEER LITTLE SCRAWLS BY MANY HAPPY LITTLE FOLKS—OUR TENT BOYS

WRITING a letter to papa, or mama, or the Sunday School teacher in the city, is one of the delightful and important affairs in child-life at Mont-Lawn. So nice it is to "sit right under the trees I'm telling my mamma about," and pen the laborious epistle which shall gladden the patient, loving mother, toiling away in the tenement home, by letting her know that her little lad or lass is well cared for, is happy, and going to come back brown and strong: and "well enough to help you, mamma"—as some dutiful small people phrase it. Such quaint, odd little letters as go off in the Mont-Lawn mail-bag—Italian, Russian, Spanish, and other languages contributing to swell this mass of English literature, much of which is funny and much of which is sad. Here are specimens:

"DAMO" AND "JIMMO"

Dere Mommer: i hope you are wel i am in gud helth Lizzie nannie and Mamie are alrite. i ete 10 slises of bred i got enuf onct. Are you working yet mommer. Your lovin Grace.

While this is brief, it is to the point:

Dear papa and mama: I am in good hands. I send my regards to the hole family.

Of equal interest with writing and sending off a letter to mama is receiving one from her. These brief epistles, often more poorly spelled than the child's, give some pathetic glimpses into tenement home life: as for instance, this:

My daughter Guttruge: I receaved yore too postels an was more than glad you like it an is in good Helth i am in good Helth but workin verry Hard it is verry warm hear so I am glad you are in the kuntry. I have got a nu washin' to do so no more now an be a good gurl and stay there as long as you can I went to see yore papa at the Hospitul las nite an he is no better he said tell Guttruge to be a good Gurl Yore Fond mamma.

And this:

My daughter: I am glad you are well and so happy. I am sorry you are coming home. It is so hot here and I am afraid you'll get sick again. Ask them if they'll keep you a little while longer. Your affectionate mamma.

To be allowed to help in the big dining tent or in the kitchen is considered a high honor. During our Fourth of July festival, while ice cream was being served to a great host of small people on the lawn, a lady visitor observed a cluster of boys and girls who had run forward from the tent to look on a minute. They had towels in their hands or on their shoulders.

"Why don't you go out there with the other children?" she asked.

"We've got to finish washing dishes."

WRITING A LETTER TO MAMA

This is as enthusiastic as the writer's powers of expression permitted him to be:

Dear Mamma: Susie and I are havin fine times. O, mamma, the food is ellegant. There is milk an bread an potatoes an meat an sometimes cookies. An vegetubbles out of the garding. An rides in the stage. An pickin dazes an blackeyed susanns an seein the farmers pig. We give him appuls an he grunts. Susie got a new dress off teacher. Its butifull pink. I got overalls an a blowse. Teacher sed she got em off a kmgs dorter livin far aways. O mamma, I wisht I cud live here all my life. I wisht you was here. Your truly child. TOMMY.

The fulness of this little boy's heart likewise taxed his powers of description:

The fields are very plesunt they are in full of bloom and Henery and Fred and I are very happy. We get good to ete and have good beds. We enjoy very much. Your fond son Willie.

There were so many in Freda's poor home that her parents were very glad for their two little girls to be away:

Dear Parents: Tillie don't want to go home. She loves the place. We are all right and happy. We swing in the cups every day. The teachers are like real mothers and so kind. We have good beds and it is so cool and nice. Freda.

"Give me your towels," she said, "and go ahead. My friends and I will wipe dishes in your places."

"O, no, ma'am," said that corps with great pride and doubtful appreciation of the intended kindness. "We don't give our towels to nobody; we don't want nobody to wipe our dishes for us; no, ma'am!"

"I think," said the lady in telling this afterwards, "you've got a good school of domestic science here. I never saw children love dish-washing before."

Every summer, Housemother Collins takes note of children who exhibit desire and ability to be useful, and who by another year will have passed beyond the age limit of guests. These are invited to come as helpers. Our cut shows two of our best tent boys; Damo and Jimmo they are called by their play-fellows who thus abbreviate their long and stately Italian names. Last spring, emboldened by a clear conscience and a great desire to come as helpers now that they are too old to come as guests, these lads indited an epistle to Miss Collins begging the privilege. To nothing short of a registered and specially delivered letter, for which they had saved up all the pennies they could make, would they entrust their precious request, and great was the satisfaction of all concerned when they were enrolled as tent-workers, and made their appearance, all puffed up with pride over this great and glorious distinction. They are of poor but respectable parents, and are worthy of the favor shown them, appreciating their long happy outing most heartily, as is shown by their faithful and willing performance of all their duties and their unfailing conformity to the simple rules of the Home.

YOU would like the lamp-chimneys that do not amuse themselves by popping at inconvenient times, wouldn't you?

A chimney ought not to break any more than a tumbler. A tumbler breaks when it tumbles.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass"—they don't break from heat, not one in a hundred; a chimney lasts for years sometimes.

Our "Index" describes all lamps and their proper chimneys. With it you can always order the right size and shape of chimney for any lamp. We mail it FREE to any one who writes for it.

Northfield's Gospel Camp

Spiritual Methods Studied in the Cool Shades of the Evangelistic Retreat....

IT is now demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of the multitudes who are now at Northfield, that the late D. L. Moody has a worthy and most capable successor in his eldest son. Will R. Moody, in his work at Northfield this season, has displayed the qualities of leadership, viz: firmness, discrimination and a winning grace of humility, added to a large fund of practical common sense in the management of great assemblages. He retains around him all of his father's trusted workers and speakers, and he is exceedingly chary of any innovations or of radical departures from the established methods of work at Northfield. Anything that violates the traditional spirit of the place—and especially everything that savors of fanaticism—is rigidly avoided.

Under God's blessing the "Round Top" meetings have been of special power, and their charm has been enhanced by the fact that near the human horse-shoe (which form the audience assumes seated on the grass), is the chaste monument erected to the great evangelist, reminding all of the love he bore these gatherings while he lived and conducted them.

One hundred and eighty boys recite every morning at the Hermon School, during the August heat. They are as bright and happy and ambitious in Recitation Hall as in the winter term and do as faithful work. These doors are thrown open to boys that else could never have a draught from this fountain of knowledge.

Miss Fanny Crosby, speaking at the recent Conference, said: "Mr. Moody, when Mr. Morgan was coming to New York City, said, 'Give Miss Crosby my love.'" And added, "I am so glad he sent that last message to me."

In spite of the extreme heat accompanying many of the days, the Conference meetings were well attended, and an enthusiasm that would neither be wilted nor dampened seemed to pervade the whole session. The meetings, which were under the leadership of Miss Effie K. Price, of Chicago, began July 13th and continued till July 23d. During this time, many of the foremost preachers and Bible teachers of the country addressed the Conference. Among them were Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, D.D., New York; Robert E. Speer; Rev. H. W. Pope, Sec. of the Northfield Extension Movement; Rev. J. F. Carson, D.D., Brooklyn; Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, India; Dr. John G. Paton, New Hebrides; Mrs. Montgomery, of Rochester, N. Y., and others equally well-known.

The spirit of missionary enterprise and of a desire for a higher plane of spiritual living characterized the Conference throughout. The delegation meetings and Bible classes were largely attended and a much larger number than ever before were present at the platform meetings, showing that the desire for close Bible study and the thirst for knowledge and information concerning practical work were dominant. The series of daily talks by Dr. C. I. Scofield, on "Christ in the Old Testament," was continued throughout the Conference, and proved exceedingly helpful.

The last meeting of the Conference was addressed by Mr. W. R. Moody and Robert E. Speer. Mr. Moody gave a few hearty words of farewell, after which Miss Price, in giving some statistics of the Conference said that 492 delegates had attended, and that sixty-two institutions and twelve denominations were represented.

A GROUP OF CITY DELEGATES TO THE NORTHFIELD 1900 CONFERENCE

The Dying Sailor and His Bible

ON January 6, 1897, I visited, in my pastoral work, the home of a young man who was dying of consumption. I had called on him previous to this visit, and he had told me in part about his past life. For several years he was a sailor, visiting nearly all the principal ports of the world and living a wild, reckless life. Exposure and dissipation had undermined his rugged constitution, and about six years before I met him he had been prostrated in a foreign sea-port, with a serious illness. Rallying at length, he was able to return to this country, and to his mother's home where he was carefully nursed. It was too late, however. Consumption developed and the poor fellow gradually wasted away. God, in his infinite mercy, heard a mother's prayers, and the son was converted.

On the morning of my visit mentioned above, I found the young man seated in an easy chair in his little bedroom. He could no longer lie down with any comfort. As I entered the room and seated myself beside him, with a word of greeting, I noticed that his Bible lay on the table before him, and made some remark concerning his having the Scriptures near at hand. He replied at once in the following words, which impressed me much and which I shall long remember: "This Bible is my loaf of bread. I enjoy feeding upon it more than I enjoy any other food. These are my happiest days. People think that I must feel miserable, but I do not. (He suffered much pain at times.) Once I was a wild, merry fellow, but I had no peace. Now I am happy. The days are not long enough for me now."

We talked for a little while, prayed together, and I departed, saying to the mother: "I came to comfort and encourage your son, but he has comforted and encouraged me." She replied: "He never complains."

A few days later I was called to conduct his funeral services and looked upon the calm, pale face, cold in death. We laid the body away in the little hill-top cemetery, with a storm beating upon us so furiously that it was well-nigh impossible to perform the last rites; but to some of us it only pictured in contrast the land of rest and more perfect peace into which the soul of our beloved brother had entered.

An India Famine Tragedy

The Advocate of India says: We learn from Thana that a Hindu has been arrested on a charge of murder, for burying his two children alive. The man admits his offense and the motive which prompted him to the commission of the deed is heartrending. From his statement it appears that owing to the prevailing scarcity he, his wife and two children went on to the relief works. While there his wife died and he became ill. Seeing that he could not shake off his fever, he left the works with his two children and wandered about starving. At last the time came when he could no longer endure the sufferings of his children, and so he murdered them and was on the eve of committing suicide, when he was arrested.

Our Simple Duty*

Service Rendered from Love Bringing Reward Unexpected by the Doer

EARNING a reward is an idea that should never get into the Christian's mind. He ought never to do anything for the sake of what he may receive for it. The nature implanted within him, the Spirit of Christ imparted to him will prompt him to do good deeds, and he will take a delight in service with no thought of receiving wages. He is no longer a servant, but a son. The son's service is more efficient than the servant's; he will take more trouble, make greater effort, act with more intelligence, have a keener desire for his father's interests; but it is not because he expects pay for what he does, but because he loves his father. Even the servant—who will do nothing that he is not paid to do and who thinks more of his wages than he does of his work—renders a poor service, and is an undesirable kind of man to have as a servant. The ideal servant is one who would do his work even if there were no wages to be paid him for doing it. He must have wages because he must live and pay his way; but as Christ said to his followers: "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things."

There is quite enough in the New Testament to assure us that there will be rewards. God is not unjust or unmindful of service, but so far are his people from reckoning of them that, as we see in the description of the final judgment (Matt. 25: 32-46), they are surprised when they learn that such deeds as they have done as the outflow of love in their hearts, are to be rewarded. The higher morality of Christ's kingdom presupposes a consecration of all that we have and are; and it would be as unworthy of us to demand a reward as it would be for a son to expect any reward for his honesty or a wife for her virtue. There is nothing more beautiful than the sight of a grown son showing tender affection for his aged mother, seeing that she has the best room in his house, the most comfortable chair and all the attention that he can surround her with. But how all that would be spoiled, if he asked her to pay for her board or was thinking of the money that would come to him at her death. Christianity never comes to us in the guise of a bargain. It does not promise heaven and the golden crown as a compensation for church-going and refraining from dissipation. The man who is kept from evil-doing only by the hope of reward for abstention, is no true member of the kingdom of God. He is fit for that kingdom only when he does these things voluntarily.

Christianity is a religion of being, not of doing. Those who attain nearest to Christ's ideal are not necessarily those who do some great thing, or render some conspicuous service; they are those who are most like him and have most of his spirit. From such people right conduct and self-sacrificing service will surely come; but it does not make them members of his kingdom. It simply indicates that they have the spirit of Christ, which is the real test of fitness. The apostle Paul said that even if he gave all his goods to feed the poor and though he gave his body to be burned, he was nothing without the love which might or might not be the motive cause of all that. So we learn what it was that Christ meant when he bade his followers say they were unprofitable servants. If they regarded themselves as servants, they were unprofitable. The utmost that they can do is poor and small compared with what their obligations are. So much has been done for them, so sweet and tender are the relations to which they have been admitted, that a life of constant, grateful service would be a small return as an expression of appreciation. One who realizes how much he owes to his Lord, welcomes an opportunity to do something that will please him, and rejoices in the work. It is a duty done from love and the less the doer thinks of reward the higher that reward will be.

Filipinos and the Gospel

Excellent Progress by the Y.M.C.A. Field Workers Among American Troops and Natives

WHILE the whole nation watches with painful interest the closing scenes of the long struggle in the Philippines, it is cheering to note that excellent spiritual work is being done among both our own soldiers and the natives. The building of the Army and Navy Young Men's Christian Association in Manila is the centre of a work that reaches the most remote stations on the island. The building itself was once occupied by Spanish soldiers as barracks and passed under our military control. It was badly in need of repairs, and was finally turned over to the Young Men's Christian Association, and opened Jan. 1, 1900. The building contains a hall seating 250 persons, library, reading, correspondence and game rooms, offices, storerooms for supplies that are shipped to the distant stations, a dormitory of twenty-five beds, bathrooms, and in a short time a good restaurant is to be added to the equipment. Now the building is crowded all the time with soldiers in the city on pass, together with men from the local garrisons and sailors on liberty. Seven regular meetings are held each week, and special lectures, entertainments and meetings always fill the hall to overflowing. In the month of June, 1900, there were twenty-one professed conversions in the building alone, and scores more in meetings elsewhere.

E. W. HEARN

Buildings are now occupied at Aparri, the metropolis of northern Luzon; at Dagupan, the northern terminal of the railroad, and Iloilo and Cebu, in the Visayan Islands; at Cavite, for the men of the navy. Then, in many of the 370 stations occupied by the U. S. Army, the commanding officers have set aside rooms where reading matter and writing materials are kept and stationery supplied when possible.

The traveling secretaries of the Army Young Men's Christian Association visit these points whenever possible, and in many places religious meetings are regularly conducted by officers or enlisted men who are interested. There are but few chaplains in the Philippines, and they work in perfect harmony with the secretaries, usually distributing supplies of stationery, reading matter, Testaments, Gospels, song books, etc., furnished through the Young Men's Christian Association. Special attention has been given to the needs of men in hospitals, particularly convalescents, and one of the secretaries, Dr. John M. Phipps, has given valuable assistance as surgeon in the field.

It is the universal opinion of Christian workers in the Philippines that such appreciation of effort and such need have never been seen in their experience. Many of the outlying posts have not yet been reached and whole companies have had no Gospel privileges for a full year and more.

The Young Men's Christian Association entered Manila with the conquering army, August 13, 1898, and the first Protestant service ever held in the city was conducted by the secretaries in their temporary quarters in Malate. A little later, a large tent was pitched near the Bridge of Spain, just in front of the present building, and here the work was vigorously carried on by Secretaries Glunz and Jackson, who are now recuperating in California, after two years' hard service. On the outbreak of the insurrection, Feb. 5, 1899, the distribution of the troops to the front took the secretaries to the firing-line, serving with the hospital corps in battle and visiting the men along the lines, holding group meetings and distributing supplies.

The great extension of the work was made possible in the autumn of 1899, by the generous gifts of friends of the soldier in the United States. The refitting of the building was paid for almost entirely by the sailors and soldiers and friends of the work in Manila, thus showing the local recognition the work receives. Immense amounts of literature have been distributed, and one of the most highly-prized gifts is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Gospel of John in Spanish and English. A few months ago one of these little books was found by an officer of the Third U. S. Cavalry in the quarters of a band of insurrectos near Badoc, in the province of Ilocos Norte, near the northwest corner of Luzon, and more than 250 miles north of Manila. This well-worn copy was without doubt used as a text-book for the study of English. Its wanderings would make an interesting story.

FILIPINOS AT BIGARA, GATHERING TO LEARN ENGLISH FROM OUR SOLDIERS

The desire of the Filipinos to learn English seems to be universal, and often whole families gather about our soldiers (as in the accompanying illustration), and patiently try to master English words and phrases. These are natives of the Tagalog tribe, from the province of Bulacan, just north of Manila. This desire to learn our language is further shown in the large attendance of public and private schools where English is taught. Here the mission workers find an open door, and a multiplied force is needed. The system that held this country for over three hundred years is at last shattered, and the people are awakening and trying to learn what makes America great. Thus far the forces of evil have been the most aggressive, and a wrong impression of Christian America is given these people.

Home Missionary Perils

Camping Out in a Land of Bears and Wolves—A Sample Pioneer Sunday School

THERE is much that is picturesque and romantic in the experience of the Sunday School missionary and not a little that is attended with discomfort and even peril. This letter, from Rev. T. S. Thompson, a missionary of the American Sunday School Union, is full of interest for all who have the cause of our frontier children at heart:

DEAR FRIENDS: I wish I could take you all with me on a trip to show you the homes and schools that part of your gift to the American Sunday School Union has helped. It would take us a long time to go to all of them, because they are scattered around in little cabins in the woods away up in Jackson County, Wisconsin. We start from my headquarters, at Sparta, and go north through Cataract, and on over the hills and through the sand belt, up through Irish Valley, past the Shamrock store and post office, and six miles further through the sand. The last three miles we do not see any houses, and very few cultivated fields. About the only sound we hear is the cow-bell and the song of the mosquitos or buzz of the big deer-flies as they venture to light on us. We are now in the "Bethel" district, about half way between Shamrock and Black River Falls in Jackson County. When I came to this field, four years ago, there were seven miles right here without a house; but now there is quite a nice little settlement, and a new schoolhouse.

Stop now on the bank of Brandy Creek, until I tell you of the first night I spent here. I had been through the neighborhood several times since the school house was built, and I wanted to canvass the district and start a Sunday School. For this purpose I went there last September. It was nearly night when I arrived there on the bank of the creek with my missionary wagon. I asked the man who lives in a little cabin across the road if I might put my team in his barn over night. This he kindly granted. While I was getting my bed made in the wagon a flock of gray timber wolves began howling down in the woods. This they did twice before I went to bed. The people there invited me to eat supper with them that night, and while we were eating the man told me he had tracked a bear across the road just above the house a few nights before; it had gone down through his garden and on into the woods. This made me a little timid about sleeping out in my wagon, but it was all I could do. After supper I helped the little boys get their sheep and calves shut up, so the wild animals would not take them, fastened the side curtains down tightly on my wagon, committed myself to God's care, and went to sleep. A few days later, this man told me that after I had gone away the next morning, he tracked a bear in the sand where it had come up quite close to where my wagon had been, and then went on down the road. The following Sunday night, after I had preached in the school-house, I went down by the Black River and slept in a little house there, and a wild cat or a lynx sat up in a tree close by and made the night hideous with his cries.

We organized the Sunday School last September.

QUESTIONS OF THE WEEK

1. What was the name or character of the dance which Salome danced before Herod and his court when the king commanded the slaying of John the Baptist?

The dance which Salome danced before Herod is said by tradition to have been the Romalis, an Oriental measure still known among the gipsy women of Spain. It is a sensuous pas seul (single dance). It is said that Salome accompanied her mother Herodias, into banishment in Dauphiny, on the borders of Spain, where she remained until her death by drowning in an icy river.

ROBERT VYSE.

2. What article formerly in common use in the household is used in the Bible as an emblem of God's favor and of the soul?

The candle. Job (ch. 29: 2, 3) speaks of the days when God's "candle shined" upon his "head." There is an allusion in his words probably to the custom of illuminating banquet rooms by lamps pendant from the ceiling. These shone literally upon the heads of the guests. Their cheering light was a symbol of God's smile beaming down upon the soul. The candle is also used as an emblem of the soul, for "the spirit of man is the candle of the Lord" (Prov. 20: 27), being, as it is, his gift to us, and inasmuch as by it we search the depths of our own minds and those of others, as one might search recesses by a candle's welcome aid. AMELIA HOYT.

Correct answers have been received also from Orra McFarland, G. E. Krauth and Mary Bennett.

3. What American President in an inaugural address made an unconscious rhyme, and what was the language used?

President Lincoln, in his second inaugural address, made use of this remarkable expression which is a perfect rhyme:

Fondly do we hope,
Fervently do pray
That this mighty scourge of war
May speedily pass away.

ROBERT H. FLEAGLE.

4. Does the New Testament teach that Christ is an advocate of unregenerate sinners or of believers only?

Yes, he intercedes for unregenerate sinners as well as for believers. If we had no stronger evidence of this we might infer it from his practice here on earth. On the cross he prayed for his murderers. And the same spirit of intercession he infuses into all his followers in proportion as they become like him. Stephen prayed for those who stoned him (Acts 7: 60). Paul prayed for those who disliked him (II. Tim. 4: 16). Besides this, Jesus directly inculcated this duty. "Pray for them," he said, "who despitefully use you, and persecute you" (Matt. 5: 44). Paul exhorted that prayers be made for all men, and specially mentions kings, nearly all of whom were wicked men in his time. This spirit of intercession, in its breadth as well as in its intensity, is of Christ and must distinguish him in heaven, as it did on earth.

But then, besides this we have most direct testimony to the same effect. It is written (Heb. 7: 25), "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Those whom he can save to the uttermost are surely the wicked, and for such he is said here to make intercession. If it be objected that in his great intercessory prayer (John 17) our Lord says, "I pray not for the world," I reply that his meaning clearly was that he was not praying for the world specially at that time. His own disciples, at that particular time, were the subjects of his solicitude and his prayers. To infer from the phrase quoted that he could never pray for the world is clearly a mistake, for in that very prayer he does pray that the world may believe that the Father had sent him.

JOSEPH HAMILTON.

5. What incidents in ancient time tell of two marvelous transformations — the first of stones being changed into human beings, the second of men being turned into stone?

The two incidents belong to Greek mythology. During the Iron Age, the human race had become so enfeebled and wicked that Zeus determined to destroy them by a great flood. Deucalion and Pyrrha, who had ascended Parnassus, alone were saved, and at the command of the gods became the founders of the present race. To this end, at the command of the oracle which directed them to cast their mother's bones behind them, they believing the earth to be their mother and her bones its stones, did as directed. The stones they threw became men and women and thus the earth was repeopled. There were several incidents in which single persons were turned into stone, such as Arsinoe by Aphrodite, and Atlas by Perseus; but the principal incident was that at the marriage of Perseus and Andromeda. On his return from slaying the Gorgon, Perseus came into Ethiopia and there found Andromeda, the daughter of the king, chained to a rock to propitiate the monster that was ravishing the land. He slew the monster on condition that Andromeda should become his wife. The maiden, however, had previously been promised to the king's brother, who, accompanied by a large force of soldiers, burst upon the marriage feast. But the sight of the Gorgon's head turned them all to stone. G. A. HAURY.

6. Should a person, who has lost faith in the creed of his church, continue his membership in it, if there is no church accessible which does represent his views?

The purpose of church membership is not so much to evidence publicly adherence to a particular creed, which is always a thing of human contrivance, as acknowledge our faith in the Divine Master and Supreme Head of the Church universal. The Church of Christ is not a social club from which one may properly resign at will. A member owes obligations to his fellows and to the non-church-goers which he cannot cast off for light reasons. Whether I am justified in absenting myself from the services of the local body of which I am a member, because I differ from its creed, depends wholly upon the extent to which I may disagree with its doctrine. If the divergence is not radical, it is my duty to hold my membership, and to attend for that will do me no harm, while my activity and aid in time and money will aid others both in and outside the Church, until I am able to join a Church whose creed is more consonant with my ideas. The maxim: "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things charity," ought to be the polar star of our modern evangelical churches. H. C. UNDERHILL.

7. What is the origin of the word "turncoat" and when was it first used?

In early times the dominion of the Duke of Saxony bordered on France on one side. Consequently, it was now and then to the interest of the ruler to show himself in favor of the French. Therefore, one of the earlier dukes hit upon the plan of having a coat made blue on one side and white on the other. When he wished to pass in his true character he wore the blue outside, but when he wanted to favor the French, he showed the white. From this practise a Saxon was nicknamed "Emanuel Turncoat," and now this name is often applied to one who forsakes his principles. But it is scarcely necessary to go to history for the origin of the term, since it was an ancient superstition that a turned coat served as a protection to the wearer.

G. A. HAURY.

8. What are the best means of getting emancipation from an evil habit?

I would hope that these five things may meet the case in hand: (1) Maintain a spirit of prayer both for the will and the ability to overcome. (2) Watch, that the temptation may get no favorable opportunity to attack. (3) Avoid the scenes, or the people, or the books that would favor the temptation. (4) Keep the mind wholesomely employed, so that the temptation may have no chance to intrude. (5) Be determined by the grace of God to overcome. JOSEPH HAMILTON.

9. Is it right for a man to relieve the wants of the wife and children of a man who takes advantage of the charitable gifts to use his own earnings in self-indulgence?

The fact that one who is morally and legally bound to support those who are rightfully dependent upon him, neglects to fulfil that obligation, does not absolve others who may be able to relieve the innocent sufferers, or render such aid less commendable. The wife and children, who without any fault on their part, are deprived of the aid to which they are entitled, are practically in the position of the widow and the orphan, whom we are bound to provide for. They should be cared for first and, if possible, aided to help themselves while at the same time and as soon as possible, the faithless and self-indulgent husband and father should be compelled by the most stringent pressure of the law and imprisonment, if need be, to perform the duties he assumed upon his marriage. There is really no reason why a charitable person should hesitate to furnish private benevolence under such circumstances, for, if he do not, the State will have to do so or the wife and children will starve. H. C. UNDERHILL.

10. Was the child Jesus taken to Egypt as Matthew says (2: 14) or to Jerusalem as Luke says (2: 22)?

There is no discrepancy between Matthew and Luke. Both statements are correct. When about five weeks old Jesus was taken into the temple at Jerusalem. The offering of the doves shows Mary's poverty, and also that she had not then received from the wise men the gift of gold needful for their journey into Egypt. It is distinctly stated that Herod did not immediately proceed to take hostile measures. He waited for the return of the wise men, and probably only after the lapse of some weeks did he realize that he was "mocked of the wise men." Joseph and Mary thus had time to make their escape into Egypt, Herod having calculated the time according to the answers of the wise men to his "diligent" inquiries (Matt. 2: 16), fixed on two years as the limit of age. This shows that there was ample time for both the presentation in Jerusalem and the flight into Egypt. Luke has omitted the flight into Egypt, recorded by Matthew. But he has not denied it; nor are his words to be pressed, as if he meant to affirm that they went immediately to Nazareth.

JOHN HINDMAN.

BISHOP THOBURN PLEADS FOR INDIA'S ORPHANS

I AM constantly hearing, by letters and through the press, that the extraordinary response of the American people to the call which reached them from India during the great famine has produced a profound impression among nearly all classes in the great Indian Empire. The Government of India—and I embrace in that term officials of various ranks, from the Viceroy down to the subordinate magistrates—have a hundred times over given expression to their cordial appreciation of the help sent from the United States, and very many have expressed their supreme surprise that people living so far away should have taken up this good work with so much earnestness and vigor. As an American missionary, I am extremely thankful to note these facts, knowing, as all missionaries in the East must know, that the ultimate effect will be favorable in many ways to the great work which missionaries have in hand.

While many hundreds and even thousands deserve a word of praise for what they have done in this movement, I think it will be acknowledged by all acquainted with the facts that Dr. Louis Klopsch and his assistants have fairly earned the position as leaders in the whole movement. The power of a single newspaper has been strikingly exhibited by the use made of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in arresting public attention and stirring the public conscience so as to bring it to bear in a practical way upon the duty of American Christians to the outlying parts of the earth. I have received no formal instructions, and yet I think I may assume to speak not only for our own missionaries, but for the missionary body generally, when I say that we owe a lasting debt of gratitude to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and to all assistants in this great effort, for the help already sent and for the wise plans formed for continued aid.

The care of the orphans left upon the hands of the missionaries brings with it an obligation more serious and far-reaching in character than the ordinary reader in America can understand. Before this famine came, the mission with which I am connected, had assumed the care of more than 3,000 children. When I first went to India, forty-one years ago, we became involved in this kind of work almost immediately. We assumed the care of probably 300 orphans as far back as 1861. The sons and daughters of some of these orphans are now valuable preachers and teachers in our extended work. I cannot say just how many orphans are in the hands of missionaries, but one of our brethren has notified me that he thinks in our own mission the number exceeds 7,000! Sad experience has taught us that many of these will die. Some will be sought and removed by relatives, and others will run away as soon as the famine is over, but after making allowances for a large decrease from such causes, it remains absolutely certain that quite a host of helpless orphans, and perhaps, also, a little army of widows, will be left to be provided for. I trust that those who have assisted so splendidly thus far, will continue the special work needed for at least six or seven years, until these needy orphans shall have been transformed into a little working army of intelligent Christian men and women.

J. M. THOBURN.

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS

S. S., Ottumwa, Ia. Was it not the worst of stupidity upon the part of civilized legations and missionaries to have remained in Pekin when hostilities were imminent, being perfectly familiar with the treachery and unreliability of the Chinese, and their attitude toward the foreigner? Would it in the least have been a sacrifice or belittling of principle, or a dereliction of duty, to have immediately withdrawn to a place of safety, under the existing circumstances?

There are many things in connection with the Pekin troubles that cannot be explained until the envoys and missionaries are at liberty. It would be absurd for us to condemn them, without knowing all the facts. Moreover, it must be admitted that they were in the best position to judge as to the proper course to pursue. A minister or consul would be disgraced were he to desert his post until the last extremity, and it should not be forgotten that the desertion of their legations would have been tantamount to admitting that a condition of war existed—the very thing they were all striving to avert.

Referring to a recent question in THE MAIL BAG concerning the origin of the queue, Rev. J. J. Munro, Chaplain of the Tombs Prison, New York, writes:

Any Chinese found on the streets of Pekin, or any other city for that matter, without his queue would be considered a rebel against his government. On the other hand any Chinaman who has cut off his pigtail in the United States would be afraid to return to China for fear of losing his life. Those Chinamen in this country and Europe who still cling to the pigtail do so because they hope some day to return to the Flowery Kingdom to die. In a word, the queue or pigtail is an evidence of loyalty to the Manchu dynasty and not a mark of respectability, as the poorest and most depraved beggar in the empire is compelled to wear it as much as the high-caste mandarin.

Concerning the building up of physical strength, a reader, (B. J. Kendall, M.D., of Saratoga), sends this suggestion:

The last quart of the milking, or the "strippings" taken immediately after milking, before it has parted with any of the animal heat, is the most valuable thing known to build up a person who is thin and emaciated from any cause. The "strippings" is nearly all cream. When taken immediately after milking, while it contains all the animal heat and before any change has taken place it is absorbed at once into the circulation. The very last of the milking should be taken. No other food has ever proved so successful.

DR. TALMAGE WRITES OF HIS VISIT TO THE ROYAL PALACE AT COPENHAGEN

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE King of Denmark was absent from his capital, and so the Crown Prince received us in his palace and all his family came in with hearty greetings, and a more delightful domestic group was never gathered. From the unconventional manner in which they received my family and myself, one would not think there had ever been a crown in the ancestral line or ever would be. Himself on the way to a throne and a brother of the Princess of Wales and of the King of Greece and of the Dowager-Empress of Russia and all his life mingling with royalties, he was less pretentious than any of the officers in the anteroom of the palace. He freely and familiarly conversed of the great international questions which are now disturbing Europe and Asia. He will soon take the government, for his father is eighty-four years of age and must soon by natural law put down the sceptre. The Queen, though heir to uncounted millions, has not been made worldly, but is chiefly interested in religious work in all parts of the world. The home-life of this family is an illustrious example to all the domestic life of Denmark, as the home-life of his sister on the throne of Russia was an inspiring example to all the homesteads of Russia.

The oldest daughter of this princely household is a marvel of beauty and good sense, speaking English almost as well as Danish. The younger daughter excused herself for an afternoon horseback ride, and on our way out through the palace park we saw her riding under the careful guardianship of a groom. After conversation the whole group accompanied us in a ramble through the royal gardens; amid trees themselves monarchs and by fountains that had crowns of rainbow and by flower beds where queens of beauty reigned. After the ladies of our party had captured all the princely autographs they wished to win, we left this brilliant home. But the kindness of these royal folks did not cease when we descended the steps, for the lovely group of the palace stood waving to us from the windows as long as we were in sight, so that the warmth of the welcome was not more marked than was the heartiness of the good-by.

We rode through a forest where royalty hunts, and the deer stood quietly watching and fearing nothing, as though they knew we could not shoot. But what regard for trees! Would that we had as much of such reverence in America. Alas for the iconoclasm of the ax! How it has defaced landscapes and despoiled climates in our own beloved land! But here, in this royal park, they stand undisturbed and honored by all who pass. Vast umbrageousness, with affluence of foliage in full leaf, letting fall here and there a few yards of sunshine to make the scene more picturesque and bewitching. Oh, the trees! No one but Almighty God could make one—so graceful, so strong, so uplifting, so suggestive, so grand, so intermediate of earth and heaven. No wonder they have been copied in the pillars of temples, for many of the cathedral pillars are only trees in stone. Aye, this entire king's forest in Denmark is a cathedral ages ago dedicated, and these bending branches are the arches, and this fountain is the baptismal font, and the birds are the choristers at matins and vespers, morning and evening praising the Lord, and when shrill winds sweep through this forest they sound the soprano, and the roaring thunders roll the bass in the Grand March of God in the storm. Style of a cathedral built by the Creator thousands of years before the architects drew the plan for St. Paul's at London, or St. Peter's at Rome, or St. Mark's at Venice, or St. Sophia's at Constantinople, or St. Isaac's at St. Petersburg. We wonder not at what George W. Morris, the great song-writer of America, told us in our boyhood. He said he was seated in an audience in New York City when a great vocalist was rendering Morris' famous song, "Woodman, Spare that Tree," and an aged man in the audience was so wrought upon by the ballad that he rose, and with tears rolling down his cheeks cried out: "Will the singer who has just sung that song please to tell us whether the woodman did spare that tree?"

It is remarkable that Copenhagen seems yet presided over by Thorwaldsen's spirit, although that greatest sculptor of his time dropped dead in the theatre of this city more than half a century ago. Though born here, a comparative small part of his life was passed in this Danish capital. His father, a carver of figureheads for ships, the immortal son began with such cuttings in wood and kept on until for all ages to come he carved in stone the figures of Day and Night and the Seasons and Adonis and Ganymedes and Mercury and the Graces, and five hundred specimens of sculpture. When he returned from Rome, where he chose to study and work for the most of his artist's life, not only Copenhagen, but the nation, joined in procession to welcome him. He sleeps in the yard of the museum named after him, in a bank of flowers, the place selected by himself. But whichever way you go in the city, you find something Thorwaldsenian. While you worship in one of the churches, the twelve apostles look down upon you while they are wrapped in robes of marble that seem soft as velvet, and garments, the curves and wrinkles of which seem the work of a clothier rather than of a sculptor, while the countenances of the sacred twelve give expression to the courage or the caution or the wisdom or the faith or the love which was supposed to be the apostolic characteristic. Indeed, the most of Thorwaldsen's later works were consecrated to religion.

To me the most impressive of all his statuary is his figure of Christ. It is gigantic in size, but the alliance of tenderness and power in the countenance of our Lord, and the outspread arms of invitation, and the planting of the foot with infinite firmness, proclaim him ready to wipe a tear, or able to save a world. What power in sculptor's chisel to preserve from age to age the heroes, the emancipators, the rulers, the orators, the statesmen, the mighty men and women of the world. In the streets or public squares of all the great capitals of Europe there are equestrians that seem in saddle of bronze riding out of the past into the present. The equestrian statue of Peter the Great in Admiralty Square, St. Petersburg, is most remarkable; two sailors were so impressed with it that they resolved to ascend it, and having been accustomed to climb the mast they quite easily climbed this great statue, and one of them seated himself on the bronze horse before Peter the Great and the other behind him. But this gallop of the heavens was interfered with by the police who considered it a desecration for these sailors to attempt to ride with the famous emperor. The offenders were arrested and tried and fined three hundred roubles each. They complained to the court that the fine was excessive, but the judge replied: "If people ride with royalty they ought to expect to pay for the honor." In a more sensible way than that employed by those sailors, we all feel like expressing our admiration for the sublime art of sculpture.

To us the sculptor's chisel means more than painter's pencil. Though so long this art of expression in stone has impressed the world it will be about the last art to leave it. Having looked into the faces of other centuries, it will look into the face of the last century of the world's existence. After most of the other arts have perished at the end of the world, and the painter's canvas has crumpled in the last conflagration, and the musician's harp-strings have broken under the fingering of the last fire, sculpture will still confront the ruin of the earth, its Canova and Thorwaldsen statuary baptized in flame, and the equestrians in stirrups of bronze and marble will ride their horses into the red surges of a burning world.

MRS. AMY MEKEEL AND DESCENDANTS TO THE FIFTH GENERATION

FIVE GENERATIONS

A RECORD of longevity is usually a testimonial of right living. Regular habits, amiability, temperance and moderation in all things, are, as a rule, the essentials to the alloted limit of threescore years and ten. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a familiar guest in a number of homes where four generations gather around the hearth-stone. Here is a letter from one of our friends, who sends with it a photograph, reproduced above, representing five generations of her family. The writer is Mrs. W. J. Mekeel, Nelsonville, N. Y. The story she tells is truly that of a fruitful and bountiful life:

My mother, Mrs. Amy Mekeel, died last July, aged ninety. Her maiden name was Ferris. She was married seventy-four years ago to Peter Mekeel. Their family consisted of eight children, five of whom survive them; there are fourteen grandchildren, sixteen great-grandchildren and two great-great-grandchildren. Mother embraced religion in her early years; her long life was one of exemplary piety and she was beloved by all who knew her. She was the youngest of seven children, all but one of whom lived to a ripe old age. Father died in his eighty-second year. Mother's oldest child living at the time this picture was taken was sixty-eight years old. The daughter and great-grandchild in the picture represent their oldest brothers who are dead.

A Village Minister's Jubilee

There recently occurred at Sawbridgeworth, England, the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Rev. James Wood's pastorate of the Congregational Church there. Ministers from neighboring and distant churches, without respect to creed, were present to congratulate the aged servant of God and his good wife. The first feature of the celebration was a social hour in the schoolroom, where little tea-tables were set forth decked with flowers, and where the Ladies' Working Meetings presented Mrs. Wood with a great bunch of yellow roses. The congregation had already given their pastor a handsome check. At the public meeting in the chapel, Professor Care, Principal of Hackney College, Mr. Wood's Alma Mater, who was among the speakers, remarked upon the joy, the real joy of a village pastor's life, who must have seen several generations grow up around him. It is a grand thing to be permitted to serve God in the pulpit for fifty years.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

THE KING'S GARDEN

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Song of Solomon 5: 1: . . . I am come into my garden

THE Bible is a great poem. We have in it faultless rhythm and bold imagery and startling antithesis and rapturous lyric and sweet pastoral and instructive narrative and devotional psalm: thoughts expressed in style more solemn than that of Montgomery, more bold than that of Milton, more terrible than that of Dante, more natural than that of Wordsworth, more impassioned than that of Pollok, more tender than that of Cowper, more weird than that of Spenser. This great poem brings all the gems of the earth into its coronet and it weaves the flames of judgment into its garlands and pours eternal harmonies in its rhythm. Everything this book touches it makes beautiful, from the plain stones of the summer threshing-floor to the daughters of Nahor filling the troughs for the camels; from the fish-pools of Heshbon up to the Psalmist praising God with diapason of storm and whirlwind, and Job's imagery of Orion, Arcturus and the Pleiades.

My text leads us into a scene of summer redolence. The world has had a great many beautiful gardens. Charlemagne added to the glory of his reign by decreeing that they be established all through the realm — deciding even the names of the flowers to be planted there. Henry IV., at Montpellier, established gardens of bewitching beauty and luxuriance, gathering into them Alpine, Pyrenean and French plants. One of the sweetest spots on earth was the garden of Shenstone, the poet. His writings have made but little impression on the world; but his garden, "The Leasowes," will be immortal. To the natural advantages of that place was brought the perfection of art. Arbor and terrace and slope and rustic temple and reservoir and urn and fountain here had their crowning. Oak and yew and hazel put forth their richest foliage. There was no life more diligent, no soul more ingenious than that of Shenstone, and all that diligence and genius he brought to the adornment of that one treasured spot. He gave three hundred pounds for it; he sold it for seventeen thousand. And yet, I am to tell you to-day of a richer garden than any I have mentioned. It is the garden spoken of in my text, the garden of the Church, which belongs to Christ, for my text says so. He bought it, he planted it, he owns it, and he shall have it. Walter Scott, in his outlay at Abbotsford, ruined his fortune; and now, in the crimson flowers of those gardens, you can almost think or imagine that you see the blood of that old man's broken heart. The payment of the last one hundred thousand pounds sacrificed him. But I have to tell you that Christ's life and Christ's death were the outlay of this beautiful garden of the Church, of which my text speaks. Oh, how many sighs and tears and pangs and agonies! Tell me, ye women who saw him hang! Tell me, ye executioners who lifted him and let him down! Tell me, thou sun that didst hide; ye rocks that fell! "Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it." If the garden of the Church belongs to Christ, certainly he has a right to walk in it. Come, then, O blessed Jesus, to-day; walk up and down these aisles, and pluck what thou wilt of sweetness for thyself!

The Church, in my text, is appropriately compared to a garden, because it is a place of choice flowers, of select fruits and of thorough irrigation.

That would be a strange garden in which there were no flowers. If nowhere else, they would be along the borders or at the gateway. The homeliest taste will dictate something, if it be only the old-fashioned hollyhock or dahlia or daffodil; but if there be larger means, then you will find the Mexican cactus and blazing azalea and clustering oleander. Well, now, Christ comes to his garden and he plants there some of the brightest spirits that ever flowered upon the world. Some of them are violets, inconspicuous, but sweet as heaven. You have to search and find them. You do not see them very often, perhaps, but you find where they have been by the brightened face of the invalid and the sprig of geranium on the stand and the new window-curtains keeping out the glow of the sunlight. They are, perhaps, more like the ranunculus, creeping sweetly along amid the thorns and briars of life, giving kiss for sting; and many a man who has had in his way some great black rock of trouble, has found that they have covered it all over with flowery jasmine running in and out amid the crevices. These flowers in Christ's garden are not, like the sunflower, gaudy in the light, but wherever darkness hovers over a soul that needs to be comforted, there they stand, night-blooming cereuses. But in Christ's garden there are plants that may be better compared to the Mexican cactus—thorns without, loveliness within; men with sharp points of character. They wound almost every one that touches them. They are hard to handle. Men pronounce them nothing but thorns, but Christ loves them notwithstanding all their sharpnesses. Many a man has had a very hard ground to cultivate, and it has only been through severe trial he has raised even the smallest scrap of grace. A very harsh minister was talking to a very placid elder, and the placid elder said to the harsh minister: "Doctor, I do wish you would control your temper." "Ah," said the minister to the elder, "I control more temper in five minutes than you do in five years." It is harder for some men to do right than for other men to do right. The grace that would elevate you to the seventh heaven might not keep your brother from knocking a man down. I had a friend who came to me and said, "I dare not join the Church." I said, "Why?" "Oh," he said, "I have such a violent temper. Yesterday morning I was crossing very early at the Jersey City Ferry, and I saw a milkman pour a large quantity of water into the milk-can, and I said to him: "I think that will do," and he insulted me, and I knocked him down. Do you think I ought to join the Church?" Nevertheless, that very same man, who was so harsh in his behavior, loved Christ, and could not speak of sacred things without tears of emotion and affection. Thorns without, sweetness within—the best specimen of Mexican cactus I ever saw.

There are others planted in Christ's garden who are always radiant, always impressive—more like the roses of deep hue that we occasionally find, called "giants of battle;" the Martin Luthers, St. Pauls, Chrysostoms, Wickliffes, Latimers and Samuel Rutherfords. What in other men is a spark in them is a conflagration. When they sweat, they sweat great drops of blood. When they pray, their prayer takes fire. When they preach, it is a Pentecost. When they fight, it is a Thermopylæ. When they die, it is a martyrdom. You find a great many roses in the gardens, but only a few "giants of battle." Men say, "Why don't you have more of them in the Church?" I say, "Why don't you have in the world more Humboldts and Wellingtons?" God gives to some, ten talents, to others, one.

In this garden of the Church which Christ has planted, also find the snowdrops, beautiful but cold-looking, seemingly another phase of winter. I mean those Christians who are precise in their tastes, unimpassioned, pure as snowdrops and as cold. They never shed any tears, they never get excited, they never say anything rashly, they never do anything precipitately. Their pulses never flutter, their nerves never twitch, their indignation never boils over. They live longer than most people, but their life is in a minor key. They never run up to "C" above the staff. In their music of life they have no staccato passages. Christ planted them in the Church, and they must be of some service or they would not be there; snowdrops—always snowdrops.

Again, the Church may be appropriately compared to a garden, because it is a place of fruits. That would be a strange garden which had in it no berries, no plums or peaches or apricots. The coarser fruits are planted in the orchard or they are set out on the sunny hillside; but the choicest fruits are kept in the garden. So in the world outside the Church, Christ has planted a great many beautiful things —patience, charity, generosity, integrity; but he intends the choicest fruits to be in the garden, and if they are not there, then shame on the Church. Religion is not a mere flowering sentimentality. It is a practical, life-giving, healthful fruit—not posies, but apples. "Oh," says somebody, "I don't see what your garden of the Church has yielded." Where did your asylums come from? and your hospitals? and your institutions of mercy? Christ planted every one of them; he planted them in his garden. When Christ gave sight to Bartimeus he laid the corner-stone of every blind asylum that has ever been built. When Christ soothed the demoniac of Galilee he laid the corner-stone of every lunatic asylum that has ever been established. When Christ said to the sick man: "Take up thy bed and walk," he laid the corner-stone of every hospital the world has ever seen. When Christ said: "I was in prison and ye visited me," he laid the corner-stone of every prison-reform association that has ever been organized. The Church of Christ is a glorious garden, and it is full of fruit. I know there is some poor fruit in it. I know there are some weeds that ought to be thrown over the fence. I know there are some crab-apple trees that ought to be cut down. I know there are some wild grapes that ought to be uprooted; but are you going to destroy the whole garden because of a little gnarled fruit? You will find worm-eaten leaves in Fontainebleau, and insects that sting in the fairy groves of the Champs Elysees. You do not tear down and destroy the whole garden because there are a few specimens of gnarled fruit. I admit there are men and women in the Church who ought not to be there; but let us be just as frank and admit the fact that there are hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of glorious Christian men and women—holy, blessed, useful, consecrated, and triumphant. There is no grander collection in all the earth than the collection of Christians. There are Christian men in every church whose religion is not a matter of psalm-singing and church-going. Tomorrow morning that religion will keep them just as consistent and consecrated in their worldly occupation as it ever kept them at the communion-table. There are women with us to-day of a higher type of character than Mary of Bethany. They not only sit at the feet of Christ, but they go out into the kitchen to help Martha in her work, that she may sit there too. There is a woman who has a drunken husband, who has exhibited more faith and patience and courage than Ridley in the fire. He was consumed in twenty minutes. Hers has been a twenty years' martyrdom. Yonder is a man who has been fifteen years on his back, unable to feed himself, yet calm and peaceful as though he lay on one of the green banks of heaven, watching the oarsmen dip their paddles in the crystal river! Why, it seems to me this moment as if St. Paul threw to us a pomologist's catalogue of the fruits growing in this great garden of Christ—love, joy, peace, patience, charity, brotherly kindness, gentleness, mercy; glorious fruit, enough to fill all the baskets of earth and heaven.

Again, the Church in my text is appropriately called a garden, because it is thoroughly irrigated. No garden could prosper long without plenty of water. I have seen a garden in the midst of a desert, yet blooming and luxuriant. All around was dearth and barrenness; but there were pipes, aqueducts, reaching from this garden up to the mountains, and through those aqueducts the water came streaming down and tossing up into beautiful fountains, until every root and leaf and flower were saturated. That is like the Church. The Church is a garden in the midst of a great desert of sin and suffering; but it is well irrigated, for "our eyes are unto the hills from whence cometh our help." From the mountains of God's strength there flow down rivers of gladness. "There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of our God." Preaching the Gospel is one of the aqueducts. The Bible is another. Baptism and the Lord's supper are aqueducts. Water to slake the thirst, water to wash the unclean, water tossed high up in the light of the Sun of Righteousness showing us the rainbow around the throne. Oh, was there ever a garden so thoroughly irrigated? Everything comes from above: pardon from above, joy from above, adoption from above, sanctification from above.

Would that now God would turn on the waters of salvation, that they might flow down through his heritage, and that this day we might each find our places to be "Elims" with twelve wells of water and threescore and ten palm trees.

Hark! I hear the latch of the garden gate, and I look to see who is coming. I hear the voice of Christ. "I am come into my garden." I say: "Come in, O Jesus we have been waiting for thee; walk all through the paths. Look at the flowers look at the fruit; pluck that which thou wilt for thyself." Jesus comes into the garden and up to that old man, and touches him, and says: "Almost home father: not many more aches for thee; I will never leave thee; take courage a little longer and I will steady thy tottering steps and I will soothe thy troubles and give thee rest. Courage, old man." Then Christ goes up another garden path, and he comes to a soul in trouble and says: "Peace! all is well. I have seen thy tears. I have heard thy prayer. The sun shall not smite thee by day nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; he will preserve thy soul. Courage, O troubled spirit!"

Then I see Jesus going up another garden path, and I see great excitement among the leaves, and I hasten up to that garden path to see what Jesus is doing there, and lo! he is breaking off flowers, sharp and clean from the stem and I say: "Stop, Jesus, do not kill those beautiful flowers." He turns to me and says: "I have come into my garden to gather lilies, and I mean to take these up to a higher terrace, for the garden around my palace, and there I will plant them; and in better soil and in better air they shall put forth brighter leaves and sweeter redolence, and no frost shall touch them forever." And I looked up into his face and said: "Well, it is thy garden, and thou hast a right to do what thou wilt with it. Thy will be done!"—the hardest prayer a man ever made.

It has seemed as if Jesus Christ took the best; from many of your households the best one is gone. You know that she was too good for this world; she was the gentlest in her ways, the deepest in her affection; and when at last the sickness came you had no faith in medicines. You knew that the hour of parting had come, and when, through the rich grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, you surrendered that treasure, you said: "Lord Jesus take it—it is the best we have; take it Thou art worthy!" The others in the household may have been of grosser mold. She was of the finest.

The heaven of your little ones will not be fairly begun until you get there. All the kindnesses shown them by immortals will not make them forget you. There they are, the radiant throngs that went out from your homes. I throw a kiss to the sweet darlings. They are all well now in the palace. The crippled child has a sound foot now. A little lame child says: "Ma, will I be lame in heaven?" "No my darling, you won't be lame in heaven." A little sick child says: "Ma, will I be sick in heaven?" "No, my dear, you won't be sick in heaven." A little blind child says: "Ma, will I be blind in heaven?" "No, my dear, you won't be blind in heaven." They are all well there.

I notice that the fine gardens sometimes have high fences around them, and I can not get in. It is so with a king's garden. The only glimpse you ever get of such a garden is when the king rides out in his splendid carriage. It is not so with this garden, this King's garden. I throw wide open the gate and tell you all to come in. No monopoly in religion. Whosoever will, may. Choose now between a desert and a garden.

LIKE ANGELS OF MERCY : :

The Sisters of the Deaconess Home in New York and their Work Among the Poor : : :

IN a New York neighborhood almost wholly given over to boarding-houses, one's eye is attracted by a stately old brick mansion, with twice the street frontage of any other in the block. A brass tablet bears the inscription, "New York Deaconess Home and Training School of the Methodist Episcopal Church." On entering, one is impressed with the spacious hall, the tiled marble floor, the substantial furniture, the broad, inviting staircase, all speaking of luxurious private ownership in days gone by. It is said that high officials from foreign lands have been entertained there, and one well-founded tradition points out a room as having been once occupied by the Prince of Wales. The building is temporarily adapted to the use of the deaconesses; it is not a permanent home. Like Paul, this family lives in its "own hired house;" but it is a growing family and its present accommodations will soon be inadequate.

Beginning in Chicago in June, 1887, Deaconesses Homes were organized in various cities, until now the work is represented in every large city, and institutions under deaconess management, including hospitals, orphanages, homes for the aged, Settlements and literary schools have spread from ocean to ocean. Nearly one thousand deaconesses are employed in these various lines. The Home in New York was organized in 1888 under a board of managers, of which John S. Huyler is the present president. Deaconesses are trained, costumed, unsalaried women, authorized by the Church and giving all their time to Christian work. The trained deaconesses and the students in training live together under the same roof in the capacity of older and younger sisters. In early days, when five was the number of the entire family, the one lonesome student crept away into the garret that she might have a good, homesick cry. There the superintendent found her and comforted her with prophetic visions of a day when her sisters should crowd the tables and throng the halls. The present family of over forty has fulfilled her expectation, but an enlarged vision now claims that this number must be quadrupled within the coming five years.

The deaconess is a familiar visitor in all parts of the city. The neat black gown relieved by white collar and cuffs, the small black bonnet with the white ties, and the smiling face carry sunshine into many dark alleys and Christless homes. In the Italian, Swedish and German neighborhoods, one may trace her footsteps and see the glad smile of appreciation break over the faces of the dwellers as the deaconess greets them in their loved mother-tongue. In the streets of the Jewish quarters she is known by the children as a "Jesus-teacher"; in the sin-darkened tenement homes of the East Side she is known as an angel of mercy. In homes of wealth as well as of poverty she is an ever-welcome visitor, her one desire being to open the way that the Sun of Righteousness may shed his beams over all, rich and poor alike. She gathers neglected children from the paved courts and the crowded streets—their only playground—into her children's classes and there has opportunity to teach them by precept and example the gospel of cleanliness, the unwritten law of good behavior; to impress on their loving little hearts moral precepts and to acquaint them with "the old, old story" of which children never tire.

She believes that a well-ordered home is the basis of family happiness, so she gathers the little girls from eight to twelve years—the housekeepers of coming days—into kitchen-garden classes, and instructs them in all housewifely acts. With toy dishes they learn to set the table and then serve imaginary dinners to their guests. In like manner, the future chambermaids learn bed-making; the laundresses to sort the clothes, starch and iron them. Lessons in marketing are also given and the need of such lessons is frequently demonstrated. One day the subject of discussion was "Meats," and in response to the question: "Where do we get pork?" one bright little girl answered: "It's what comes in the can with baked beans."

Side by side with the efforts in behalf of the children are placed those for the mother; for the deaconess believes in strengthening in every possible way that sacred tie which unfortunate environments so often weaken. The mother should be the child's ideal; but she cannot be, unless her threefold nature is as carefully developed and trained as that of her child. The Mothers' Meetings offer excellent opportunities for such work. The mother is urged to come, with her baby, if necessary, and bring her mending. In cases of extreme poverty, materials are furnished and she learns to lay the pattern, to cut, to baste and to sew until the finished garment is her reward.

A brief devotional service is held at the beginning of each meeting. While the busy mothers sew, a helpful book is read by the deaconess. At other times, she directs the conversation. Sometimes a lecture on child culture is given by a nurse or a woman physician. A social time, with refreshments, forms a fitting close to this happy afternoon.

DEACONESS WORK AMONG THE POOR CHILDREN OF THE SLUMS

A GROUP OF YOUNG DEACONESSES

When sickness finds its way into the tenement home, the deaconess is at once sent for, and her daily visit is often the one bright spot in the patient's life. She brings fresh linen from the "supply closet" at the Home, a small sum from the emergency fund to buy medicine and delicacies. She moves the bed to the quietest corner away from draughts; brings order out of chaos in the crowded sick-room and by countless little attentions adds to the patient's comfort, feeling, as she ministers, that it is service rendered her Master in the person of one of the least ones. Sickness finally softens the hard nature, and bitter complainings give way to tears of penitence. The deaconess finds the opportunity for which she has prayed, and the minister to the body becomes the minister to the soul.

Sometimes the deaconess is called on to be the arbiter in family difficulties; to decide between husband and wife, or mother and child, to urge the indissolubility of the marriage tie; to suggest methods of winning the drinking husband back to sobriety; or to comfort hearts aching under an awful load of bereavement.

At the Deaconess Home, the gala days of the year are Thanksgiving and Christmas. The "more blessedness" of the giver belongs to the deaconess at this time, for the generosity of the Lord's stewards places in her hands money and groceries, and some tables which have never groaned under the weight of holiday cheer, do so now. The aim of the deaconess, however, is not so much to relieve present distress as to be a friend to these friendless ones, and to instill into their minds principles whose workings shall uplift their lives and make them self-respecting members of the community. God-fearing men and women. Her reward is a consciousness of the Master's smile of approval, and one of earth's sweetest joys, the joy of helping others.

There is an urgent demand for deaconesses, especially church visitors, nurses and kindergartners. Young women desiring to enter this form of Christian work are advised to write the Principal (Miss) Zaida Tyrrell, 245 W. 14th St., New York, for all information on the subject.

A STRANGE TEMPERANCE MEETING

The following letter from an English clergyman, the Rev. H. W. Orford, Canon of Bloemfontein, will be read with interest: "I have just come from a temperance meeting, which, I think, must ever remain quite unique in the annals of temperance work. What do you say to a temperance meeting held in the Town Hall of a conquered city, organized by the Temperance Association of the conquering army, and with the Field-Marshal Commander-in-Chief in the chair!

"The hall was chiefly filled with soldiers, but a good number of townspeople and local temperance workers were present to show their sympathy with the work. The speakers were Army men, but the speeches were interspersed with songs by two of our local singers of such merit as have seldom been heard at temperance meetings."

Many Souls Won to Christ in the Gospel Tent—A Grand Midsummer Work

REV. GEO. T. PURVES, D.D.

DESPITE storm and heat, the large audiences at the Gospel tent, Glad Tidings, in New York City, continue, and the services are exceedingly attractive. The speakers deal with vital Gospel truths, and men have cried out, "What must I do to be saved?" One of the most notable discourses was last week delivered by Rev. Geo. T. Purves, D.D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. He so effectively urged the necessity of believing on Christ in order to salvation, that a number of persons came to a decision before leaving the tent.

Rev. Chas. E. Jefferson, D.D., pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, is one of the new speakers this year. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, have given the essence of their teachings at the Northfield Conference to these tent congregations. Mr. Ira D. Sankey, in a pleasant unconventional way described his travels in Egypt and Palestine. The tent work has no warmer friend than Mr. Sankey, who has given over 500 hymn books for the use of the congregation, and has repeatedly stirred the hearts of the people by his singing.

Every preaching service is followed by a prayer-meeting. Sometimes two hundred people remain to this meeting. For about fifteen minutes testimonies are given and prayers offered, and then the invitation is extended to all who realize their need of Christ, and all who desire Christian sympathy and help to manifest the same. People seem free to tell their trials and struggles in this place. Some nights, when young men are seeking Christ, ten or fifteen Christian young men gather about them for encouragement and prayer.

A larger number of churches than usual in the vicinity of the tent are closed this season, wholly or for one service. A lady writes to Rev. Mr. Pratt, superintendent of the tent work, as follows: "If New York City churches must be closed during the summer, there is then great need of such a work as yours." People who are stopping in the city for a brief time, find the tent a place of spiritual refreshment. It is the purpose of the directors on the return of the city pastors to town to invite them to preach in the tent, and to make special effort to closely join the work with that of the churches. Scores of persons at the close of a weary day come to the cool, inviting tent to rest and pray, and go away refreshed in body and spirit. Many have there told the story of their sin and found forgiveness. Wanderers have been reclaimed and pledged themselves to active, earnest work in their churches; and others, including a large proportion of young men, have come out as bold witnesses for Christ. People from twenty-one States and Canada have sent in requests for prayers.

Yet to Take a High Place Among the Nations—Progressive Influences at Work for the Empire's Revival

CHINA is a wreck. A few days ago, as I came across the Hudson from Hoboken, I noticed the great iron hulks of two large vessels which had been destroyed a few days before by fire, half tipped in the river, surrounded by small vessels which were taking from them the injured goods, and I thought to myself, noble wrecks.

China is a noble wreck. No one can view that old hulk of a noble empire that has weathered the storms and stood the fires of four thousand years, half overthrown by internal dissention, in danger of being gutted by the crafts which surround her, without a sense of injustice and of pain. We cannot put away the thought of what might have been—of what still might be. For China presents to us to-day, in spite of her faults, in spite of her failures, in spite of her shortcomings, a hope of reorganization and reconstruction which cannot but fire the heart of every lover of liberty and humanity.

China has great faults. Her shortcomings have been dwelt upon by everyone who has undertaken to write her history, her characteristics, or her epitaph. "Globe-trotters" and globe-tramps, newspaper men and newspaper women, diplomats, statesmen and missionaries alike have seemed to take a fiendish delight in chewing the pepsin-gum of her sin. Those who knew her best and loved her most, found it alike impossible to apologize for her shortcomings or to properly estimate her possibilities; while those who knew her least and loved her not at all took delight in driving a quill into her at every opportunity.

Her shortcomings are of almost every kind. Examine her morally. She is polluted with the sin of Sodom, a nation of opium-smokers and liars. Examine her mentally. She is a great fatty tumor of a memory which is sapping away her reason, imagination and invention. Examine her industrially. She plows with an iron-pointed stick, gins her cotton with an intestine, and cannot make a nail. Examine her politically. The old, conservative officials who have been controlling her government from generation to generation have become so corrupt that silver will not pass through their hands without sticking to them; that the life and liberty of the innocent are not safe in their hands if the guilty have money, while prisoners are made to testify untruthfully against themselves to escape a torture which is worse than death.

BUT continue to examine her politically. A cloud has arisen larger than a man's hand now which with the help of God and the prayers of an Elijah is large enough to rescue the country from the drought which has been brought upon it by the priests of Baal. This cloud is the young Emperor, Kuang Hsu, and the reform party of intelligent young men and stanch old men who have begun to see the shoals of danger on which the old craft of state is drifting, and the lighthouse which directs her to a safe harbor.

Granted that the edicts of the young Emperor, issued two years ago, were put forth in too rapid succession, that proves nothing, if not an edict among them would have been hurtful to China or injurious to the world in case it had been carried into effect. Let us examine some of those edicts and see what would have been the result if the claw of the lioness had not been placed upon the neck of the lamb.

The first edict of the young Emperor, in his efforts at reform, June 13, 1898, was the command that a university should be established at Pekin. Thirteen days later he censured the conservative ministers for their delay in reporting on the proposed Pekin University. When this edict proceeded from the throne a cry of joy went up from young men all over the empire—a cry which indicated the pulse of the people. The residence of a defunct prince was at once sought out, the buildings of which were to be renovated and used for the proposed university. Sun Chia-nai, an ex-Viceroy, and Dr. W. A. P. Martin were put at the head of it, a score or more of teachers, English, American, German, French, Russian, Japanese and Chinese were selected and called, and before two months there were registered more than twelve hundred students, and names were coming in so rapidly that they despaired of either accommodating or teaching the host of young men who promised to attend.

A GROUP OF CHINESE MAGISTRATES AND FOREIGNERS

At the same time this was being done in Pekin, the Viceroy of Hupeh and Hunan, Chang Chih-tung, was writing one of the most remarkable books ever written by a Chinaman—a book called Leaves of Learning. In it he urged that all consuls and ministers in foreign countries translate all the best books of those countries into Chinese, and that publishers in the ports of China publish large editions of the translation of foreign books that they might be scattered broadcast over the empire, while he himself subscribed liberally to the founding of educational institutions in various parts of the land.

It does not take a fertile imagination to picture what would have been the result if this scheme had been carried out. Given the young Emperor studying English and the Bible, with Pekin University filled with two thousand students with a Christian missionary at its head; with Tien-Tsin University already established and in good running order by Li Hung Chang; with Liu Kun-i, the Viceroy at Nanking, ready and anxious to follow suit, and Chang Chih-tung able and willing to do perhaps more than any one else; with the China Merchants' Steamship Company and Sheng Taotai so anxious to establish an institution that they actually established it in spite of the conservatives—given all this, what might we not have expected if the Emperor and the liberals had still remained in power? But this was not all, for the Chinese of Shanghai planned the establishment of a girls' school for the daughters of wealthy Chinese, and called Miss Howe, of the Central China Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church to take charge of it; and it should be remembered that Pekin University, Tien-Tsin University and Shanghai College are all under the management of men who went to China as Christian missionaries: W. A. P. Martin, D.D., LL.D., C. D. Tenny and John C. Fergusson.

A second edict of the young Emperor was the "encouragement of art, science and modern agriculture," and still later he ordered that "agricultural schools be established in all the provinces to teach improved methods of agriculture."

THIS edict brings up before my mind two pictures—one of a man with his wife and son hitched to a plow, pulling and pushing it through the soil of his little field; the other, that of a bound-footed woman with her little plow on her shoulder leading her donkey to plow her field. I see their field plowed and their wheat planted. I see it grow to a foot in height with heads two inches long, and I see them harvesting it by pulling it out of the ground, carrying it on their shoulder to their threshing-floor, rolling a stone over it to thresh it, winnowing it by tossing it up to the wind and grinding up for flour by hand. But now the scene changes. I come over to California, and I see Chinese who understand all the methods and possess all the appliances of modern agriculture. With horse or steam-power they turn up the deep rich soil. They sow their wheat with a drill, reap and thresh it with a machine, grind it at a mill, and make a flour as white as snow in comparison with the black, gritty flour of their brothers across the sea.

What would there have been to prevent the conditions now existing among the Chinese farmers in California being transferred to all the Chinese of that great empire? What would have prevented them using a good plow and putting it down deep into the soil, turning up rich loam that has never yet seen the light of day though it has been within six inches of a plow-point for four thousand years? Nothing but ignorance and prejudice.

Another edict issued by the young Emperor was that a "Bureau of Mines and Railways be established."

BEHOLD the China of the present, sitting in darkness, shivering. The streets of a Chinese city are practically deserted at nine o'clock. The street lamps of Pekin are small tin cups with a round wick protruding from a spout, placed in a small paper box on the top of four sticks, and never lit except on moonlight nights, on the principle that everyone must carry his own lantern whether the street lamps are lit or not, and therefore it is useless to waste oil.

I have seen an old bound-footed woman sitting on the bare ground in winter time feeling about her if perchance she may find enough cornstalks or weeds to cook her food and heat her brick bed. I have seen men raking the dead grass on the mountain side to secure fuel for the same purpose, while at the same time they were oblivious of the fact that veins of coal were beneath their feet, and wells of oil ready to bubble up for the tapping.

One thing more. The heart of the world is constantly touched by the pitiful stories that come from localities which have been flooded, and the people left to starve, while at the same time tons of rice are fermenting in the government rice bins in Pekin, and fruit rotting in orange and banana groves in the south for the simple fact that there is no method of transporting them to the flooded regions.

What now would have been the result if the Emperor's edict on mines and railroads had been carried out according to his intention. In a few years China might have opened mines enough, oil wells enough, and constructed railroads enough to have given employment to millions of men who are stealing, begging or starving, and in thus giving employment she would have increased her own wealth, and decreased the price of fuel and light so as to have brought them within the reach of the masses. She would have opened great thoroughfares from one end of the country to the other by which provisions might have been transferred from orth to south or east to west and thus reserved the lives of her people. Thousands of families have left the region of he Yellow River and gone up into Manhuria where they are living in mud huts nd trying to open up a new home, who ight be living at the homestead of their ancestors if only he edicts of the Emperor had een carried out.

OTHER edicts of equal importance were issued, all of which were as ecessary and practical, and ll of which would have been ut into operation inside of ten ears had not the Empress Dowager and the conservative arty interfered with them. If hese edicts had been put into peration what would have een the result?

Much is said by some who ave not made a thorough tudy of the Chinese people as o what would happen if Chia's four hundred millions ere properly furnished with rms and well drilled as soliers. Now, with all deference o these statements and the en who make them, let me ssert that the Chinese never were and ever will be soldiers.

In the first place they are Buddhists nd Buddhism never makes men soldiers.

In the second place, when they were onquered by the nomad Mongols it was t a time when China was at the very ighest pitch of her civilization (the close f the Sung dynasty), and before Buddism had gotten the hold upon her it has t the present time. If she had been a ation of warriors, or if she had had in er the possibilities of warriors,she would ot have been conquered by them in war.

What did she do? She began forcing pon them her language, her literature, er laws, her customs, and inside of a undred years everything was Chinese, nd the Mongols were conquered, but onquered by the arts of peace.

Two hundred and fifty years ago the hinese were conquered by the Manchus. hat conquering army began with one undred and fifty men and the leader, ith China in view, conquered tribe after ribe of the Manchus, after which he atacked and conquered the Mongols, and hen he had secured an army of 250,000 en, he attacked and conquered the Chiese. What happened again? The Chiese began to force upon them their lanuage, literature, laws and customs, and t the present time there is not enough of he Manchu left to give them a name. he Chinese conquer by the arts of eace.

AT the present time China is politically divided—a circumstance which is of the utmost importance, for it has eldom or never before occurred. She as a reform party, which is practically pro-foreign political party and this arty is constituted of the educated young en—the hope of the empire. Allow his reform party to have control of the government under the wise counsel of unselfish, well-instructed men, and within ten years they will bring about a reform which will contribute to the peace of China and the world. In ten years she will place herself beside Japan in the way to progress; in a generation she will leave her behind, and she will take her place among the nations of the world second to none as peace-loving, law-abiding citizens. Much has been said by globe-trotters and others as to the failure of Christianity among the Chinese, and as to the hostility of the Chinese to native Christians and missionaries. Let me call attention to a few facts which ought to be gratifying to the American people as a whole and especially to American missionaries.

1st. Unless the Pao Ting-fu missionaries have been massacred, no American missionary has ever lost his life at the hands of the Chinese.

2d. Practically all the educational institutions established by the Chinese are under the control of Americans who went to China as missionaries, viz.: Pekin Imperial University, under the control of Dr. W. A. P. Martin, D.D., LL.D.; Tien-Tsin Imperial University, under the management of C. D. Tenny; Shanghai College, under the management of John C. Fergusson; Shanghai Arsenal, under E.T. Williams, and the Shanghai Girls' School, under Miss Gertrude Howe.

3d. The attitude of the young Emperor toward Christianity was of such a nature as to cause the eunuchs of the palace to start the report among the Chinese that Wan Sui (10,000 years)—the way the Chinese speak of the Emperor—was going to become a Christian. Numerous reports were circulated as to the way he catechised the eunuchs in regard to God and their faith. He was far from being a Christian, but it is unquestionable that he was favorably disposed to Christianity.

4th. A Han-lin, that is one of the highest literary graduates, a member of the reform party, said after attending a series of revival services, only a day or two before I left Pekin, "I believe in your God, I believe in Christ, I believe in the power of the Holy Spirit."

Finally, the Chinese have character. They are not up to-day and down to-morrow. They are not pro-foreign this year and anti-foreign next year. They can be depended upon. Those who are anti-foreign will be anti-foreign still; and those who are for reform will be for reform still. As in every European business house in China there are Chinese filling the responsible positions, and as even in the Hongkong and Shanghai banks in Japan they have Chinese cashiers, so we can depend upon them, when they become acquainted with European methods and receive a proper salary, to conduct the affairs of government in an honest and upright way. The Chinese has character.

JUST one word more, and I wish it might be burned into the mind of every American, and be made the principle of the American Government forever, as I believe it is to-day. And that is this: Let us stand for a Chinese Government for the Chinese. Let no Power in Europe or Asia filch from them the territory they now possess. Stand by them like a Christian Power, for the preaching of a century will not do so much to win the government as the deed of a day by a government that calls itself Christian. And when the Chinese embrace Christianity as they sometime will, we will have made the greatest conquest that has ever been made in the history of the race.

THE METHOD OF MISSIONARY TRAVEL IN CHINA

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN

Although Pekin is now fully occupied by the allies, the troubles in China are by no means ended. The Boxers are said to be in considerable force near the capital. The Dowager Empress and the imperial court are fugitives in a neighboring province, and may at any moment be captured. It is said that the young Emperor Kwang Su has been captured by the Japanese. Gen. Chaffee, commanding our troops in China, has wired to the State Department recommending that as soon as all Americans are safe, our soldiers should be withdrawn. It is believed that he has foreseen complications, in consequence of the determined rivalry of Russia, Great Britain, Germany and Japan, which may eventually lead to a war that would involve the United States. There is talk of an international committee to administer the affairs of China and control her finances. A sad feature of the present troubles is the unrelieved distress of thousands of native Christians, rendered destitute by the Boxer and imperial army outrages.

A Missionary on the War

Rev. W. S. Johnston, writing from Taku to a friend in the United States, gives some interesting information concerning the war. He says:

I went to Tien-Tsin to bring down my wife and family, and some two or three days were occupied in packing. At length our things were ready and I got a lighter alongside the bund and had all our things put on board for transit to Taku. Taku being an out of the way place, we had made purchases sufficient for our needs for a long time to come. Then, too, in prospect of war scarcity and war prices, we had increased our quantity of flour, sugar, and stores in general very, very much. It was on Tuesday, June 15, our things—furniture, etc.; in fact, all we possess, with the exception of the children's summer clothing—were put on board, and the rumors of the Boxers attacking the city were alarming. That night we slept as usual for the past days, in our day clothes, ready for flight, and the precaution was not in vain. The previous two nights had witnessed the burning of the mission halls and chapels, which were situated in the native part of the city and suburb, and this night (Friday) had brought them nearer to us. We could see the sky lighted up with the flames of burning buildings, while the yelling of the crowd could be distinctly heard. About 3.30 A.M. the yelling mob charged down the street, but as the American soldiers had orders not to fire unless attacked, they had to stand and wait. Their coming, however, was to burn, and in a few minutes the last standing chapel in the native district was in flames.

As the people came near we left our home, being in close proximity to the scene of attack, and made our way, with many others, from one compound to another until we reached, at length, the place of rendezvous, known as "The Jordan Hall." While we were escaping on one side of Tien-Tsin the Russian, French and German soldiers were attacking in another part, and really, to their practical and decisive way of treating the mob was due the safety of the place. And they have continued to act in the same decisive way.

Mr. Johnston was on the U. S. warship Monocacy as interpreter, during the battle of the Taku forts and had a thrilling experience. He writes:

Where the Russians and Japanese enter there are never any wounded. They slaughter as they go. The British, Americans and Germans are not quite so bad. The fort occupied by the British and Italians was the first taken and the only one which made any real defence. The others fell more easily. The British loss was one killed and several wounded.

CAPITAL AND LABOR

HARDLY a day passes without our seeing an account of large gifts to charitable institutions, and this is the way the old fight between capital and labor is to cease. I hail the early twilight of that day when the men of fortune in all lands will come forth and say: "There are seventy thousand destitute children in New York City, and out of my fortune I will build this line of asylums to take care of them. There are vast multitudes of people in all the cities living in filthy and unventilated tenement-houses, and out of my fortune I will build a line of residences with cheap rents. There are nations that know nothing of Jesus Christ; I will turn my fortune inside out to send them evangels. There shall be no more hunger, there shall be no more ignorance, there shall be no more crime, so far as I can help it." When that day comes, this quarrel between capital and labor, and between the poor and the rich will cease, and the last torch of incendiarism will be extinguished, and the last knife of assassination will go to slicing bread for poor children.

ONE TRUE STANDARD

FIND me fifty merchants, and you find that they have fifty standards of what is right and wrong. You say to some one about a merchant, "Is he honest?" "Oh, yes," the man says, "he is honest, but he grinds the faces of his clerks. He is honest, but he exaggerates the value of his goods. He is honest, but he loans money on bond and mortgage with the understanding that the mortgage can lie quiet for ten years, but as soon as he gets the mortgage, he records it and begins a foreclosure suit, and the sheriff's writ comes down, and the day of sale arrives, and away goes the homestead, and the creditor buys it in at half-price." Honest, when he loaned the money he knew that he would get the homestead at half-price? Honest, but he goes to the insurance office to get a policy on his life, and tells the doctor he is well, when he knows that for ten years he has had but one lung. Honest, though he sells property by the map; forgetting to tell the purchaser that the ground is all under water; but it is generous in him to do that, for he throws the water into the bargain. Ah! there is but one standard of the everlasting right and of the everlasting wrong, and that is the Bible.

Send also your first contribution toward the support of your protege. As the annual cost of supporting an orphan is $15, you may remit a quarter's, half year's or whole year's contribution in advance, as you may decide. The names of all those who respond favorably will appear in the "India Famine Roll of Honor," immediately after the receipt of their first remittance.

"DUDO PUNJA"

An Incident of the India Famine

DUDO PUNJA was sitting in the shade of the single post which remained of what six months ago had been his snug little cottage. Twenty-one years of age, he ought to have been in full vigor, but he was dying: the swollen legs, the sallow bloodless skin, the heavy breathing and glaring eye told of hunger and cold endured. Beside him squatted two little children who fled as I approached, but Dudo did not rise because he could not. The children were nephews whose parents were at the relief works. My questions were answered by whispers, and I got off my pony and stooped down to catch what he said. "Are you hungry?" "Yes, very hungry, and my throat is dry and sore." "I will send you food presently." "Do send it quickly." I knew I should be late in getting home so had some biscuits in my pocket for lunch, these I shared with Dudo and his nephews and rode on to arrange for food for him and many others as well. After visiting another village I galloped up to one of our district boarding schools or children's kitchens as the food was being prepared for the morning meal. "Do you know Dudo Punja?" I said to the teacher. "Yes, very well." "He's dying on the other side of the river yonder." "Yes, sir, I will send," so he said, but I saw it in his eyes that he would not trust so urgent a message to another.

Yesterday I saw him again, and asked "What of Dudo?" "I was too late; he was dead before I reached him; but I arranged to get him buried."

Dudo's last words to me, and possibly to anyone, were. "Send food quickly." Thadra's report was, "I was too late." One knows by the woodman's marks on the trees which are doomed, and we through grim experience have come to recognize the marks of the dread "cutte down." For many around us it is already too late. They may live four days longer if well nursed, but death is stamped on their faces; they number hundreds. The looks of many others suggest Dudo's last words, "Send food quickly." They number thousands.

The clouds are beginning to bank up we pant and look for the rain, but it has not come yet. When it does come, naked bodies will feel the cold, unhoused vagrants and homeless food-seekers will need shelter. Government will help many with seed-grain, etc., but cannot half meet the needs of the case. In every respect we are nearing the crisis, and every bare field, every naked man and woman, every broken-down hut, and almost every breeze that blows seem to echo Dudo's dying words, "Send food quickly;" "Send clothing quickly;" "Send seed-grain quickly;" "Send money to keep people alive while they till and sow, and send it quickly."

In the village I visited just eighty-three are known to have died out of a population of 243; twenty cannot be traced at all; of the 139 whose whereabouts is known or surmised many have not been heard of for many weeks, while of the persons I actually saw, a dozen or so are so far gone that help will avail little. The looks of others say, "Send food quickly." Half of the houses are pulled down; only about ten head of cattle remain. The people cannot commence farming operations again unless helped, and if help is to be effective it must come quickly.—From the Bombay Guardian.

Our Maize Liked in India

The Indian Daily News of July 7, says: The American donors of the Quito's cargo of maize will be gratified to know that their beneficence is thoroughly appreciated. A correspondent of the Times of India at Ahmadabad, writes: The maize is a real success. I have a large cauldron on the fire all day of something like porridge which the people seem quite fond of. It is such a convenience to have something cooked always ready and which wont spoil. This just goes on simmering slowly, and any poor creature can get a plateful. It makes very nice bread, and my resident guests have a chapati of it to breakfast every day, but I give some wheat along with it as it makes a better chapatt. There are about 200 made a day, so you can imagine there is a good deal of grinding to be done for that and for the porridge.

Our Visitors from Cuba

FOR several months past a party of 1,375 Cuban and Porto Rican teachers has been enjoying a visit to the United States, the object of the invitation being to impress upon the people of these islands, through their educators, an intelligent idea of the American people and American institutions. Our Government provided transportation back and forth from the islands. These visitors are now returning home after a novel and delightful experience. They spent nearly two months at the Summer School at Harvard, where they expressed hearty appreciation of the hospitality shown them in the United States and the opportunities afforded for studying our educational methods. During their attendance at the University, the teachers were the guests of the people of Massachusetts, and the citizens of Boston and Cambridge made their sojourn as pleasant socially as Harvard professors sought to make it profitable intellectually. On their homeward way they made flying trips to Niagara Falls, Albany, Washington, New York and Philadelphia, in each of which cities they were shown over historic and interesting places and entertained as extensively as their limited stay permitted. In New York, High School teachers were assigned as guides and escorted the visitors to the parks, the museums, the galleries and a hundred other points of interest and instruction. In Washington, they were received at the White House by President and Mrs. McKinley. Just before leaving Harvard, this peaceful army presented, through President Eliot, a loving-cup to the University, gave a national concert to the people of Boston and Cambridge, and handed to all who had contributed to the pleasure of their stay, little cards bearing the inscription: "Hurrah for the American people! Hurrah for Harvard University! Hurrah for the American Government! Hurrah for Mr. Frye, President Eliot, and our Instructors! The people of Cuba will never forget them!" The impressions these visitors received, will, in time, be communicated to the people of both islands. It will no doubt be the means of effacing many misapprehensions regarding our own government and people, and of creating a bond of social feeling which may produce valuable results hereafter. We may hope that the children of the islands as they listen to the descriptions the teachers will give them on their return of the wealth and power of the United States, may learn from them, too, the lesson which Solomon sought to impress on his people:

Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people (Prov. 14: 34).

A Governor's Embarrassment

The novel incident of a Governor rejecting his own petition has just been witnessed in Kansas. Gov. W. E. Stanley on August 12, gave an audience to the friends of a convict who is serving a term of twenty years for murder. A similar appeal had been made to Gov. Morril, Mr. Stanley's predecessor, but had been rejected. No new evidence had been obtained, but the petitioners had more confidence in appealing to Gov. Stanley because they had a document bearing the Governor's own signature. It appears that at the murderer's trial Mr. Stanley had been his counsel and had done his utmost to have him acquitted. When he had been sentenced and the appeal for a pardon was made to Gov. Morril, Mr. Stanley had signed it and had written a personal letter to the Governor urging clemency. The convict and his friends, therefore, believed that Mr. Stanley having been elected Governor would now do the act he asked Gov. Morril to do. The Governor, however, rejected the petition and said in defence of his inconsistency, that a Governor is obliged to look on such matters from a different standpoint from that he occupies as a private citizen. He is not the first public functionary to make that discovery. It would be a good thing if people would realize the same fact when they consider the providence of God. There are many who live heedlessly in sin hoping that in the end it will be found that God is too loving and merciful to punish, forgetting that as the Ruler of the universe he cannot in justice pardon the impenitent.

Thus saith the Lord: Behold I will bring evil upon them which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them (Jer. 11: 11).

Houses Given Away

One of the most extraordinary transactions in real estate on record is reported from New Orleans. A press dispatch from that city say that the Illinois Central Railroad recently acquired a right of way into a thickly populated district in the upper part of New Orleans. It was necessary in order to secure the concession to clear the ground immediately and begin construction. The Railroad Company purchased all the houses in its way and was about to proceed to their demolition when offers to purchase some of them were made. The Company were glad to accept them with the stipulation that they should be removed within a few days. Soon, all the roads were full of houses in transit and some of the fortunate purchasers made considerable sums. One man bought a house for $250 which, when moved to a new site, he was able to sell for $4,000. Finally only a few houses were left and the Company offered them at ten dollars each. No one was willing to buy even at that low figure, as the demand for vacant lots had caused the price of land in the vicinity to rise. The Company, therefore, offered the houses as a free gift to anyone who would pull them down or remove them. On those terms the houses were speedily disposed of. There were plenty of people ready to avail themselves of the opportunity though it involved either the labor of demolition or the purchase of a site and the cost of removal. Unhappily there is not the same readiness to accept the offer of an eternal home which the messengers of God are authorized to offer to all who come to Christ.

We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (II. Cor. 5: 1).

Killed by Simian Jealousy

A singular incident showing the effect of jealousy among monkeys is told by the Chicago Chronicle. The monkeys at the Lincoln Park Zoo are always a centre of attraction to visitors who reward their tricks with peanuts and other delicacies. Recently there has been added to the collection a clever little monkey who had passed a year or two in a circus before going to the Zoo. He had learned so many novel tricks in the circus that his popularity was established at the outset. He received as many peanuts as all the rest put together. But he was not selfish and all his companions were welcome to a share of his booty. But they were evidently envious of his popularity. They resisted his friendly overtures and kept away from him. While the others frolicked together and were sociable with each other, the newcomer was left in a corner by himself. At his approach they all scampered away. He perceived that he was ostracized and he felt it keenly. After a few weeks he became melancholy, could not be induced to perform any of his tricks and finally refused food. Various means of relieving him were tried but they failed. He grew sick and died, as his keeper insists, of a broken heart. His fate was pitiable and shows how near akin to humanity the monkey is. Many a man's spirit has been broken in the same way. But no man need be driven to despair by the envy and malignity of his fellows; a way of escape is open to him that the monkey could not enter:

Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man; thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues (Psalm: 31: 20).

A Treasure in a Vault

A press dispatch from Boston, Mass., reports a curious discovery in that city. A new public school is being erected on the corner of Pearl and Bartlett streets. In excavating the foundation, after the old dwelling which had stood there for more than a century had been pulled down, an old brick vault was laid bare. The vault was struck six feet below the surface, and the foreman ordered his men to pick holes through the sides so that the derrick might hoist it out bodily. In doing this a large number of coins were discovered stacked up after the manner cashiers have a way of doing where change is to be made quickly. Most of the coins could not be identified at first on account of the thick corrosion, but a few in the middle of the piles were clean enough to show the dates. The contractor took one of the coins to a bank and was told by the cashier that itwas undoubtedly a genuine dollar. Some were dated 1822, but most of them bore a date that looked like 1799. These resemble Mexican dollars more than they do American coin, but the 1822 money is clearly American. The vault which was constructed of bricks was about five feet square and was so strongly built that it did not break apart when lifted by the derrick from its bed. Evidently some wealthy person had lived in the old house and probably had been engaged in some kind of banking business. He doubtless had little thought how exactly the prediction, which he must have at times heard read in meeting, would be fulfilled in his case:

Your gold and silver is cankered and the rust of them shall be a witness against you . . . Ye have heaped together treasure for the last days (Jas. 5: 3).

BRIEF NOTES

Dr. H. Loomis, of Yokohama, Japan, writes hopefully of the progress of Christianity in that land. He says that the number of adult baptisms in 1899 was 3,148.

Five State Unions of Christian Endeavor Societies hold their annual Conventions simultaneously Oct. 4-7. They are Colorado, Illinois, Missouri, Nevada and Wisconsin.

Total abstinence can boast an illustrious accession to its ranks in the person of the young Queen of Holland, who, according to a sketch of her in an English publication refuses even on public occasions to touch wine or any kind of strong drink.

Christian workers from all parts of the country will assemble together at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Sept. 19-26, for a conference on revival work. The object is to get together as many workers as possible to promote fellowship, and discuss methods and suggestions.

A significant announcement, in view of the Jewish confidence in the approaching restoration to Palestine, is made in the columns of a European journal. It is that a steamer has been constructed at Hamburg specially to navigate the Dead Sea.

The Congregationalist calls attention to the fact that three veterans of the Congregational Church who have been called to their reward this year: Hamlin the foreign missionary, Holbrook the home missionary, and Park the theologian, had all passed the Psalmist's limit of age. The total of their ages was 273 years.

A good work in the interest of temperance has been unostentatiously done in New York. Fifteen fountains for ice water, two of which have been recently opened, are operated by the Church Temperance Society. The new fountains are at the Squirrel Inn, corner of Grand Street and the Bowery, and at the Hall of Records, opposite the New York end of the Brooklyn Bridge.

Dr. F. E. Clark, President of the Christian Endeavor Society, was agreeably surprised by a talk with a cab-driver in London. Dr. Clark never neglects an opportunity for religious converse and he uttered a few words to the driver of the cab in which he rode across the city. The driver replied that he was not only a Christian, but a Christian Endeavorer, and his cab was never out on a Sunday. He was delighted when Dr. Clark disclosed his identity.

A Chinaman who had applied for membership in a Christian church was put back on the ground that he had not sufficient knowledge of the faith to be received. He was among the number seized by the Boxers, and technically might have been justified in denying that he was "one of them," but when he was questioned with a sword at his throat, he boldly answered: "Yes, I am a Christian." To his surprise, he was allowed to escape. It is worthy of note that the man who had not enough knowledge to be a member of the church had enough courage and fidelity to be a martyr.

THE POOR RICH AND THE RICH POOR

THE RICH FOOL ∴ By Dr. & Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

International Sunday School Lesson for September 16: Luke 12: 13-23. | Golden Text, Mark 8: 36: What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

A WRITER in a New York publication recently raised the question why it is that, with so many temperance societies fighting appetite, and other reform organizations restraining lust, there are no societies whose special aim is the prevention and cure of covetousness, which Jesus condemned more frequently and more severely than any other vice. Money is not "the root of all evil," as many suppose the Bible to teach. Very nearly all evil grows out of three closely interwoven roots — appetite, lust and greed—but the greatest of these—the taproot—is greed. Even the saloon and the social evil, which grow in part out of the roots of appetite and lust respectively, derive yet more of their strength from the greed that makes it the business of large groups of men and women to promote these evils for gain. It is this business aspect of evil at which laws are chiefly aimed. In this view we see the truth of what the Bible really says: "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil."

As to a society for the prevention of covetousness, why should not the Sunday School become such a society? Children are almost never covetous, and might undoubtedly be prevented from ever becoming so by definite, persistent training in the grace of systematic benevolence. The home and school should cooperate to teach that wealth is honorable only when honorably obtained, making the test ever, not "How much has he?" but "How did he get it?" and "How is he using it?" Let every one who has paid for wealth more than it was worth be counted, as in this lesson, a "rich fool."

"TAKE HEED AND BEWARE OF COVETOUSNESS"

"THIS NIGHT, THY SOUL SHALL BE REQUIRED OF THEE"

God's Kingdom Begins in Righted Hearts Who made me a judge? Those Christians who think politics is the devil's preserve, on which God and his people have no right to trespass, not even when politics becomes the base for attacks upon the ten commandments, try to find warrant for leaving so large a part of the world out of Christ's kingdom in this passage, separated from all others bearing on the same subject. But these words of Christ, historically considered, meant only that the time for him to control the outward courts of justice had not yet come. That would be a part of the harvest; it was then seed-time. His work was to begin in the court of the individual conscience. When he had changed the hearts of a controlling portion of any nation, it would then (that is, now) be their duty to develop individual convictions into Christian institutions, as they have, but to an imperfect extent, partly because such passages have been supposed to apply to the harvest as well as the springtime. The temptation Christ here rejected was the same that the devil offered in the wilderness—the same he again rejected in the crown offered him by the Galileans. He would not begin his kingdom in force, but in love. Yet love is made perfect in law, and the twain are really one.

Shall Riches be Our Possessions or Our Possessors? Take heed and beware of covetousness. We have treated this "beware" of Christ as if it were a false alarm or some trifling matter. To set your mind strongly on money-getting, Jesus says, is a real and mighty peril. With a smile his followers say: "I'll take the risk." We should teach children to beware of greed very much as we teach them to beware of rum, and partly in both cases to escape an inward bondage. "Wealth is a good servant, but a bad master." The chief peril in wealth is slavery, because a man's possessions so often become his possessors. Christ saw this danger in the man who came to him asking that he would bid his brother divide the inheritance with him. Christ told him that Christianity had as yet no civil power, and was not yet dealing with property rights. In this case the man was probably entitled to what he asked. But Christ saw that he needed something even more than justice, namely, emancipation from a servile devotion to property, and so he added: "Take heed and beware of covetousness." Every passage in the Bible on that peril should be taught to every child most faithfully. To covet is to desire earnestly, and there is therefore a righteous covetousness. We are commanded to "covet earnestly the best gifts." The covetousness the Bible condemns is undue desire for possessions, whether in rich or poor, including anxious thought about the future in fear of poverty. This covetousness, when it is finished, not only desires to possess things that are in the market, but those also that one can have only by taking them in some way from his neighbor. Having thus overshadowed the brotherhood of man, covetousness grows on until it also crowds out the Fatherhood of God and becomes "idolatry." Gold becomes a god, the supreme, controlling force in the soul, an idolatry baser than the worship of sun and moon, of animals and birds—the worship of a god taken from the mineral kingdom, the lowest of all. So low that generous boy in your class, that brought his teacher a gift of flowers, may sink—is indeed very likely to sink in this age of rank commercialism—unless teacher and parent make him despise ill-gotten gold, as temperance boys are taught to hate and despise the saloon.

Especially should every child be taught the profound meaning of those words of Jesus: "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth." Let the boy be made to feel that "life" is truly measured not by what a man has, but by what he is and does.

Perils of Luxury The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully. This parable, like that of Luke 16: 19ff., is a parable of wealth unstained by fraud, which is nevertheless a peril and a curse because it possesses its covetous victim. This wealth came almost direct from God through the fertile ground, but instead of making him grateful, he became as proud as if he had created the golden wheat through some invention of his own. A very small part of any man's wealth is the product of his own effort. The millionaire could hardly produce a dollar a day of wealth alone in nature. God is always senior partner, furnishing the raw material, and his fellow men, living and dead, always contribute largely to the product and its value. In the words of Lincoln's favorite song, "O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" And why should he hold his wealth as a private snap, rather than a public trust, since it is something he has received rather than earned?

When this rich man had taken from the hand of God more than his ample barns would hold, he exclaimed, "What shall I do?" It did not occur to his selfish heart, or if the thought came he drove it away, that he should give the surplus to those less favored, or sell it and build better houses for his workmen, his partners in wealth production. He planned for larger hoardings, more than he could use, just to gratify his proud sense of possession. He did not even plan to so use his wealth as to develop his own nobler life. His leisure was to be devoted, not to books and art and travel, but to ease and feasting. Luxury does not stop there. The animal life, unduly fed, and tempted by idleness, always breaks out into the soft vices which are the supreme curse of luxury. Extreme wealth is hardly less favorable to vice than extreme poverty. When the writer was in Newport, last year, he was assured by the one of all others best qualified to testify, that the amusements of the rich who summer there had never been so "coarse" as that year. And now the rector of Newport's most fashionable church tells not only of Sunday golf but also of Sunday card gambling as a common thing among these rich idlers. By such exhibitions history has often taught that competence is better than affluence. Enough is better than a gorge. Many a rich man is like the greedy child, tested by her father, who gave her orange after orange until trying to take one more than she could hold she dropped all and fell to crying. He also that thus greedily increaseth riches, increaseth sorrow.

"I HAVE NO ROOM WHERE TO BESTOW MY FRUITS"

A Collection of Rich Fools But God said unto him, Thou fool. Everybody else flattered him, but God told him he was a fool. There are several kinds of rich fools. 1. He is a rich fool whose wealth is but gilded ignorance. A proud, rich lady, who should have been very humble in view of her mental poverty, was looking over a new church just built in her town, to which she knew a man of wealth, Mr. Isaac Sharkey, had contributed very largely. She said: "The general effect of the church is very nice; but there is one thing I don't like, that I. H. S. I think it was very ostentatious for Mr. Sharkey to put his initials in so prominent a place, and I never knew before that he had any other Christian name except Isaac."

2. He is also a rich fool who is so miserly that he gets only misery out of his money.

3. He is also a rich fool who gets riches by fraud or injustice. It is as if a man should give what is worth a million dollars for what is worth but a hundred; to give up honesty and character and reputation for mere wealth. In the Brazilian diamond mines the slaves of former days were told they would be set free whenever they discovered a gem of a certain value. Let us discover the supreme value of character and so achieve emancipation from slavery to wealth.

4. He is a rich fool who does not deal fairly with those who, as employees, aid him in producing wealth. Even from a commercial standpoint, "Brotherhood in business" is a better watchword than those devil proverbs, "Business is business" and "Every man for himself." The favors shown at the National Cash Register factory in Dayton to the employees, in the way of lunches, baths, club-rooms and otherwise, cost but five per cent. on the pay-roll, while the "good-will" produced is declared by the management to be worth at least twenty per cent. in savings and improvements. It is not the "good-will" of a store alone that has a cash value. Ill-will is also a thing to be reckoned with, as many a firm has learned in costly strikes. James Russell Lowell has shown in a poem, that ought to be even more familiar than it is, how we wrong Christ himself in wronging the working class, to which he belonged.

Said Christ our Lord, "I will go and see How the men, my brothers, believe in me."
He passed not again through the gate of birth;
He made himself known to the children of earth.

And in church and palace and judgment-hall
He marked great fissures that rent the wall,
And opened wider and yet more wide
As the living foundation heaved and sighed.

"Have ye founded your thrones and altars, then,
On the bodies and souls of living men?
And think ye that building shall endure
Which shelters the noble and crushes the poor?"

"O Lord and Master, not ours the guilt;
We build but as our fathers built:
Behold thine images, how they stand
Sovereign and sole through all our land."

Then Christ sought out an artisan,
A low-browed, stunted, haggard man;
And a motherless girl, whose fingers thin
Pushed from her faintly want and sin.

These set he in the midst of them,
And as they drew back their garment's hem
For fear of defilement, "Lo, here," said he,
"The images ye have made of me."

Missionaries Send Glowing Accounts of the Natives' Delight Over the Corn—Relished Everywhere and Saved Thousands of Lives—Urgency of the Orphan Work

EVERY mail from India brings grateful letters from missionaries and other writers in the famine field, telling of the splendid results of Christian America's beneficence. All, without exception, write in glowing terms of the cargo of corn sent on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief steamship Quito. To give even a few of those letters in full, would crowd our limited space, but as they are specially interesting to our readers and their friends who united so generously in this great life-saving work, we give extracts from some of them below.

Some time ago, an erroneous report appeared in a contemporary publication, in which it was stated that the proprietor of this journal, while in India, had sold the cargo of the Quito at an advance of fifty per cent. on the cost price, and that he had therefore speculated with the gift of the American people. We refrained from replying to such a charge, preferring that the letters of the missionaries and others who received and distributed the corn should be the sole answer. Now that these letters have been received, it is due to all who aided in the work of the Famine Fund, that they should be published. They are a complete refutation of the charge in question, and show that not a sack or kernel of the grain was either sold by Dr. Klopsch directly or indirectly, nor did he or THE CHRISTIAN HERALD speculate in the cargo, even in the remotest sense.

Rev. G. W. Seiler, Kolhapur, Bombay Presidency, writes:

Thankful for your gifts of corn, blankets and money for the famine sufferers, I wish, in behalf of the missionaries at Kolhapur, to tell you briefly how these have been used. Two hundred and twenty sacks of corn were apportioned by the committee to Kolhapur. They arrived several weeks ago and are in charge of Rev. Mr. Goheen and myself. A dozen sacks were sent to be used in the City Hospital, where many poor are gratuitously fed. Sacks are sent at intervals to our several mission out-stations, where the maize is being used in part payment for relief work and gratuitously distributed to the people in those and surrounding villages. Twice a week we distribute maize to the hungry, who come from all directions. Twice there have been between three and four thousand. Each one is given nearly a pint. A great many babies are brought. The people seem to like the corn. Some eat it just so; others grind it, others roast it.

G. E. Jackson writes from Ellichpur to Secretary Frease, at Baroda:

Many thanks for 660 bags of maize and 1,000 blankets. I shall be happy to give you some details shortly.

Rev. K. A. Iwar, of the Swedish National Evangelical Missionary Society, stationed at Nimpani, Betal, C. P., writes:

We were in great need of the blankets, as the poor, naked people have nothing to cover themselves with in the rains. Hundreds of starving people daily apply for a portion of the maize. I cannot even keep them quiet for the few minutes I want to write these lines.

All Relish the Corn

Rev. H. Huizinga, writes from Ongole:

As to the corn: This was received with great enthusiasm. The gift was direct and tangible. The people looked on these bags of corn as they could not on the money. Here is the real, identical gift as it came from the hands of the charitable people in that far-off goodly land, America. I received 52 bags of corn for orphan children in my charge. As there are about 225 of them, the corn will last them about a month. I told our people to cook the corn, which they did. They relish the corn very much.

Rev. J. E. Clough, of Ongole (a district in which it was said corn would not be of much use), writes:

In view of all the benefits to native Christians and other poor people of my mission field have received from Dr. Klopsch and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD through your committee, I wish to write a few lines this morning. But I have not time to write much, for hundreds are about my bungalow.

But for the generous gifts which have come primarily from Dr. Klopsch and from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I do not see what we here could have done. It is safe to say without their timely aid hundreds of Christians and other poor people would not now be alive.

Dr. Clough Praises the Grain

The 2,000 bags of American corn which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD committee sent to me have been received. Of this corn, I have given to Brother Huizinga, for his 300 orphans one month's rations, and I have given to Miss Kelly for her 250 boarding girls (all of whom are from the depressed classes and fifty of whom are orphans), also rations for one month, and to Miss Dessa for the 150 boys in her boarding school, of the depressed classes, of whom thirty are orphans, one month's rations. Of the remaining portions, I have distributed a good deal to people in much distress, but I have some of the corn on hand as yet. The almost unanimous opinion is that the corn is very good—much sweeter and more tasty than the ordinary Indian food grains. On the whole, the American corn is very popular. The only fault I have to find is that I have not enough of it. If I had 50,000 bags, instead of 2,000, I could meet the demand.

Please convey to Dr. Klopsch and to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, on behalf of the thousands of Christians and other people of Ongole, my best, my heart-felt thanks for the 2,000 bags of corn. My people here can never repay our American friends, neither can I, but the Lord Jesus can and will.

Hattie L. Bruce writes from Satara:

Excuse delay in acknowledging five and a half tons American corn received through your kindness early in the month. It is a great boon to the needy and suffering.

Rev. James Somerville writes from Jodhpore, Rajputana:

I have the pleasure to acknowledge receipt of your favor of 16th inst. and subsequently of the consignment of 200 cotton sheets, as advised. Previously I received two hundred bags of American maize for distribution similarly amongst the destitute population. Both these gifts are most suitable and timely, and already I have distributed a large amount of the grain—which I have had ground coarsely—among our hungry people.

Rev. G. N. Thomssen writes from Bapatla:

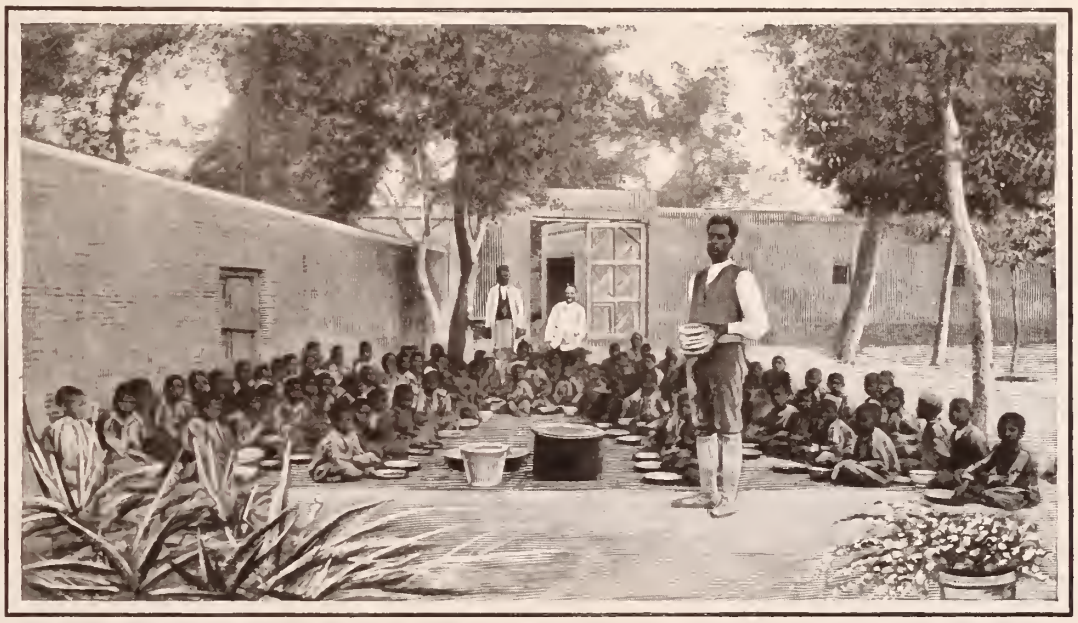
We could distribute all our corn in one week. Our people voted again and again to thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for this munificent gift of corn. All eat the corn ravenously and say nothing sweeter and better could be given them.

Rev. J. Heinrichs, of the Baptist Telugu Mission, Ramapatam, writes:

The 1,000 bags of American maize arrived here in my care at Tattu railway station as a distributing centre just one week ago. Three hundred bags were immediately despatched to Kanigivi, where we have a Christian membership of 6,000 and brother J. A. Curtis in charge; 200 bags went to Udazagivi, where Rev. F. W. Stait is stationed; 50 bags have been forwarded to Rev. E. Bullard at Kavali; 50 are still to be sent to Kandukur—another one of our stations—and the rest has been or will be distributed right here under our supervision. Some 120 bags have already gone. Are the people glad to receive it? Rather! They have fallen over the corn like kites over a carcass. The last few days we paid our famine coolies partly in money and partly in corn. They were simply delighted with the "mockka zamia," as they call it. To-day, when I paid them only money, they requested to be paid in maize.

Last Friday some 60 bags were distributed among our 600 Christians, who have suffered most from the famine. We opened the distribution ceremony by singing in Telugu "Behold how great the love of God," the reading of Psalm 23, prayer, and a few words of explanation about the corn.

Distressing as are all the incidents of the famine, there are none so pitiful as those in which the little children are concerned. The famine in India has left hundreds of thousands of them fatherless and motherless.



CHILDREN IN A MISSIONARY'S COMPOUND BEING FED WITH GRAIN FROM THE "QUITO"

The Problem of the Orphans

At present they are grouped by thousands in the stations of the missionaries. Thanks to the noble generosity of the American people there is no difficulty in feeding them. But the missionaries, taught by painful experience, are looking ahead. They see in imagination some morning when there is not a cent in the treasury and there are a thousand eager faces looking for a breakfast. How would the missionary feel if he had nothing to give them? He would wish then that he had not undertaken the charge. Foreseeing such a contingency, he asks now: How many children will the Christians of America authorize him to keep? It will cost fifteen dollars a year to support a child, and this sum will provide not only food and clothing but the cost of a Christian education. It is not much. Thirty cents a week more than covers it. How many men and women there are in this country who could spare thirty cents a week easily! And how could they spend it in a way so delightful as that of obeying Christ's injunction, "Feed my lambs." James defined pure religion as visiting the fatherless and the widow in their affliction and keeping oneself unspotted from the world. Such a visit is now within reach of all. The personal presence is not needed when the money messenger goes through the hands of the missionary.

And then, think how far-reaching is this opportunity of Christian service that is placed within our reach. When these children grow up and go forth into the village homes of India to be the fathers and mothers of the next generation, they will not go in heathenism as did their parents; they will know the blessedness of the Christian faith, and will be able to tell their children of the compassion which saved their lives and the love that saved their souls. It really seems as if out of this appalling calamity may come the seed of the evangelization of India. But it depends on how far the Christians of America are prepared to avail themselves of the opportunity. This is why we so urge the duty of giving now. The cost is so small, the result so large. How gratifying will be the thought in years to come, that in this crisis of opportunity a sacrifice of thirty cents a week was made, even at the cost of some accustomed luxury, and in consequence there is some child in far-off India growing up in Christian surroundings who might but for that sacrifice have perished of hunger, or have lived to become a heathen destitute of the knowledge that leads to eternal life!

Col. Nurani, the devoted chief of the Salvation Army work at Ahmadabad, tells many touching incidents. That of is particularly interesting. Col. Nurani has the heart of a true woman, and when she saw a sturdy little boy, himself half-starved, trudging manfully along the road with his baby sister in his arms, her heart went out to the little pair of orphans. The boy was only a child himself and in sore need of a mother's care, but mother and father were both gone that sad road that so many have been compelled to travel. Some boys would have given way to despair; others would have run off to get food somehow for themselves. But this boy took up his little motherless sister, only ten months old, and charged himself with the task of providing for her. The brave little fellow had heard of the kind lady at Ahmadabad who cared for helpless children, so he was bringing her there. A poor little bag of bones the babe was, when the lad handed her to Nurani. Both she and her little protector were received and fed. The baby has developed such sweet infantile ways, and is so full of childish energy that she has become the pet of the camp. They have given her the name of Jita, which means life. Foster parents who will undertake the support of little Jita are needed.

CHAPTER XL.

SAMANTHA IN ROME

AS I stood in St. Peter's Church in Rome I had a great number of emotions and large, very large in size. Right here where Mr. Nero (the mean, misable creeter) got hilarious over the dyin' struggles of the Christian martyrs, right here where St. Peter met his death with the glory of heaven lightin' up his dyin' eyes (I am just as sure on't as if I see it myself) stands this immense meetin'-house.

Three hundred years of labor and sixty millions of dollars have been expended on it and the end is not yet. But I would not done it for a cent less if I had took the job, I couldn't afford it nor Josiah couldn't.

Why, when we stood in front on't I didn't feel no bigger than the head of a pin, not a hat pin or a shawl pin, but the smallest kind they make, and Josiah dwindled down so in size as compared to the edifice that I most thought I should lose him right there with my eyes glued onto his liniment.

You go through a large double door which shuts up behind you as noiselessly and securely as if you wuz walled in to stay. My first feelin' after I entered wuz the immensity of the place. Some of the statutes you see that didn't look so big as Josiah, when you come clost up to 'em you found wuz sixteen feet high. And the little cherubs holdin' the shell of holy water at the entrance you see are six feet high. You look fur down the meetin'-house as you look down the road into a big piece of woods, only here the distant trees turn into statutes and shrines and altars and things. Fur off like distant stars shinin' down into the forest you see the lamps, one hundred and twelve of 'em, burnin' day and night around the tomb of St. Peter.

Under the Dome of St. Peter's

As you stand under the dome and look up it is like looking at the very ruff of the sky. It is supported by four great pillars and the interior of the immense globe is one hundred and thirty-nine feet in circumference measured on the inside.

All the houses in Jonesville could be piled up on top of each other in this immense space and Zoar and Shackville piled onto them and not half fill it.

As we stood under the great dome the canopy over St. Peter's tomb seemed to us no bigger than the band stand in Jonesville. But when we got up to it we see that it wuz most a hundred feet high, for fur up the mosaic medalions of the four evangelists lookin' none to big for the place come to examine 'em, the pen of St. Luke is six feet long and his nose is big enough for a spare bedroom. The writing that runs along under the dome each letter is six feet high, higher than Thomas Jefferson on tip toes, or Josiah on stilts. The idee!

I don't spoze that Peter, that earnest, hot-tempered fisherman ever spozed he would have such a buildin' erected to his honor, and I wondered as I looked through the immense distances of this meetin'-house how many turned their thoughts from the glory about 'em, onto Peter's inspired words when he wuz here in the flesh. This huge pile seemed as if Time could have no power over it, but his own words rung in my ear:

"The day of the Lord shall come as a thief in the night and all these things shall be dissolved. Nevertheless we according to his promise look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

And as I thought of his death right here on this very spot agin his words sounded in my heart:

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning this fiery trial which is to try you—But rejoice—Partakers of Christ's suffering—"

And even as I listened to the chantin' of the priests I methought I heard Peter speaking of the Voice which come down from Heaven which they heard who wuz with Him on the mount. I thought of the sure word of prophecy. "The light shining in a dark place"—"Until the day dawns and the day star arise in our hearts."

Yes, the real Peter wuz enshrined in my heart as I trod the grand aisles of that meetin'-house of hisen, and I didn't think nothin' at all in comparison of that statute of Peter settin' on a white stun throne holdin' his foot out for the masses to kiss.

He sets up there with a queer lookin' thing on his head. Josiah said it wuz a sass pan, and I sez: "No, Josiah, it is a halo." And he sez:

"Samantha, if I'm ever sculped and sot up in the Jonesville meetin'-house, I don't want any halo on my head."

And I told him I guessed there wuzn't any danger of his ever wearin' a halo on this earth.

And Josiah said before the subject wuz broached that never, never should he kiss that toe. And he sez it to me in reproachful axents as if I'd been teasin' him to. But I hadn't thought on't and told him so. But right whilst we stood there we see folks of all classes from peasants to nobles and of all ages from childhood to old age walk up and kneel and kiss that onconscious big toe and go into some chapel countin' the beads of their rosaries.

Good land! Peter don't care anything about that mummery unless he has changed for the worse since he left this mortal spear, which hain't very likely bein' the man he wuz. And as I thought of the evil things done in the name of the power that rared up that figger, I methought I hearn him say:

"The time has come when judgment must begin at the house of the Lord."

Tommy and Carabi

I had lots of emotions as I walked to and fro and didn't want to talk to anybody or hear the talkin' round me.

I hearn Tommy talkin' sunthin' to Carabi and I catched these words, "I wonner, oh, I wonner what good it duz 'em to kiss that toe." And Arvilly and Josiah jined in in sharp criticism. And agin Josiah sez: "I know I am a leadin' man in Jonesville and have been called more'n once a pillar in the meetin'-house, but never, never do I want to be made a statter with a sass pan on my head, and the bretheren and sistern kissin' my toes."

And agin I sez, "It hain't a sass pan." But they kep' on to that extent that I had to say, "Josiah and Arvilly, the one that figger represents, said: 'Above all things have charity, for charity covers a multitude of sin.'"

Miss Meechim and Dorothy and Robert Strong clumb clear up into the dome twice as high as Bunker Hill monument or ruther walked up for they hain't stairs, but a smooth wooden way leads up, up to that hite. Miss Meechim told me when they come down that though there wuz a high railin' it seemed so frightful to look down that immense height she didn't hardly dare to look off and enjoy herself, though the view wuz sublime.

But I can't describe St. Peter's no more than a ant can describe the Zodiac, I mean an a-n-t, not mother's sister. Why the great side chapels are big enough for meetin'-houses and fur grander than we shall ever see in Jonesville or the environin' townships. And the tomb and monuments and altars, etc., are more gorgeous than I could ever tell on if I should try a year.

There wuz one statute by Canova of Clement XIII. that is lovely, the marble figure of the pope and on each side kneelin' figures of Religion and Death. Down below as if guardin' the tomb stands two noble lions.

And Pope Innocent, I d'no whether his name agreed with his nater or not, but he sets there holdin' the lance that pierced the side of our Lord, so they say. But I don't believe that it wuz the same one nor Robert Strong don't; I should have had different feelin's when I looked at it if it had been the one.

PASSING UNDER THE ARCH OF TITUS

Besides this relic they claim to have at St. Peter's a piece of the cross and the napkin that wuz laid to our Lord's face when he wuz faintin' under the burden of the cross, and that still holds the imprint of his face, so they say. They are shown on sacred days. They say that there is confessionals at St. Peter's where folks of every language in the world can confess and be absolved by a priest that understands 'em. Well, I shouldn't wonder, it is big enough, it seems like a world in itself. But I couldn't help thinkin' of our great High Priest whose confessional is broad and high as the needs and sorrows of a world and the "silent liftin' of an eye can bring us there to be," and who understands not only every language under the sun, but every secret and hidden thought and aspiration of the soul, good or evil, and whose forgiveness and compassion never fails the penitent soul. I couldn't help thinkin' on't, and I felt that St. Peter if he could speak would say, "Josiah Allen's wife, I don't blame you for your methinkin'. I think just so myself."

One day we all went to see the Arch of Titus; it wuz big and massive lookin' with a lot of writin' over the top that I couldn't read nor Josiah couldn't, but interestin' like all the remains of imperial Rome that ruled over almost the hull of the known world. It was erected about the year 70 to commemorate the destruction of Jerusalem.

Titus the Conqueror

The conqueror, Mr. Titus, brought back twelve thousand of the conquered Jews and made 'em work and toil to build up that lofty arch in memory of their own defeat and captivity and his glory. You'd think that wuz enough trouble for 'em, but I've hearn, and it come pretty straight to me, that he misused 'em more or less while they wuz workin' away at it.

'Tennyrate they say a Jew won't go under that arch to this day and they've been seen to spit at it, and I spoze they throw things at it more or less on the sly.

There wuz another arch fur more interestin' to me, and that wuz the arch of Constantine. It is perfectly beautiful, and would be, even if it wuz built by a misable pagan. But it wuz built by Mr. Constantine when he declared himself in favor of Christianity. I sot store by him.

"A QUEER LOOKIN' THING ON HIS HEAD"

It is a grand and beautiful structure, richly ornamented, and has three passages. I didn't like all the base reliefs on it; indeed, I considered some on 'em as real base, such as Mr. Tragan's offerin's to the gods, etc. But then I realized that I wuzn't obleeged to look at 'em. And some on 'em wuz very good showin' off Mr. Tragan educatin' poor children, etc. And some of Constantine's doin's there I liked first-rate.

And I d'no as I see anything in Rome that interested me more than the tomb of Celia Crassus—Celia Matella that wuz. It is a round, massive structure that stands on the Appian Way and is about two thousand years old. It wuz once all covered with costly marble, but the hand of Time and other thieves, in mortal shape, have stole it a long time ago. But enough is left to show what it wuz. Nobody knows jest who Celia wuz and what she did do, or didn't do to git such a monument. But I shall always believe she wuz a real likely woman and smart. 'Tennyrate, I said her pardner must have thought high on her and mourned her loss like a dog or he never would have rared such a magnificent tomb to her memory.

Arvilly's Sympathy

But Arvilly looked at it different. She said she believed her husband drinked and got led off into all sorts of sins and made Celia no end of trouble and riz this monument up to smooth things over.

But I sez, "Mebby things wuz different then;" but didn't really spoze so, human nater havin' capered about the same from the start. "'Tennyrate," sez I, "I shall always believe that Miss Crassus wuz good as gold, and this great massive monument that it seems as if the hand of Time can't ever throw down I take as a great compliment to my sect as well as Celia Crassus.

But Arvilly wuz as firm as a rock to the last in her belief that Mr. Crassus drinked and that Miss Crassus wuz broken-hearted by her grief and anxiety and tryin' to cover up her pardner's doin's as the wives of drunkards will, and tryin' to keep her children from follerin' their pa's dretful example, and then after he'd jest killed her with these doin's he rared up this great monument as a conscience soother.

Josiah thought Celia wuz eqinomical and a wonderful good cook, and her grateful pardner riz this up in honor of his blissful life with her.

Miss Meechim thought that at all events she must have been genteel.

Robert and Dorothy looked at its massive walls, and I hearn him say sunthin' to her kinder low about "how love wuz stronger than time or death."

But Tommy just wonnered at it, wonnered who Celia Matella wuz, how she looked, how old she wuz, if she had any little boys and girls. He jest wonnered and nothin' else, and in the end I did, too.

You have no idee till you see how big the Colosseum is. It is as long as from our house to she that wuz Submit Tewksberry's, and so on round by Solomon Gowdey's back agin. You may not believe it, but it is true, and I d'no but it is bigger. It used to accommodate one hundred thousand people in its palmy days, or so I spoze they called it, when some time durin' one season five thousand beasts would be killed there fightin' with human bein's, hull armies of captives bein' torn to pieces there for the delight of them old pagans. Fathers bein' made to kill their wives and children right there for their delight.

Oh, how I wished, as I told Arvilly, I could git holt of Mr. Titus and Mr. Nero and some of the rest of them leadin' men.

At the Great Amphitheatre

Sez I, "I'd gin 'em a piece of my mind if I knowed they would make me fight with a elephant the next minute."

Arvilly thought that if she could sold them the Twin Crimes it might have helped 'em to do better, but I d'no as it would. But that great amphitheatre where the blood and agony of the martyrs cried to heaven, was afterwards dedicated to these Christian martyrs. There are eighty arches of entrance. Only a part of the immense circular wall is now standing, but you can see what it wuz. There are four stories of arches, one hundred and fifty-seven feet high in all, the arena it encloses is two hundred and eighty-seven feet long.

Dorothy and Robert Strong and Miss Meechim went and see it by moonlight, and they say that it wuz a more beautiful sight than word's can describe. But I bein' a little afraid of the rumatiz, thought that I had better go by broad daylight, and Josiah did, too. I mistrusted that Robert and Dorothy beheld it by a sweeter and softer light than even the Italian moonlight, but I kep' in and didn't speak my mistrustin'. I dast as soon die as gin vent to any such idee before Albina Meechim.

We went one day to see the Pantheon, built by Mr. Agrippa, 27 B.C. It is a dretful big buildin'; I guess about the biggest ancient buildin' in the world. It has had its ups and downs, shown out in brilliant beauty, been stole from and blackened by the hand of Time, but it is still beautiful.

It wuz dedicated to Jupiter at first, and afterwards to the Virgin and the Christian martyrs, afterwards it was dedicated to all the saints.

In speakin' on this subject, Josiah said: "What a lot of saints they do have in these furren countries," and says he to me, soto vosy, "I'd kinder like, Samantha, to get that name; Saint Josiah would sound well and uneek in Jonesville."

But I scorfed at the idee, though knowin' that he wuz jest as worthy to be called saint as a good many who wuz called by that name.

But Josiah is dretful ambitious. When we wuz lookin' at the different pictures of the popes in their high hats, sez he:

"How becomin' such a hat would be to me. I believe I shall be took in one when I get home; I could take Father Allen's and Father Smith's old stove-pipe hats and set my best one on top, and then cut out a wooden cross on top; how uneek it would be."

But I spoze he will forgit it before he gits home—I hope so 'tennyrate.

The Vatican where the Pope keeps house is the biggest house in the world; its dimensions are one thousand one hundred and fifty-one feet, by seven hundred and sixty-seven feet. And if you want to realize the size of such a buildin', you jest try to frame it and you'd find out. Why, as I told Josiah, Joel Gowdey is called our best carpenter in Jonesville, but if he should try to plan that buildin', where would he be? He is a great case to scratch his head in difficulties, Joel is, and I guess he'd be pretty bald before he got through studyin' on it, much less doin' the work. It has twenty courts, two hundred staircases, and 'leven thousand rooms. Josiah worried some about it, and sez:

"What duz one old man want of 'leven thousand rooms? He can't be in more'n one to time, and if he tried to go round and see if his hired help kep' 'em swep' up and mopped and the winders cleaned, it would keep him on the go the hull time and be too much for him."

But I told Josiah that Mr. Pope didn't make use of the hull buildin' his own self, but there wuz libraries in it and museums and picture galleries. I believe myself Mr. Pope is a real likely man, of which more anon. I don't believe that there is a room in the U. S. or the hull surroundin' world so grand and magnificent as the Great Hall of the Vatican Library. It is over two hundred feet long, and glorious in architecture and ornaments from top to bottom. It contains the most priceless treasures in books and manuscripts. For hundreds of years the collection has been constantly growing by purchase, gifts and conquests. One of its choicest treasures is the Bible of the fourth century.

The picture galleries in the Vatican contain pictures and statutes enough, it seems to me, to ornament the parlors of the world if they wuz divided up. And the museum—I don't spoze there is so big a collection in the world of such rare and costly things, and I spoze like as not there will never be another one so large and valuable. I never should try it, nor Josiah wouldn't. It would be too big a tug on our strength, if we had oceans of money, and can no more be described than I could count the sands of the sea and set 'em in rows.

VISITING THE COLOSSEUM BY NIGHT

We thought one day we would visit the Pantheon. Miss Meechim didn't really want to go on account of her conscience partly, and I too felt some as she did, for it wuz a pagan temple riz up to all the gods twenty-seven years before Christ. But finally we all did go. As I told Miss Meechim, we could keep up a stiddy thinkin' on better things, if we wuz lookin' on pagan shrines.

She said she wuz afraid that Rev. Mr. Weakdew wouldn't approve of her being there, and she didn't seem to enjoy herself very much and I d'no as I did. But it must have been a glorious place as fur as beauty is concerned in its prime, for it is beautiful in its ruin. There are no windows, but it has a large circular openin' in the ruff through which I spoze the smoke of sacrifice ascended, not much, I believe, above the figures that used to stand up there fifty feet above the marble and porphry pavement—Mars, Jupiter, Apollo, Minerva, Vulcan, etc., etc. For all everything has been stole from this gorgeous temple that could be, it is grand-lookin' and beautiful now.

MISSIONARY WORK IN SAMOA

REV. Ebenezer V. Cooper, an English missionary at Tutuila and the Manua group of islands in Samoa, has written a very interesting letter to the Navy Department on the general moral condition of affairs at Tutuila. He says:

Having had for some years past the entire oversight of the religious and educational work on Tutuila and the three islands of the Manua group, I am perhaps in a better position to express the feelings of the islanders on the changes made and being made than any other foreigner resident in these islands. Of the 6,000 population, I have intimate dealings with over 5,000, and am in close touch with their ideas. The natives are more than satisfied to find themselves under the beneficent protection of your Government. Not merely as the missionary of five-sixths of the islanders of Eastern Samoa, but as a Britisher representing a British Missionary Society, to which all Samoa owes its evangelizing and its enlightenment, it is a sincere pleasure to me to express my personal gratitude and satisfaction that your people and Government have become definitely and intimately allied with these islands and their people. That connection cannot but make for the betterment and progress of the islands and islanders alike. When it is remembered that the Government of the United States, through its representative, Commander B. F. Tilley, is now promulgating law and order on a firm, humane, and enlightened basis, for the first time in the history of missionary enterprise in these islands, there is reason for the deepest satisfaction on our part, and it must be equally gratifying to your Government and people to be able to help these islanders to better circumstances, under which they may live together peaceably and progressively. Commander Tilley has done a great deal in a short time, and has done it well and quietly. I have heard natives expressing the hope that he might remain for a long time to come in the position of Governor over Eastern Samoa.

More than five-sixths of these islanders now under your flag are Protestant Christians. They are, on the whole, very loyal to our English Mission, which has wrought for all Samoa, now just on seventy years—our Mission being the pioneer Mission to Samoa, as it was to the South Pacific generally. We have given to these islanders not only a religious literature, but we have given them an educational literature, at a great cost of time and expenditure. We have a system of education extending from village schools to a fairly high class school, and it will be our endeavor to develop and foster this educational work as far as we are able. But, as you may well imagine, the expenditure of our Mission is far beyond what the natives voluntarily contribute; that is nothing, however, if we can only succeed in assisting these islanders to higher ideals, when they shall seek good for its own sake. We trust that these natives may realize that they are in touch with a great people, and respond to every endeavor put forth in their behalf to fit them for a new and useful destiny. All we ask from your Government is a kindly consideration for all that we have tried to do hitherto, and for our continuing labors to make of these islanders an enlightened Christian people.

Hawaii Helps Starving India

India's sad condition has excited world-wide sympathy. From distant Hawaii this letter comes, which shows that the people of the remote Pacific have heard of and felt for India's suffering people:

HILO, Hawaii.

DEAR DR. KLOPSCH: You will please find enclosed $20, a donation from a small band of converted Portuguese in Hilo, who have never been accustomed to giving. If you will take time, in acknowledging the receipt of this money, to drop a line to them, telling them the worst things you saw about the starving people and also the eagerness or gratefulness with which food was welcomed, it might encourage these people to give again.

Faithfully yours. R. K. BAPTISTE.

"The Hall of the Christ"

AT Chautauqua, a building to bear this name — the first institution of its kind—is in process of erection; and when completed it will be the gem of that lovely summer city of piety and learning. The hall is to be devoted to the study of the Christ. Here, classes will be formed, and lectures and illustrated descriptions of Palestine and particularly of the various scenes and places closely identified with the life of our Lord will be given; the history, social life and customs of his time—everything in fact bearing upon the character, teachings and influence of the God-man, Christ Jesus — will have a place in the course of instruction, research and inspiration for which this unique temple is being fashioned. "It is not," says Mr. Peltz, the architect, who is carrying out the idea and plan as conceived by Bishop Vincent, "to be a place of worship as generally understood by that term. It is in reality a place where spiritual truths will be taught the same as in every other science. It is to be undenominational and for all who believe that Christ is the incarnation of the Divine."

Architecturally, the building is Roman-Greek, because Christ made his appearance when the Roman-Greek type was the dominant style prevailing. The east wing will be devoted to sacred art; the west to literature on the life of Christ. The mural decoration of the great central hall will, as now purposed, be a continuous picture illustrating the parables. The site chosen, a fine grove on rising ground near the classic Hall of Philosophy, is especially fitting, groves being intimately associated with early Christian worship.

THE NEW "HALL OF THE CHRIST," CHAUTAUQUA

A representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD recently visiting Chautauqua, was glad to note how wonderfully the place and the system of education which caused its existence have developed with the years. The present season shows a larger number of visitors than usual; the lectures and various schools and classes, ranging all the way from cooking to psychology are more interesting and varied than ever; the great choir, of 500 trained voices, is alone worth a visit. One of the best attended and most impressive lectures of the season was that on "India," in which the journey to that country of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S corn-ship in 1896–7 was described; eloquent mention made of the mission of its second relief-ship, the Quito; and earnest plea entered for the famine orphans, for whose rescue from destruction of soul and body the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are making such noble and generous efforts.

The Kaiser-Preacher

Seldom do the rulers of the world assume the role of the preacher, but German papers of recent date report that the Emperor William, who has figured as poet and painter, has also entered the pulpit for once. His sermon seems to indicate that the imperial preacher is more familiar with the Old Testament than with the New. His text was Exodus 17: 11: "And it came to pass when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed."

The subject was: "The Holy Duty and Holy Power of Intercession." The reports show that the discourse was belligerent toward China. Of the soldiers going thither the Emperor said:

"They shall be the strong arm which punishes assassins. They shall be the mailed fist which smites that chaotic mass. They shall defend, sword in hand, our holiest possessions.

"True prayer can still cast the banner of the dragon into the dust and plant the banner of the cross upon the walls."

Other extracts are the following:

"Once again has the heathen spirit of the Amalekites been raised in distant Asia with great power and much cunning. With destruction and murder it will dispute the way to European trade and European culture. It will dispute the victorious march of Christian customs and Christian faith.

"And again is heard God's command: 'Choose us out men and go out to fight Amalek.' A hot and sanguinary struggle has begun. Already a number of our brethren are over there under fire. Many more are traveling along hostile coasts.

"You have seen them, the thousands who at the call for volunteers to the front to guard the Empire, have assembled themselves to battle with victorious banners. We who remain at home are bound by other sacred duties. Woe unto us if we remain slothful and sluggish while they are engaged in their difficult and bloody work, and if, from our place of security, we only curiously look on while they wrestle in battle.

"Not only should we mobilize battalions of troops, but we should also, and shall, set in motion an army of trained people to beg and entreat for our brethren that they may strike into the wild chaos with sword in hand. May they strike for our most sacred possessions! We would pray that God, the Lord, may make heroes of our men and lead those heroes to victory, and that then, with laurels on their helmets and orders on their breasts, he may lead them home to the land of their fathers.

"Our fight will not be finished in one day; but let not our hands grow weary or sink until victory is secured. Let our prayers be as a wall of fire around the camp of our brethren.

"Eternity will reveal the fulfilment of an old promise: 'Call upon me in trouble, and I will deliver thee.' Therefore, pray continuously."

Answered Prayers

Reader, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "In behalf of wife and self, giving glory to God for an answer to praying for the restoration of both to health."

Reader, Iowa City, Ia., writes: "I prayed when in trouble and the Lord answered my prayer. I said I would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and now desire to give God the glory."

Reader, Island Pond, Vt., writes: "I prayed for my sister, promising if she was restored to health to acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. She is on the way to complete recovery, and I hasten to write to redeem my promise."

Reader, Denison, Ia., writes: "I promised the Lord if he would restore me to health, while suffering from a severe illness, I would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I am now recovered, and I write this to keep my word and try to tell how thankful I am."

Unanswered Prayers

"THERE is no use in praying," Alice Franklin's mournful face and black, trailing robes were well-suited to each other, as she rose slowly from her chair in a darkened room to receive her friend. "The Lord has done his worst. My son is dead."

The friend took her passive hand, chill and limp, though the mid-summer day was warm. "Why do you say there is no use in praying, dearest Alice?" she inquired very gently, for a sore grief had come to this house, in the sudden cutting off of a young man in the pride of his youth.

"I prayed, and prayed, and prayed," said the poor mother, in a monotonous, tuneless voice; "but the doctors did their utmost, and Hugh could not survive the operation. Prayer does no good. The heavens are deaf."

"I know how lonely you are, my dear," and the friend spoke very softly, for she, too, knew grief and woe, "but you must not accuse God. There may be reasons which he keeps to himself why it was better for Hugh to go to him than to remain longer here. His servants shall serve him there, and he knows why he takes them up higher, even when their going makes us very desolate. Prayer which seems unanswered often has the kindest answer. We can but rest our hearts on the blessed will of God, and be assured that whatever he sends, or whatever he takes away, all is right. Pray to him still, dear heart, if only for submission."

The household of the sorrowing is always a very large one, and there are often in it those who are tempted to charge the Lord with forgetfulness because they do not receive from him the "yes" they pray for. But sooner or later, if we continue on earth, we learn that God's way for us is best, and that a boon withheld, or a boon denied, is better than a granted boon, if God so please. And, if we are Christians who believe in an immortal life, and in the everlasting service of heaven, ought we not to felicitate those who go from this troublesome world to that happy one? "I wish you joy, my daughter," said a saint of God, Mrs. Isabella Graham, as she stood beside the coffin where, like a broken lily, her child lay in the last sleep.

Alice Franklin could not realize it in the first stunning effect of her boy's sudden death, but the Lord who called him hence was merciful and good, and as surely as the sun shall rise in the morning sky, comfort would come to her in time. Hers was the common mistake of feeling that God is forgetting us because he deals us a blow, not in chastisement, but in love, as in old times the king's sword laid heavily on the shoulder of a kneeling man was the accolade of knighthood.

THE PRAYER OF CHILDHOOD

"Our Father,"—sweet as breath of flowers at morn, Ascendeth praise where little children pray:
Not lovelier is the lark's glad song at dawn,
Not brighter is the promise of the day.

"Our Father,"—one can never orphaned be
Who says these words to us by Jesus given.
"Our Father,"—lo, the tender, hallowed plea
Giveth the homeless hope of home in heaven!

—A READER. You have common sense, a rare endowment in these days, when we are all so full of fads and fancies. I would rather my daughter had that than the most elaborate accomplishments under the sun.

—W. A. G. It would be very queer and unfriendly of a young woman not to invite her old friend and schoolmate to call on her when he should pass through her town en route somewhere else. She might even go farther and ask him to dinner or to tea with propriety. Common sense rules in such matters. As a general thing, we need not be afraid to violate a conventional rule by doing a kind act.

—CLARICE. You may take this comfort concerning the evil and blasphemous thoughts that torment you, that they are suggestions from without, from the devil or his agents. The Bible tells us that this enemy of our race is always going about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. I have no doubt whatever that many of the disturbing fancies which assail you in prayer came straight from him, the Bible says again, "resist the devil, and he will flee from you."

The Broad and Narrow Way*

A Way Broad Enough for the Soul But Not Broad Enough for Sin . .

IN one of the secret societies, the candidate for admission is said to be taken into an outer room and directed to remove from his person all money and every article of value he has. He is also ordered to take off his coat and vest. In that condition he must knock at the door of the room in which the members of the order are assembled and ask for admission as a poor man. It is explained to him afterwards that he went through that discipline to teach him that it was not his possessions nor his rich clothing that obtained admission to the order for him, but that he was admitted as a poor man and he must therefore be ready to receive and help the poor. Admission to Christ's kingdom is similarly the admission of a soul, not of a man of wealth and honor. Those are extraneous things that do not count. The rich man and the poor man are equally welcome to Christ if they come in the right spirit. The gate by which they enter is strait, that is, narrow, because people bearing burdens of wealth are not wanted there. It is the man himself who is wanted. He must leave his riches outside, otherwise he cannot get through the narrow gate. This does not mean that a rich man must strip himself of his possessions before Christ will receive him; but it does mean that he must be ready to do so if he discovers that only in that way can he become a member of Christ's kingdom. It is the spirit that is tested. A man who loves his wealth more than he loves Christ, who being confronted with the alternative of giving up his wealth or giving up Christ, would give up Christ, is not fit for the kingdom of Christ.

The familiar story of the child and the vase illustrates this principle. The child playing alone in his father's parlor raised an outcry. His father found the trouble was that the boy had put his hand in a valuable vase and could not withdraw it. After pulling at it in vain, the father thought it would be necessary to break the vase to liberate the child: but, as it was very beautiful and precious, he was reluctant to do so, and so made one more effort. "Now, my boy," he said, "open your hand and bring your finger tips close together, and we will pull." The child shook his head and said, "No, if I open my hand I shall drop my penny." He had a penny tightly clutched in his little fist, and it was in trying to secure that, that he had got into his difficulty. The tight clutch on this world's goods has held many a man a prisoner. Many a man has perished in a fire through trying to save some of his valuables. Not long ago a man was drowned because when he jumped into the sea from a sinking vessel, he had around his body a belt heavily weighted with his gold. There are times when a man must choose whether he will lose his property or his life. In the French Revolution, at the close of the last century, the man of wealth and honor was sure to be denounced and sent to the guillotine. The only way of escape if he had stayed until the Reign of Terror began, was to give up everything and become a poor man. Every one sees that in such a strait the path of wisdom is to abandon the property to save the life; but few realize that when it is the soul that is in peril, it should be saved at the cost of everything else. Such an alternative is not presented to every rich man. There are many who would hold their wealth so lightly that they would follow Christ at any sacrifice, and of such the sacrifice is not required.

Christ looks to the heart in every case: the outward circumstances do not enter into the judgment. Pride, avarice and lust will keep a man out of the kingdom, whether they are gratified or not. It was only sticks and straws that the man whom Bunyan saw was raking together, but he was so intent on them that he had no leisure to look up at the angel who was offering him a crown. The strait gate is wide enough to admit any soul, but not wide enough to admit any sin. In an evangelistic service in Brooklyn recently, a young man was deeply moved. He prayed earnestly and he sought the advice of the preacher. The way of salvation was clearly explained to him and he evidently understood it, but he could not find peace. "You must be keeping something secret from me," said the preacher. "I am," said the young man. He drew from his pocket a letter and said: "This is it. This is an invitation I have long sought and planned to get. I have tried by every means I know to overcome the scruples of the writer, but the invitation was withheld. It has come at last and I must accept; I know it is wrong, but I cannot resist." The preacher said: "Well, your soul is at stake; God help you, for I cannot." It is such things that hem in the way and make it narrow. There is no difficulty in taking them into the broad way; but the end of that way is destruction. There is nothing for nothing in this life. Every truly desirable thing can be attained only by sacrifice. It costs, and the question is whether it is worth what it will cost. Christ made no secret of the fact. To follow him was not easy; it was no path of roses, but the end was eternal life.

A Bowery Mission Composer

VICTOR H. BENKE, the organist of the Bowery Mission, the story of whose conversion has recently been related in these columns, has appeared before the Christian public in a new light—that of a composer of sacred song. Shortly after his conversion, he came into contact with Mr. Ira D. Sankey, who secured his services as organist for a series of Gospel meetings in Cooper Union. Since that time, in all the Moody meetings in Carnegie Hall, Grand Central Palace, and elsewhere, he has invariably occupied the same position. It is only recently, however, that Mr. Sankey became aware of his ability as a composer, and being impressed with the originality and beauty of his first productions, contracted with Mr. Benke for every musical production that came from his pen, which will be published by the Biglow & Main Co. Many of Mr. Benke's compositions have already been published, and a small ten-cent edition of his sacred songs has appeared. Mr. Sankey himself is surprised at the readiness with which Mr. Benke composes his beautiful tunes. Very often whilst travelling on a ferry-boat or train, or even during the progress of the Bowery Mission meeting, from which he is rarely, if ever, absent, he may be seen suddenly to dive into his pocket for a scrap of paper and pencil, and in a few minutes another tune, of exquisite beauty, and perfect in all its harmonic parts, has come into existence. In the little collection of sacred songs alluded to, there appear a few that have already been sung to delighted audiences in several of the city churches by Mr. Benke and his coadjutors from the Bowery Mission; and by soloists at the Gospel tent. Probably the tunes that are destined to live the longest are, "Like a Shepherd," "Just for To-day," and "I'm Holding On." The book also contains a few of Mr. Sankey's and Mr. Stebbins' best and most popular tunes.

Kind Words from an Indian Journal

(Indian Witness, Bombay, July 7)

A telegram is published announcing the receipt by the Bombay Relief Committee of a third remittance of $100,000 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York. One may apply the words of King Lemuel in this case: "Other (papers) have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all."

Soap (a good one) Powder

Pearline is the Original Powder—The Best—the largest seller among intelligent people and the mark for all imitations and substitutes. The difference in the price of Pearline and the cheapest imitation is nominal. One garment ruined would consume the saving of a year 615.

SUMMER JOYS AT MONT-LAWN

SCUPS, WILD FLOWERS AND RING-A-ROSIES—THE STAGE RIDE—WOODLAND RAMBLE—DINNER TIME

THE summer days are passing all too swiftly for our joyous tots at Mont-Lawn. Every little guest seems to be seeking to make the very most out of his or her outing. The hillsides ring with glad shouts and merry laughter, the scups are in constant occupation by happy folk; tiny lads and lassies, clasping hands in gay ring-a-rosies, circle continually about the lawn, singing "All around the mulberry-bush," and other ring-a-rosy ditties. Groups of wee busybodies may be seen at the big sand-pile, making sand houses and mud pies to their heart's content. Here and there one finds a quiet little one sitting off by himself, singing in a way, thoroughly satisfied at his undisturbed freedom and at the sand-castle which he is constructing exactly according to his own notion, with no big boy by to give advice as to how it ought to be done. Presently a sound comes from the road:

Here we are! here we are!
C. H., C. H., ha! ha! ha!

The stage rolls in at the gate, loaded with boys and girls who have been taken on a ride in the country, over the hills and around by placid Rockland Lake. They have marvelous stories to tell of cows and ducks and chickens seen on the way; and of pleasant adventures with kindly farmers who had good words and gifts of apples for the little city waifs. Another company soon makes it appearance, returning from a long stroll in the woods, arms loaded down with ferns and wild-flowers, and tongues wagging merrily with tales of fun and frolic.

The dinner-bell rings, and then isn't there a scampering from all directions of hungry, happy children! How blithely they march into the big tent to the rat-a-tat-tat of the important little drummer who leads the way. Standing around the long tables, they fold their little hands and sing their pretty grace:

God is great, God is good,
And we thank him for this food.

The justice that is done to the bountiful repast beggars description. "Mountains of bread and oceans of milk" disappear, and meat and potatoes suffer no neglect. Teachers fly from table to table, careful that no child shall rise up hungry. This is a company unused to having enough; many of them know what sharp, unsatisfied hunger is, what it is to go breakfastless, dinnerless and supperless, picking up a bit of food here and there as they can find it. The following are typical cases:

Katie L.'s mama sent her away from her father, who drank and beat her. The child's back is lame from a blow and she has a chronic digestive trouble which the doctors attribute to unnatural fastings. The little girl was happy during her first day at the Home, but as night came on she began to be depressed. Her teacher heard her crying in her little cot and bent over her. "O teacher," sobbed the faithful little one, "I'm so afraid for my mama. My papa'll come home drunk and he'll hurt my mama." The anxiety that weighed down this tiny creature was so great that it took her nearly a week to enter fully into the sweet, happy life of care-free childhood, guarded and guided as it is at our Home; letters from her mama and comforting assurances from her teacher that God was ever present with her mama, helped to put the little troubled heart at ease.

Gertrude is one of a family of six who occupy two tiny rooms in a big, squalid tenement. She looked thin, pale and bloodless and as if she couldn't live a week when she came to the Home. "When I was sick," she said, "a good doctor came and he said I ought to have heaps of milk and eggs, and my mama cried; and he gave me milk tickets. But they were all gone and I didn't have any milk tickets for a long time before I came here. I get lots of milk here—and it's got thick cream on it. It's awful nice to play on grass, too. I never played on grass before I came here."

HALF the trouble people have with paint, nowadays, is because they hurry the painter. If you want the old-fashioned kind of painting — the kind that lasts — employ a competent painter and see that he uses Pure "old Dutch process" White Lead [these in margin are genuine brands] and allow time enough between coats for the paint to dry.

FREE For colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

DR. TALKS OF FOOD

Pres. of Board of Health.

"What shall I eat?" is the daily inquiry the physician is met with. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment, a large percentage of disease is caused by poorly selected and improperly prepared food. My personal experience with the fully cooked food, known as Grape-Nuts, enables me to speak freely of its merits.

"From overwork, I suffered several years with malnutrition, palpitation of the heart, and loss of sleep. Last summer I was led to experiment personally with the new food, which I used in conjunction with good rich cow's milk. In a short time after I commenced its use, the disagreeable symptoms disappeared, my heart's action became steady and normal, the functions of the stomach were properly carried out and I again slept as soundly and as well as in my youth.

"I look upon Grape-Nuts as a perfect food, and no one can gainsay but that it has a most prominent place in a rational, scientific system of feeding. Any one who uses this food will soon be convinced of the soundness of the principle upon which it is manufactured and may thereby know the facts as to its true worth." W. B. Conway, M. D., Pres. Athens, Ga., Board of Health.

CHRIST IS LEFT AND HE IS ALL

DO thy friends reproach and grieve thee?
Do disasters swiftly fall?
Cherished hopes and blessings leave thee?
Christ is left and he is all.

CHO.—Christ is left and he is all;
Christ is left and he is all.
Never fear, tho all forsake thee,
Christ is left and he is all.

"When thou passest through the waters,"
He has said, "I am with thee;
Trust me, O my sons and daughters,
Ye shall safely stay with me!"

On the Rock thy feet are planted
If thy trust in God abide.
Great deliverance shall be granted
If thy heart be true when tried.

News from Nome

Late and reliable news from Cape Nome reaches us through a letter from Rev. Loyal L. Wirt, who reports a somewhat improved state of affairs there. He says:

In the midst of the indescribable rush and scramble seen, heard and felt on every side in this great camp of tents and unfinished buildings, I stop just long enough to send a word of greeting to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers, and to say that the beds and medicines have safely arrived and are already being put to their beneficent use. With the aid of this new equipment and the cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce, the hospital is already planning to give the poor a free dispensary; and to provide adequate care for the indigent sick of the place. There have been considerable smallpox and pneumonia since the "rush" came, but with the city drained, and good water piped down from "Moonlight Creek" in the hills, all forms of disease are lessening. The long-looked-for rains have just come, and there is much anxiety felt for the health of those not properly sheltered. Lack of water has caused nearly all the mines to shut down. Wages and the price of commodities have been reduced from a half to three-fourths. Thousands of newcomers are disappointed and are returning to the States. But Nome has still more people than gold for them to find. LOYAL L. WIRT.

St. Paul Park Incident.

"After drinking a cup and a half of coffee once a day I always felt languid and dull, having no ambition to get to my morning duties. Then in about an hour or so a weak, nervous derangement of the heart and stomach would come over me with such force I would frequently have to lie down.

"At other times I had severe headaches; stomach finally became affected and digestion so impaired that I had serious chronic dyspepsia and constipation. Mrs. H. A. Hober, for many years State president of the W.C.T.U., a personal friend, told me she had been greatly benefitted by quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee; she was troubled for years with asthma. She said it was no cross to quit coffee when she found she could have as delicious an article as Postum Food Coffee.

"Another lady, Mrs. Mary Baker, of Red Wing, Minn., had been troubled with chronic dyspepsia for years and found immediate relief on ceasing coffee and beginning Postum Food Coffee twice a day. She was wholly cured. Mrs. Judge Stocker of Minneapolis told me that Postum Food Coffee was a God-send to her, her heart trouble having been relieved after leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee.

"So many such cases came to my notice that I concluded coffee was the cause of my trouble and I quit and took up Postum. I am more than pleased to say that my days of trouble have disappeared. I am well and happy." Mrs. Mary Harrington, St. Paul Park, Minn.

SHE SANG FOR INDIA

ANOTHER young singer has been helping India's suffering children. Miss E. R. Proud, of Port Richmond, S. I., recently handed to the Fund

MISS E. R. PROUD

$95 for India, the proceeds of a concert, which was the result of her own enterprise, in which she induced her friends to take part, and to which she lent the melody of her own sweet voice. She tells the story of her undertaking thus:

"I just asked the aid of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and they generously printed me the tickets and posters, which people of our town kindly displayed in windows. The official board of Trinity M.E.Church, of which I am a member, granted the use of the building and gave the lights. Then I went to work and got up my programme, securing enough advertisements for the back of the sheet to pay all incidental expenses of the printing and entertainment." Miss Proud had made a previous gift to India, but she says: "I did not feel satisfied that I had done enough work for my Master."

With Dr. Klopsch in India

Mr. B. A., a Christian worker in India, writing from Chikulda Berar, says of Dr. Klopsch's recent tour:

It was an inspiration to be daily in his company, so remarkable was his energy and so genuine and undemonstrative his sympathy in the starvation, which he saw for the first time and all at once in its most awful form. I could scarcely have believed that a man with so lively a sense for the interesting and enjoyable side of life would come to India without visiting one of the places which tourists love to see, or giving a thought or an hour to the lions of the cities where duty took him. His mind was bent on seeing the famine, and he spared no effort to see as much of it as possible. He knew nothing of midday rest or afternoon siesta, but either wrote in the house or went about inspecting all day long. Although not in good health, suffering habitually from sleeplessness, and quite unused to the Indian sun, he thrice took a drive of from six to fourteen miles in the heat of the day, and then spent one, two, or three hours on his feet inspecting a relief work or a poor-house. I have known him to visit three places in a day, and walk about in the blazing sun of May for several hours at a time, till he had seen all he wanted.

An Octogenarian Christian

From a reader in New Jersey (Mrs. John R. Fanshawe) we have received this very interesting letter:

SPRING LAKE BEACH, N. J., Aug. 18.

DEAR EDITOR: I thought it might be interesting for you to know that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been read for years by an old lady of eighty, who has not been able to leave her bed for fifty years. She lives among the hills of Wales with her daughter. At times she reads the paper by holding an oil lamp in one hand and the paper in the other. The sermons by Dr. Talmage she reads with the utmost interest. What a joy to her if she could see Dr. Talmage face to face, and hold his hand in a warm Christian grasp. Sincerely yours,

MRS. J. R. FANSHAWE.

This offer is good for a limited time only. Good Freesia bulbs usually sell for 5 cents each. The regular subscription price of HOW TO GROW FLOWERS is 50 cents a year.

Flowers are Nature's sweetest gift to man. Their fragrant presence is always welcome, but is never so highly appreciated as during the dreary days of winter. It is then flowers most appeal to us, and every home should possess at least a few winter blooming plants. The Freesia is the best of winter blooming bulbs. No description can do adequate justice to its beauty. The flowers are two inches long and about the same in width, shaped like miniature gladioli, and borne in clusters of six to ten, on depressed horizontal scapes. The body of the flower is pure white, lower segments spotted with yellow. The perfume is most delicious. The cultivation of the Freesia is of the simplest, as the bulbs require only to be potted, watered sparingly at first, placed in a sunny window, and watered more freely as growth progresses. To have the best results, the bulbs should be planted early in the fall—this month if possible.

Brought back to life.

This was virtually the case with Mrs. Nellie Cameron, of Lockport, N. Y. She was the victim of a severe case of stomach trouble and was slowly starving to death. She could derive no nourishment from her food, as the stomach was too weak to retain it long enough to digest it. She wasted to a mere shadow, doctors failed to help her and she lost all hope of recovery, until finally on the advice of a friend she began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and to them she owes her life. Here is her own story:

"In the fall of 1898 I was in a deplorable condition. I had stomach trouble in the very worst form. Nothing at all would stay on my stomach, and I had to almost starve myself. My side pained me constantly. The lack of nourishment caused me to lose flesh rapidly; I dropped from 138 to 97 pounds, growing weaker all the time. There was not the slightest color in my face. I was simply a shadow of my former self. Able physicians treated me, but failed absolutely. I was a complete wreck when a friend told me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. One box greatly improved my condition; it was astonishing how quickly they built me up. I believe Dr. William's Pink Pills for Pale People saved my life. I was enabled to sleep, and in the morning I felt refreshed and rested. My stomach was strengthened, what I ate benefited me, my weight increased, and I soon regained all that I had lost. I am now well and strong. I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Nellie Cameron.

A Remarkable Remedy for

Rheumatism

Mr. J. F. Brookfield writes from Salisbury, N. C.: "While in Knoxville, Tenn., last December, I met an elderly gentleman, a professor of music, who had been troubled for several years with rheumatism. I told him I would send down, before I left town, a bottle of Tartarlithine, which I believed would help him if it didn't entirely relieve him. While in Montgomery, this trip, his son told me it did his father so much benefit that they had written to you to send their father half a dozen bottles. The benefit given to the old gentleman is very remarkable, after exhausting all the physician's skill, and the legion of remedies advertised for his complaint had been used."

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00, and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent free.

STRAUSS MFG. CO.,
369 Broadway, N.Y.

Gentlemen:—I send you today copy of a Baltimore paper, giving a very complimentary notice of the "Zobo" Concert given last night by the Beacon Light Zobo Band, composed of members of the choir of the Scott Street United Brethren Church. The concert was a great success, both artistically and financially, and at the close we received an offer at good pay for another engagement. Every church should have a Zobo Band. It is the pleasantest and easiest way of raising money that I ever tried or heard of, because any one that can hum a tune can play on a Zobo.

WM. J. SIEMERS.
912 South Paca Street.

The Zobo Plan of Raising Money

for Sunday Schools, Young Men's Christian Associations, Mission Bands, King's Daughter's Circles, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavor Societies, Women's Sewing Societies, etc., guarantees the largest returns for the smallest outlay of labor and expense.

Organize a Zobo Band and Give Concerts.

The novelty of it will draw large audiences and insure profitable results. All you have to do is to call together a number of your church members who can hum a tune, give them Zobo Instruments according to their voices, and there's your band.

Why You Should Own a Zobo.

Because you can play it at once without any lessons.
Because its price is very reasonable.
Because it is suited to all kinds of voices.
Because it is a constant source of pleasure.
Because it is a complete entertainment in itself.
Because it can be excellently accompanied by piano, organ or any string instrument.
Because it improves and highly cultivates the voice.

The Musical Masterpiece of the Century

Zobo is so ingeniously devised as to produce the richest, mellowest, strongest and most resonant tones A full Zobo Band composed of a combination of our Zobo instruments does the work of a grand pipe organ, thus providing an entertainment elevating and artistic, as well as highly amusing.

Zobo Has Come to Stay.

Hundreds of letters from pastors, teachers, choir-leaders, singers and musicians all over the country conclusively show that Zobo Brass Instruments have created an enthusiasm which is far beyond the most sanguine expectations of their friends.

Zobo was awarded first prize gold medal at the Greater American Exposition held at Omaha, Neb., Nov. 1, 1899.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze

COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

Over $28,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years.

QUESTIONS . . . . . OF THE WEEK

1. When do the "dog-days" begin and how did the term originate?

A period of from four to six weeks, variously placed by almanac makers between the early part of July and the early part of September, is called "dog-days," in reference to the rising in ancient times of the dog-star (Sirius) with the sun, popularly the sultry, close part of the summer. The conjunction of the rising of the dog-star with the rising of the sun was regarded by the ancients as one of the causes of the sultry heat of summer, and of the maladies which then prevailed. These days the Romans called the caniculares dies ("days of the dogs.") But as the conjunction does not occur at the same time in all latitudes, and is not constant in the same region for a long period, there has been much variation in calendars regarding the limits of the dog-days. In an ancient calendar of Bede, the beginning of dog days is placed on the 14th of July. In a calendar prefixed to the Common Prayer, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, they began on the 6th of July and ended on the 5th of September. From the restoration to the beginning of New Style (1752), British almanacs placed the beginning on the 19th of July and the end on the 28th of August. After 1752, the beginning was put on the 30th of July, the end on the 7th of September. Some English calendars now put the beginning on July 3d, and ending on August 11th. A popular American almanac of the present time places the beginning on the 25th of July and the end on the 5th of September.

2. When a boy or girl of fifteen years old or more, is persistently disobedient, say for example in staying out until a late hour at night, and kindly entreaty, remonstrance, and affectionate warning have all failed to effect reform, what step ought the parent to take?

The only antidote for the special form of disobedience named above, is to make home so attractive that the boy would rather stay at home than go away. This takes patience, time and self-sacrifice on the part of parents. Let a boy be happy at home; let him be free to bring one or more boys home, give him and them a cordial welcome, let him have games or music, or read out loud to him and his friends. A boy will sit for two hours listening to an interesting book who will not sit and read to himself more than ten minutes. They may dirty the carpets or spoil the lawns; but we can cultivate grass and keep the furniture and carpets fresh and new after the boys have grown and left. Right now we must cultivate boys. Get them to learn to play on some musical instrument or use the scroll saw; but in any case give up the evenings to them. It is far easier to keep the house all "just so," to constantly say "don't" and to sit and do fancy work, or read to one's self than to give one's self and time to one's children for a few years, but it will pay. Nagging, fault-finding, lack of appreciation—all these things will drive a boy to seek other companions than those at home, and nothing but making home a place where he is happier than he is away from home will cure this trouble. HETTY R. PARSONS.

[Condensed.]

3. If a man defraud another in a business deal, without the latter's knowledge, and after conversion, seeks to make restitution, is he justified in doing it secretly, in order to avoid forfeiting the good-will of the man he defrauded, or must he confess his fault, while restoring what he had dishonorably acquired?

The Bible teaching seems to be to "confess." I believe, hard as it may seem, that God will bless and guide, and no one can answer for another in such a question, but it seems to me you would not "forfeit" the good will of the other. Generally, an honest confession and restitution demand respect and kindness (after the first shock), at any rate. If Christ's Spirit leads you to do this, you will have no peace if you refuse because of fear of consequences. Take God's word and follow the leading of his Spirit, and whatever comes you will be blessed and happy.

HETTY R. PARSONS.

I believe that a man is justified in keeping the knowledge of his wrong from the victim of it after making restitution, provided he can make restitution and not divulge the evil. My reasons for justifying him are that most men who have been wronged will never forget, although they may forgive an injury. Many also will let the world know of the evil committed against them, and thus be the means of hindering the repentant man from progress in the path of rectitude. It is enough that the injured party should be requited for his loss. As to anything further, it should be a matter between the sinner and his God.

L. T. RIGHTSELL.

4. Among the metaphors of the Bible, what article of common use is so prominent that it is mentioned in references to death, to ruin, to union, to extension, to affection, to desertion, and to the tyranny of bad habits?

A cord in its many applications suggests the metaphorical allusions to which this query refers. We find death described in the poetical language of Ecclesiastes 12: 6, "Or ever the silver cord be loosed." Ruin is illustrated by a broken cord in Job 30: 11, and again in Jeremiah 10: 20; the proverb, "In union there is strength," is given in Ecclesiastes 4: 12, "A threefold cord is not quickly broken;" and extension is marked, Isa. 54: 2, by a lengthening of cords. In Hosea 11: 4, the prophet speaks of God's affection for his people, "I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love." And in the metaphor of Psalm 2: 3, the rebels proclaim their desertion: "Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us." The tyranny of bad habits could not be more forcibly expressed than in the words of Solomon (Proverbs 5: 22), "He shall be holden with the cords of his sins."

FRED L. SAWYER.

[Correct answers have been received also from Amelia Hoyt, Mrs. Sewall Fisher and Fred C. Markert.]

5. What is the earliest record of a system of grammar being used by any nation?

The first attempts at systematic grammar were made in Sanskrit. The Brahmans had always carefully guarded the purity of the Vedas—the Hindu sacred literature, 2000–1500 B.C.—by writing critical observations on the pronunciation and construction of their language. These commentaries were the basis of a great Sanskrit grammar by Panini, a Sanskrit philologist, who lived at a remote and uncertain period, at least 400 B. C. He is the creator of grammatical science and the "inventor of the analytic processes to which linguistics owes its discoveries." His grammar contained 3,996 rules. G. E. KRAUTH.

6. What are the "ways" to which the Psalmist refers as being in the heart of man (Ps. 84: 5)?

The Psalmist had been dwelling on the happiness of the people who were continually in and about the Temple, taking part in the services. He goes on to say practically that still more blessed is the man whose heart is the temple of God. The grand temple service brought the worshiper near to God, but the man was still nearer who not being able to go up to the Temple, found in his own heart the ways of God, and could worship him in spirit and in truth. EDGAR MCDONALD.

7. What is the explanation of China's extraordinary survival, throughout a period extending thousands of years, when all other nations that have arisen in that time have passed away?

An explanation often given is, that China obeys the fifth commandment, and receives the promise of long life. But that is not satisfactory. China superstitiously worships ancestors dead, but does not honor them living. Moreover, the individual Chinese does not have long life. While the days of China have been "long upon the land," yet the days of the Chinaman are not. The real reasons are her isolation and her extreme conservatism. The oriental characteristic to remain changeless is especially pronounced in China. The changes in national customs have come so far apart that the Chinese really think they have not changed. China is a compact body of superstitious, unthinking and inert people. They have been numerous enough that they could not be displaced nor scattered. A wall of separation has always protected them from outward encroachment. They have not been in the field of the world's conflicts in which nations have perished. Their numbers and geographic position taken together have been another isolating force. An ignorant conceit has caused them to regard every other nation as servile, and they have been engrossed proudly at home. Because of the stagnant and immobile thought the Chinese people have remained a compact and inert foundation upon which the dynasties of their heaven-descended rulers have been sustained in their successions and activities. China has lived so long, because it has been dead so long. Then, the very religion of China has gone back to the past and deified it, and never has looked to the future to stir a hope or kindle energy. C. P. ATKINSON.

8. If there are two applicants for a vacant position in a Christian merchant's service and one of them is a Christian and the other not, ought the merchant to give the Christian the preference, if the other is a much more capable man?

As a general rule it would be prejudicial both to the interests of the church and of the industries involved, to disregard excellency of workmanship in favor of Christian character. On the one hand the tendency would be (1) to lead to hypocrisy, character being more easily masked than incompetence; (2) to discourage perseverance and application, which strengthen Christian character. On the other hand the standards of excellency would inevitably deteriorate. Ability and character are quite distinct. If, however, the position is one of trust, the merchant ought to assure himself that the non-Christian is a man of good moral character. WALTER C. WRIGHT.

9. Who was the first visitor to Niagara Falls who wrote or published a description of the Falls?

The first printed allusion to the cataract is in the record of Jacques Cartier in 1535. Its position was first mentioned by Samuel Champlain in a map attached to his voyages, published in 1613. The earliest description of the Falls we find is that given by Father Hennepin, who saw them in 1678, and published an account of his visit accompanied with a sketch in which he mentions a third fall on the north side.

MRS. A. R. BLACHLEY.

[Correct answers have also been received from Grace E. Heaton, A. B. Miller, Mrs. J. H. L. Smead, Mrs. Julia Hallenbeck, C. E. Krauth and L. E. Madan].

10. If a man pays a high rent for a pew in a church because that pew is more comfortable or in a better position, is he entitled to reckon the pew-rent as a part of the tenth which he sets aside for Christ's cause?

The consecration implied in giving the tenth to the cause of Christ will be better maintained by charging only a portion of such pew-rent to that account. A fair adjustment would be to charge only the average pew-rent; any amount paid in excess of that, merely for comfort or display, has no place in this solemn transaction. In keeping such a sacred account with Christ, in which conscience is the only check on selfishness, we need to be careful to take no undue advantage.

"If self the wavering balance shake,
'Tis rarely right adjusted."

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS

Subscriber, Rochester, N. Y. Two young ladies form a friendship that finally develops into human worship. One goes away to visit a friend who is a stranger to the other. The stranger prejudices her so that her love for her friend at home turns to hate and bitterness in a moment. The other tries to explain by writing, but it is of no avail. What can be done to gain her back?

Friendship that develops to the point of "human worship," may be said to to be too much developed. Worship belongs to God alone. If the alienation was caused through no fault of yours, by some misrepresentation which you have failed to explain, better let it alone and time will set it right.

It is evident, from the facts quoted, that they have not enjoyed many educational privileges.

THE SPECTACLE OF THE MIDNIGHT SUN AT THE NORTH CAPE

DR. TALMAGE VIEWS THE MIDNIGHT SUN

.....THE WONDROUS SPECTACLE WITNESSED FROM THE NORTH CAPE—SEA AND SKY AFLAME WITH DAZZLING ILLUMINATION.....

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

WE take steamer from Trondhjem, a proper name that you will pronounce wrongly whichever way ou pronounce it, unless you were born n Norway, or have for a long while prac- sed the strange accentuation. We are ailing for the North Cape, or the North nd of the world, or the Land of the Mid- ight Sun. We start with a depressed pirit, for the voyagers who have just re- eturned from those regions did not see ne wonderful spectacle. There were louds and fogs which would not lift their urtain for the solar exhibition. Our steam- r day after day goes winding among the lands which suggest the Thousand slands of the American waters, and nen among inlets that remind us of Lake ucerne and Cayuga, and by waterfalls hich make you think of those of the osemite, and by mountain torrents tan- led among the crags until the frolicking quids fling themselves in the sea, and nen we go on between snow-covered ocks which are great white thrones of istre and pomp, and our ship's gun artles the seagulls by the millions, and ne echoes of rock which human foot ever trod, and when we ask what means nat cannonade we are informed that we ave passed into the Arctic Sea which round up the Jeannette, and has fought ack the John Franklins and the Doctor anes and the De Longs and the Nansens f the world, and will keep on defying the xplorers until the great palace of arctic old will be left alone, and its keys of rystal are flung down for the peaceful ign of eternal frigidity. The Norway oast is wild and volcanic. It shows nat nature has been in paroxysm. When 'itans play ball they throw rocks.

A Glory of the Skies

It is summer, but all our blankets and urs are brought into service. Good-by straw hats and thin shawls. In a few ours we have passed from June into November. Our faith in the integrity of atches and clocks is very much shaken. hey say it is nine o'clock, and ten clock, and eleven o'clock, and yet not ven a hint of darkness. But all the atches cannot be in conspiracy to de- eive, and every man who has a watch is ooking at it, and all the chronometers gree in saying it is ten minutes of mid- ight. At this time a great thick cloud rops over the sun. We have come four housand miles through the isles of the reat theatre of nature, and alas! there is prospect that the main actor will not ppear upon the stage. Having disap- ointed so many will he disappoint us? Ve are transfixed with anxiety, and are atching and waiting and hoping and al- ost praying that we may see what we have come so far to see. Hush now everybody and everything! Not one cough of the smoke-stack, not one throb of the engine, not one shuffle of the foot lest it disturb the scene. Look! The clouds seem parting, dissolving, passing. Aye! they are gone, and the midnight sun is before us.

Our steamer has moved out of the fjord into the open sea that nothing may hinder our view. The shimmering waters of the polar sea have become forty miles of richest mosaic, and all the angels of beauty and splendor having come down on ladders divinely lowered, walk those pavements of mosaic, and they look like the floor of heaven across which trail the white robes of the beatific. The sun is so bright we looked at it through smoked glasses. The sky was on fire. Enough clouds nearby to make an upholstery of flame. Horses of fire, and chariots of fire rolling through cities of fire. Great masterpiece of the Almighty in the gallery of the sky. Sunrise and sunset married. Niagara of fire. Strange, wierd, overwhelming spectacle, smiting all other natural brilliance into nihility. Searching enough, overmastering enough, glorious enough to be the Eye which never slumbers nor sleeps. We had seen the morning sun, and the noonday sun and the setting sun, but never before had we seen and never again will we see the midnight sun. From what vats of infinite beauty were these colors dipped? A commingling of hues to be found in such excess on no other sky and on no other sea, amber and gold; lavender blending with royal purple; all the shades of yellow, orange, and canary and lemon; all shades of blue, turquoise and sapphire and navy and marine and azure; all shades of green, olive and myrtle and Nile; all shades of red, scarlet and magenta and cardinal, the fiery red cooling into gray, and the gray warming into ruby. Now amethyst seems about to triumph until emerald appears, but the emerald is soon outdone by the carbuncle. It is in some respects the most impressive scene in the whole world.

Joshua's Miracle Recalled

The sun seems disposed to go to bed at the right time, but it does not like the wet pillow offered it, or it changes its mind, for you watch expecting it to hide beneath the wave. But no! Like unto its behavior in Joshua's time, it seems to stand still. Afterward it begins to rise. It banishes the night. It forbids the moon and stars to appear. These lesser lights seem to say: "There is no use in our shining, for the sun does enough of that for all." Victory of light over darkness! The shadows told to go and hide themselves in the dens and caves of the earth!

But do not think that it is easy to climb the North Cape—the rock at the jumping-off place of the world. I advise none to undertake it unless they be strong of limb and lung and heart. From the steamer you push off in a small boat, and after ten minutes' rowing reach the foot of the rock, which, according to the guide-book, is 1,000 feet high, but by the unanimous opinion of those who climb it, about 3,000 feet high. We were not surprised to find a seemingly athletic man give it up and return to the boat. Up and up, slipping and sliding, now holding on to a rock, now to a rope, till you come to a stretch of deep snow affording you no solid place for a foothold, and along by precipices, where the climbers are warned not to look down if they become dizzy at great heights. The most of the ladies got fast in the snow, and would have been there yet but for the gallantry of those who had them in charge. After you feel you have almost reached the top, some encouraging soul will tell you that the worst is yet to come. But you cannot stop there, and so you keep going on and up until you reach the top of Cape North, and find that you have at least a mile to walk before you come to a place of shelter, and the points celebrated in stone for the visits of William II. of Germany and Oscar II. of Sweden. There again you see the midnight sun. But the descent is much more difficult than the ascent, and by the time you reach the steamer you are disposed to say: "I would not have missed that excursion for a thousand dollars and I would not take it again for ten."

A Sleepless Community

But the most trying thing in all the journey to the Land of the Midnight Sun is the perpetual light. There is no suggestion of retirement. You stay up until twelve o'clock to see the wonder in the heavens, and you are so thrilled with the scene—if you have any soul in you—that you must talk it over until one or two o'clock in the morning, and at that hour it is as bright as twelve o'clock at noon in Washington or in New York, and why should you seek your pillow at all? Nothing but force of resolution, and a rehearsal of sanitary law, and an extemporaneous discourse on the uses of sleep can send you to your stateroom, and, reaching it, you find the place flooded with light and all the scene proposing activity instead of somnolence. The result is that many people come down from the North Cape nervous wrecks. They have acquired an insomnia which only weeks of regular habits can extirpate. With what joy we welcomed the night after we had come down into lower latitudes! Oh, the practical uses of the night! Shadows as important as the sunshine. Midnight as useful as the midmoon. We may say of the polar seas which we visited as it was said of a much better place, "There is no night there." But in the one case it was descriptive of a perpetual joy, for there is in that land no fatigue to be solaced, but in the other case it is descriptive of a disquietude, because we must have hours shaded for rest.

Alternate Light and Darkness

Yet these polar regions have as many seasons of darkness as seasons of light. From the 23d of September until the 22d of March it is continuous night. The inhabitants long for the morning. Lanterns and candles below, moon and stars above are the only alleviations. Think of it! midnight through all of October, all of November, all of December, all of January, all of February, and most of March. I wonder if the roosters know when to crow, the sleepers when to rise. I wonder if imbecility and unhealth of all sorts are not the result. Thank God, all ye who live in latitudes where the days and nights are not so long. Light for enough hours to do our work. Darkness for enough hours to favor refreshing unconsciousness. Let all who live in the temperate zone rejoice in the place of their habitation.

"Old Glory" at the Cape

On our way down from the North Cape it was Fourth of July, and the anniversary of American Independence was celebrated. The captain of our ship, a Norwegian, himself genial as a bank of honeysuckle, decorated the dining table with American flags. We all sang the "Star Spangled Banner," that is, as much of it as we could remember, all joining in the first line, half of us joining in the second line, two or three voices in the third line, but the last voice gave out in the fourth line, and then we hummed a note or two, and then we all quit, but when our music failed we burst into a chorus of patriotic laughter which saved the occasion from embarrassment. Called upon to say a few words appropriate to the day when Americans in towns and cities all around the world were in celebration, my theme of "International Brotherhood" was suggested by the presence in that dining room of Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, Germans, Frenchmen, English and Americans, and I could not help express the wish that as we were then sailing together we all might have a smooth voyage across the seas of this life, and at last drop anchor in harbor eternal, and if ever, between this and that, misfortune and trial should come upon us that the darkness might be irradiated by a Midnight Sun.

TRAINING AT NORTHFIELD

FOR ten years in the town of Northfield, among the Massachusetts hills, has been located Mr. D. L. Moody's youngest educational enterprise, the Northfield Training School. This institution has from its organization been sending its students out into Christian work in the country, and so has been quietly trying to solve the country problem by Christian visitation. The farming districts surrounding the town of Northfield are dotted with school-houses, in which regular Christian services are held by the students, in conjunction with a resident committeeman from the East Northfield church. Each district is canvassed and visited by students, carrying Christian cheer and the Word of God. This school, as is generally known, was the practical expression of Mr. Moody's great love for the scattered and neglected hill-town people of New England. Its doors will hereafter be open to both sexes, and the institution will be under the close supervision of the new president, Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D. The Training School will strive to work out a practical solution of the important problem: How to give the diminished and largely impoverished population of the New England hill-towns the advantages of the best Christian influences. The course in the Training School is so planned as to give each student the most thorough Biblical training, while the practical work is intended to fit for efficient service in this field. Advanced courses in the English Bible are arranged by the well-known Bible teacher, Rev. C. I. Scofield, D.D., for such ministers and workers as may feel the lack of equipment in that respect. All inquiries concerning the work should be addressed to Miss Lila S. Halsey, E. Northfield, Mass.

A BIT IN THE SUMMER CAMP AT NORTHFIELD

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

THE THREE CROSSES

Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Luke 23: 33: . . . There they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

JUST outside of Jerusalem is a swell of ground, toward which a crowd are ascending; for it is the day of execution. What a mighty assemblage! Some for curiosity to hear what the malefactors will say, and to see how they will act. The three persons to be executed are already there. Some of the spectators are vile of lip and bloated of cheek. Some look up with revenge, hardly able to keep their hands off the sufferers. Some tear their own hair in a frenzy of grief. Some stand in silent horror. Some break out into uncontrollable weeping. Some clap their hands in delight that the offenders are to be punished at last. The soldiers with drawn swords drive back the mob, which presses on so hard. There is fear that the proceedings may be interrupted. Let the legion, now stationed at Jerusalem, on horseback, dash along the line, and force back the surging multitude. "Back with you," is the cry. "Have you never before seen a man die?"

Three crosses in a row. An upright piece, and two transverse pieces, one on the top, on which the hands are nailed, and one at the middle, on which the victim sat. Three trees just planted, yet bearing fruit—the one at the right bearing poison, and the one at the left bitter aloes; the one in the middle, apples of love. Norway pine and tropical orange and Lebanon cedar would not make so strange a grove as this orchard of Calvary. Stand and give a look at the three crosses.

Just look at the cross on the right. Its victim dies scoffing. More awful than his physical anguish is his scorn and hatred of him on the middle cross. This wretched man turns half around on the spikes to hiss at the One in the middle. If the scoffer could get one hand loose, and he were within reach, he would smite the middle sufferer in the face. What had the middle cross done to arouse up this right-hand cross? Nothing. Oh, the enmity of the natural heart against Christ! The world likes a sentimental Christ or a philanthropic Christ, but a Christ who comes to snatch men away from their sins—away with him! On this right-hand cross to-day I see typified the unbelief of the world. Men say: "Back with him from the heart; I will not let him take my sins. If he will die, let him die for himself, not for me." There has always been a war between this right-hand cross and the middle cross; and wherever there is an unbelieving heart, there the fight goes on.

Look up into that disturbed countenance of the sufferer, and see what a ghastly thing it is to reject Christ. Behold in that awful face, in that pitiful look, in that unblessed death hour, the stings of the sinner's departure. Who can discover the abyss of eternity? Who can paraphrase these words: Forever and forever? That right-hand cross—thousands have perished on it in worse agonies. For what is physical pain compared to remorse, at the last, that life has been wasted, and only a fleeting moment stands between the soul and its everlasting overthrow? O God! let me die anywhere rather than at the foot of that right-hand cross.

That right-hand cross, with its long beam, overshadows all the earth. It is planted in the heart of the race. When will the time come when the Spirit of God shall, with its ax, hew down that right-hand cross, until it shall fall at the foot of that middle cross; and unbelief, the railing malefactor of the world, shall perish from all our hearts? Away from me, thou spirit of unbelief!

"If thou be the Son of God." Was there any "if" about it? Tell me, thou star, that in robe of light did run to point out his birthplace. Tell me, thou sea, that didst put thy hand over thy lip when he bade thee be still. Tell me, ye dead who got up to see him die. Tell me, thou sun in mid-heaven, who for him didst pull down over thy face thy veil of darkness. Tell me, ye lepers who were cleansed, ye dead who were raised, is he the Son of God? Ay! ay! responds the universe. The flowers breathe it; the stars chime it; the redeemed celebrate it; the angels rise on their thrones to announce it. And yet on that miserable malefactor's "if" how many shall be wrecked for all eternity! That little "if" has enough venom in its sting to cause the death of the soul. No "if" about it. I know it. Ecce Deus! I feel it thoroughly—through every muscle of the body, and through every faculty of my mind, and through every energy of my soul. Living, I will preach it; dying, I will pillow my head upon its consolations—Jesus the God.

Away, then, from this right-hand cross. The red berries of the forest are apt to be poisonous, and around this tree of carnage grow the red, poisonous berries of which many have tasted and died. I can see no use for this right-hand cross, except it be used as a lever with which to upturn the unbelief of the world.

Here, from the right-hand cross I go to the left-hand cross. Pass clear to the other side. That victim also twists himself upon the nails to look at the centre cross—yet not to scoff. It is to worship. He, too, would like to get his hand loose—not to smite, but to deliver the sufferer of the middle cross. He cries to the railer cursing on the other side: "Silence! between us is innocence in agony. We suffer for our crimes. Silence!" Gather round this left-hand cross, O ye people! Be not afraid. Bitter herbs are sometimes a tonic for the body, and the bitter aloes that grow on this tree shall give strength and life to thy soul. This left-hand cross is a repenting cross. He says: "I am a guilty wretch; I deserve this! There is no need of my cursing. That will not stop the pain. There is no need of blaspheming Christ, for he has done me no wrong; and yet I cannot die so. The tortures of my body are undone by the tortures of my soul. Then I must turn to my companion in sorrow, the One on the middle cross. I have heard that he knows how to help a man when he is in trouble. I have heard that he can cure the wounded. I have heard that he can pardon the sinner. Surely, in all his wanderings up and down the earth, he never saw one more in need of his forgiveness! Blessed one! I turn to thee! Wilt thou turn for the moment away from thy own pangs to pity me?" Hear the cry of the dying thief: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

Likewise, must we repent. You say: "I have stolen nothing." I reply: "We have all been guilty of the mightiest felony of the universe, for we have robbed God—robbed him of our time, robbed him of our talent, robbed him of our services." Suppose you send a man out as an agent of your firm, and every month you pay him his salary, and at the end of ten years you find out that he has been serving another firm, but taking your salary; would you not at once condemn him as dishonest? God sent us into this world to serve him. He has given us wages all the time. Yet how many of us have been serving another master!

You say: "I don't feel myself to be a sinner." That may be. Walk along by the cliffs, and you see sunlight and flowers at the mouth of the cave; but take a torch and go in, and before you have gone far you see the flashing eye of a wild beast or hear the hiss of a serpent. So the heart seems in the sunlight of worldliness; but as I wave the torch of God's truth, and go down into the deep cavern of the heart—alas! for the bristling horrors and the rattling fangs. Have you ever noticed the climax in this passage of Scripture: "The heart is deceitful." That seems enough. But the passage goes on and says: "The heart is deceitful above all things." Will you not say that is enough? But the passage goes on further and says: "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." If we could see the true condition of the unpardoned before God, what wringing of hands there would be! What a thousand-voiced shriek of supplication and despair! But you are a sinner, a sinner. I speak not to the person who sits next to you, but to you. May the Lord Almighty, by his grace, help us to repent of our sins while repentance is possible.

This left-hand cross was a believing cross. There was no guesswork in that prayer, no "if" in that supplication. The left-hand cross flung itself at the foot of the middle cross, expecting mercy. Faith is only just opening the hand to take what Christ offers us. The work is all done; the bridge is built strong enough for us all to walk over.

This left-hand cross was a pardoned cross. The crosses were only two or three yards apart. It did not take long for Christ to hear. Christ might have turned away and said: "How darest thou speak to me? I am the Lord of heaven and earth. I have seen your violence. When you struck down that man in the darkness, I saw you. You are getting a just reward. Die in darkness—die forever." But Jesus said not so, but rather: "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise," as much as to say: "I see you there; do not worry. I will not only bear my cross, but help you with yours."

Forthwith the left-hand cross becomes the abode of contentment. The pillow of the malefactor, soaked in blood, becomes like the crimson upholstery of a king's couch. When the body became still, and the surgeons feeling the pulse said one to another: "He is dead," the last mark of pain had gone from his face. Peace had smoothed his forehead. Peace closed his eyes. Peace closed his lips. Now you see why there were two transverse pieces on the cross, for it has become a ladder into the skies. That dying head is easy which has under it the promise: "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Ye whose lips have been filled with blasphemy, ye whose hands for many years have wrought unrighteousness, ye who have companioned with the unclean, ye who have scaled every height of transgression and fathomed every depth, and passed every extreme of iniquity—mercy, mercy!

> The dying thief rejoiced to see
> That fountain in his day;
> And there may I, though vile as he,
> Wash all my sins away.

I have shown you the right-hand cross and the left-hand cross; now come to the middle cross. We stood at the one, and found it yielded poison. We stood at the other, and found it yielded bitter aloes. Come now to the middle cross and shake down apples of love. Uncover your head. You never saw so tender a scene as this. You may have seen father or mother or companion or child die, but never so affecting a scene as this. The railing thief looked from one way, and saw only the right side of Christ's face. The penitent thief looked from the other way, and saw the left side of Christ's face. But to-day, in the full blaze of Gospel light, you see Christ's full face. It was a suffering cross. Human hate had done its worst and hell had hurled its sharpest javelin and devils had vented their hottest rage, when, with every nerve of his body in torture, and every fiber of his heart in excruciation, he cried out: "My God, my God! why hast thou forsaken me?" It was a vicarious cross; the right-hand cross suffered for itself, the left-hand cross for itself; but the middle cross for you. When a king was dying a young man cried: "Pour my blood into his veins, that he die not." The veins of the young man were tapped and the blood transferred; so that the king lived but the young man died. Christ saw the race perishing. He cried: "Pour my blood into their veins, that they die not." My hand is free now, because Christ's was crushed. My brow is painless now, because Christ's was torn. My soul escapes, because Christ's was bound. I gain heaven, because Christ for me endured the horrors of hell.

When the Swiss were many years ago contending against their enemies, they saw these enemies arrayed in solid phalanx, and knew not how to break their ranks; but one of their heroes, Arnold von Winkelried, rushed out in front of his regiment and shouted: "Make way for liberty!" The weapons of the enemy were plunged into his heart, but while they were slaying him, of course their ranks were broken, and through that gap in the ranks the Swiss dashed to victory. Christ saw all the powers of darkness assailing men. He cried out: "Make way for the redemption of the world." All the weapons of infernal wrath struck him, but as they struck him our race marched out free.

To this middle cross look, that your souls may live. I showed you the right-hand cross in order that you might see what an awful thing it is to be unbelieving. I showed you the left-hand cross that you might see what it is to repent. Now I show you the middle cross that you may see what Christ has done to save your soul. Poets have sung its praise, sculptors have attempted to commemorate it in marble, martyrs have clung to it in the fire, and Christians dying quietly in their beds have leaned their heads against it. This hour may all our souls embrace it with an ecstasy of affection. Lay hold of that cross! Everything else will fail you. Without a strong grip on that you perish. Put your hand on that and you are safe, though a world swing from beneath your feet.

Oh, that I might engrave on your souls ineffaceably the three crosses, so that if in your waking moments you will not heed, then in your dreams at night you may see on the hill back of Jerusalem the three spectacles—the right-hand cross showing unbelief, dying without Christ; the left-hand, showing what it is to be pardoned, while the central cross pours upon your soul the sunburst of heaven as it says: "By all these wounds I plead for thy heart. I have loved thee with an everlasting love. Rivers cannot quench it. Floods cannot drown it." And while you look, the right-hand cross will fade out of sight, and then the left will be gone; and nothing will remain but the middle cross, and even that in your dream will begin to change, until it becomes a throne; and the worn face of Calvary will become radiant with gladness; and instead of the mad mob at the foot of the cross will be a worshipful multitude, kneeling. And you and I will be among them.

But, no! we will not wait for such a dream. In this our most aroused mood we throw down at the foot of that middle cross sin, sorrow, life, death—everything. We are slaves; Christ gives deliverance to the captive. We are thirsty; Christ is the river of salvation to slake our thirst. We are hungry; Jesus says: "I am the bread of life." We are condemned to die: Christ says: "Save that man from going down to the pit; I am the ransom." We are tossed on the sea of trouble; Jesus comes over it, saying: "It is I, be not afraid." We are in darkness; Jesus says: "I am the bright and morning star." We are sick; Jesus is the "balm of Gilead." We are dead; hear the shrouds rend and the grave hillocks heave, as he cries: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." We want justification: "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." We want to exercise faith: "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." I want to get from under condemnation: "There is now, therefore, no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." The cross—he carried it. The flames of hell—he suffered them. The shame—he endured it. The crown—he won it. Heights of heaven sing it, and worlds of light to worlds of light all round the heavens cry: "Glory! Glory!" Let us go forth and gather the trophies for Jesus. From Golconda mines we gather the diamonds; from Ceylon shores we gather the pearls; from all lands and kingdoms we gather precious stones, and we bring the glittering burdens and put them down at the feet of Jesus and cry unto him: "All these are thine. Thou art worthy." And then we go forth again to gather more trophies, and we bid the redeemed of ages, the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, to come. And the hosts of heaven bring crown and palm and sceptre, and here by these bleeding feet and this riven side and by this wounded heart, cry: "Blessing and honor and glory and power unto the Lamb, forever and ever."

In its especial work of helping the mountain whites who have been wittily termed "our contemporary ancestors," and the negro as well. Berea college seems to have a unique and well-substantiated claim upon those interested in the permanent advancement of a liberalizing education. Berea was among the first of Southern educational institutions to see the situation in the South as it really is, and to gradually enlarge its practical and industrial departments until these features have become predominant. By a wise adaptation of the curriculum to the needs of the student body, it teaches "how to live and how to get a living." For those who are not sufficiently equipped to get a teacher's certificate, it provides trade schools (carpentry, housework, printing) and preparation schools. For those who are prepared for a normal training course, there are courses in farming (gardening, stock-raising, forestry, etc.); domestic science (sewing and cooking); a normal course with practice teaching, and an academy course fitting for college. The college proper embraces classical, philosophical and literary courses. There are adjunct departments, music, and training school for nurses. Perhaps the most interesting and effective feature of the college propaganda is its university extension work, comprising traveling libraries, lectures, leaflets and stereopticon, by which knowledge is brought irresistibly to the doors of the mountain people. In prosecuting this purposeful work, the lines of effort have been well defined in the attempt not to take the hill-dwellers from their rustic environment, but to make them sharers in the best that civilization offers. As a result, a new world is opened up to the people and new standards are set up, new topics of thought and conversation introduced and the tone of many communities has been materially altered.

A KENTUCKY HOME SCENE
The antique spinning wheel on the porch recalls olden times

Berea has for its chief aim to train those men and women who shall themselves be Christian teachers, workers, housekeepers and Christian citizens. Native teachers are being trained for the newly developing public schools. The students are not taught to despise the log-cabin but to develop it to better uses.

The Berea has become the most influential single agency to establish connection between our national life and the isolated Appalachian Mountain region. It has an equipment valued at $150,000 and is increasingly patronized by the mountain young people and by students from the north, numbering 715 in all. Under the administration of President William Goodell Frost, who assumed direction in 1893, the school has grown in power and influence. The work at Berea appears to be done on a substraturn that appeals most to philanthropic, educational ideals.

To make good citizens out of the very poor and illiterate among the most neglected people of the Appalachian Mountain region, regardless of racial differences, has been the life-task of its founders. By reason of its broad impulses, its progressive methods and the proud self-sacrifice of its workers, its work and record are of more than passing interest.

It recognizes the essential factors of race elevation and progress which were incorporated in its work and methods almost from the first. A pure Christian patriotism underlies all its educational enterprises. JANE STEWART

YOUNG MOUNTAINEER STUDENTS AT BEREA COLLEGE

Among the Mountaineers

Our illustrations will give the reader a hint of the character of the Appalachian mountain people and their surroundings. The photograph on the first page is that of a brave mountain woman who has devoted her whole life to the spiritual enlightenment of the people. On her sure-footed pony and accompanied by her young son, like herself a fearless rider, as nearly all these mountain dwellers are, she has traveled in the past twelve months over 2,000 miles, delivering Gospels, tracts and other good literature to the mountaineers and their families. Her visits are like a ray of sunshine in their homes and she is always welcome. She, like many others engaged in spiritual work along the ranges, is an educated product of Berea.

A TYPICAL MOUNTAIN HOME

Quaint and with a flavor of the pioneer days when the century was in its swaddling clothes, are the scenes presented in the other photographs. The demure little maid, riding to school, might have easily dropped down to us from Washington's time, and the outdoor spinners on the stoop of the rambling old homestead might have served for a scene from actual life in the days of our great-grandmothers. Mountain cabins built of stout, seasoned logs like that in the photograph, are somewhat rare nowadays, and except in those Appalachian hills they are regarded as the relics of a period that has already passed away.

In an able article in The Review of Reviews, Prof. Wm. Goodell Frost, President of Berea College, gives some remarkably interesting facts concerning the Southern mountaineers. Kentucky and the Virginias, East Tennessee and Northern Georgia. We give a few quotations:

"The 'fambly' are supplied from their own 'boundary' with abundance of cornmeal, string-beans, dried fruit, 'long sweetening' (syrup) and hog meat. Also wool and flax, and possibly a small quantity of cotton.

"I make bold to say that there are at least 2,000,000 native Americans in Appalachian America who are living practically in the conditions of colonial times. The chief difference is that the colonial people were consciously in motion and felt themselves to be in front of the progress of their time, while the mountain people have a depressing sense of being behind. It should be said further that these people are more destitute of all the opportunities that go with education than any other people of our race in the world. And, above all, I wish to have it known that this condition has come about through natural causes, so that we cannot blame the people. It does one's heart good to help a young Lincoln who comes stalking into college, perhaps a three day's journey on foot, with a few hard-earned dollars in his pocket, and a great eagerness for the education he can so faintly comprehend. It is a joy to welcome the mountain girl who comes back after having taught her first school, bringing the money to pay her debts and buy her first comfortable outfit —including rubbers and suitable underclothing—and perhaps bringing with her a younger sister. Such a girl exerts a great influence in her school and mountain home.

"The whole case of the mountaineer may be summed up in the story of Abraham Lincoln. His great career hinged upon the fact that his mother had six books. In that circumstance he differed from the other boys of the region. Is it too much to say that but for that ray of light his great soul would have been strangled in the birth?"

THE LINCOLN UNIVERSITY

Gen. O. O. Howard, to whose indefatigable labors in behalf of the Lincoln Memorial University, the success of that project is largely due, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, from Burlington, Vt.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

CHAPTER XLI.

Samantha Bids Rome Good-by

FROM the Pantheon we went to the Capitol—the Capituline Hill where justice wuz meted out to the public from kings and nobles.

We went safely past the two huge lions at the foot of the staircase—though Tommy got behind me when he first saw them—past the spot where Rianzi wuz killed. Here we see no end of statutes of the Cæsars, the Popes and other influential families. We stood on the spot where Brutus made that memorable speech, and I felt that I could almost see that noble figger as he stood there sayin': "Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears!" If I had been there, I'd lent him two pairs: mine and Josiah's in welcome.

The bronze wolf, spoke of by Mr. Cicero, is still standin' there; and in the museum here we see no end of rich sculpture, statutes, mosaic and beautiful, rare objects of art. Pliny's doves made a noble show; they are made of little pieces of stun, one hundred and sixty pieces in an inch; I couldn't done it to save my life. The Venus of the Capitol looks beautiful; Josiah thought she favored Sally Ann Henzy, but I didn't. And, 'tennyrate, Sally Ann would have scorned to appear in company in that condition; Sally Ann is real modest.

In the Pincian Garden, we see the villa of Lucullus, a brave soldier who had his faults, but wuz a good provider and thought a sight of his vittles; he made me think of Josiah. And also we see the home of Mr. Nero—mean creeter—I wuz glad enough he passed away before I got there. My principles on intemperance and monopolies would have riled him up dretful, and Arvilly's talk made him hoppin' mad. I d'no what he would have took it into his head to do. And I never should have gin him the freedom of Jonesville, never, he needn't thought on't; nor I never should invited him to make a all day's visit to our house, nor a afternoon one, either.

The Fountains of Rome

They have beautiful fountains in Rome. All of a sudden as we went through a narrer street, we see a dazzlin' sheet of water come down from the rock shell work and statutes, clear streams of water seemed to be gushin' out on all sides falling into a big reservoir, big enough for a ship to float in, and one day we went to see the Baths of Caracella. Jest think of a bath a mile square, big enough for thirty or forty thousand folks to bathe in at one time. It is all in ruins now, but you can see from the thick walls, tall arches, the sides covered with costly mosaic, what they wuz in their glory. Josiah thought he could make a lovely piece of mosaic from the stuns down in our paster and slate stuns. He said if he could cover the front of the barn with the pictures of his travels in stun, some like the travels of Ulysses, it would be a boon to Jonesville. But good land! it would be a sight to behold made of stuns as big as your hand and all shapes. That ambition must be squenched. Josiah breathed this aspiration to me as we went through the Hall of the Emperors. And they didn't look no better nor so well as the bretheren in the Jonesville meetin'-house would if they wuz sculped and Josiah said so; though, of course, as I told him, they wuz dressed up more fancy. And he said: "Any decent woman would lend her nightgown for her pardner to be sculped in and handkerchief pins and lace under-sleeves and things."

Poppea Sabina, the second wife of Mr. Nero, wuz a beautiful-lookin' woman, though I don't spoze she wuz what she should be. Her husband kicked her to death some time ago. He ort to been kicked himself; I'd been willin' to hire the mule myself to done it, I wuz that put out thinkin' on't.

Josiah said: "Poppy Sabriny wuz the best-lookin' figger there."

Arvilly said she most knew he'd been drinkin', it wuz so fashionable for drinkin' men to kick their wives, and sez she: "Oh, how I wish I could have canvassed Nero for the Twin Crimes before he done it."

And I sez: "It might have been a good thing for Mr. Nero and for Poppy, but I don't know how it would have been with you, Arvilly; a man that would kick his wife to death wouldn't be apt to brook a book-agent.

"Yes," sez Josiah, "anybody that would kick Poppy Sabriny would do anything."

Sez I: "It would look just as well, Josiah, for a perfessor not to talk so much about another woman besides his pardner, even if she is a stun woman."

"Jealous of a statter!" sez Josiah skornfully.

"Not at ail," sez I. "But Poppea Sabina wuz a pagan, and no better than she should be, and her folks wuzn't likely and ——"

"Jest like a woman!" sez Josiah, "a man can't praise up another female, dead or alive, without his pardner picking flaws in 'em."

Well, I drawed his attention off onto the Cæsars, Augustus and Domitian, and quite a few on 'em. Nero's bust I despised lookin' at—brutal tyrant—as Josiah truly said anybody that would kill his wife and grandmother would do anything and wuz too mean to be looked at. If I could covered up his face I'd been willin' to used my best crape veil that I mourned for Mother Allen in. Nero's grandma, she that wuz Agrepina Agrippa, wuz good featured but broken-hearted lookin'. No wonder, havin' such a grandson in the family. Arvilly said as she looked at it, that she believed if old Miss Nero, his grandma, and his own ma had spanked him good and sound and sot him down hard in the corner from day to day he wouldn't acted and behaved so when he got bigger. She said she presoomed he wuz allowed to pierce flies with a pin and torter hornets and May bugs and rob bird's nests and tie cans to dog's tails and act, and he got worse as he got bigger. And I d'no but she wuz right. I've seen the Nero sperit in small boys many times; why, I see it in Thomas Jefferson when he wuz little, but it wuz squenched and he's come up noble.

AUNT SAMANTHA AND THE DISTINGUISHED STRANGER

On the Palatine Hills

Miss Meechim wanted to see the Paletine Hill, the spot where Romulus and Remus wuz nursed by a she wolf; Josiah don't believe it. He said no wolf would consent to bring up twins by hand, and no ma would ever allow it, but that's what they say. Miss Meechim explained here how when the twins had growed up Romulus harnessed a heifer and bull to a plow and laid out the site of the city. Robert Strong wuz full of memories of Cicero, Catalus, the Gracchi, and so wuz Dorothy. But no place interested me there so much as the Forum, where some think Paul wuz tried. He wuz tried before Nero, and there wuz Nero's judgment place, and there wuz the seat for prisoners. As I looked round me I could imagine the incomparable eloquence of Paul that sways the human heart as leaves are waved by a strong breeze, and his memory sweetened the hull place, and it needed it bad enough, yes indeed it did. But to resoom:

Some of the streets of Naples are narrer and noisy as Bedlam with market men and women cryin' out their wares and all sorts of street noises. Little donkeys carryin' loads fur to big for our old mair. A sort of a big loose bag hangs on each side on 'em piled up as high as they will hold with fruit, vegetables, flowers, etc.

Sometimes you will see such a big load walkin' off and can't for your life tell what propels it till bime by you will hear a loud bray from underneath. It sounds quite scareful. The little ridin' wagons of the poor people are packed too as I never see a hoss car in the U. S. Sometimes you will see more'n two dozen folks, priests, soldiers, men, women and children, and sometimes baskets full of vegetables and babies swingin' underneath and all drawed by a donkey; it hain't right, and I wanted to talk to 'em about it, but didn't know as they would hear to me. But our old mair is used fur different.

The Cathedral is quite a noble lookin' buildin' and contains tombs of many noted people, Pope Innocent, King Andrew, Charles I. of Anjou, and many, many others. The Piazza del Municipio has a beautiful fountain, and there is one fashionable promenade over two hundred feet wide containing all sorts of trees and shrubs where you can see the Neopolitans dressed in fine array. There is a terrace extending into the sea, temples, winding paths, grottos, etc.

The Piazza del Plebiscito has an equestrian statute that wuz taken in the first place for Napoleon, then changed to General Murat and finally to Charles III. It made me think considerable of the daily papers who use one picture for all social and criminal purposes, and for Queen Victoria and Lydia Pinkham.

One day Arvilly and I wuz takin' a walk together, Josiah and Tommy bein' a little ahead when we see a elegant carriage comin' along, a rich red color all ornamented with gold, with six horses, their gorgeous harnesses nice enough for bridal ornaments. And there wuz outriders goin' ahead and men in brilliant uniform fallin' in behind, and lots and lots of carriages follerin' on in the procession. There wuz a axident in front, two carriages goin' in opposite directions had smashed in together, and two or three fallin' over them wuz the cause. I see that in that splendid carriage right under my nose as it were, an old gentleman sot alone, dressed up in a way that would have shed delight into the soul of Josiah Allen.

He had a bright red robe on, all covered with crosses and stars and orders, and a igh peaked cap of the same color. And ven as I looked at him I thought what beautiful stripe them clothes would ake in a rag carpet after he'd got rough with 'em.

You could see that he wuz gittin' conderable along in years; I should say he uz as old, if not older than old father elathial Henzy, brother Henzy's father. His benign face wuz lookin' over the rowd as if he had a look into a better ountry. I liked his linement first-rate nd believe he is a likely man, and I felt iat it would encourage him to hear me ay so, and also I felt that there wuz ome things that I wanted to advise him or his good. So I advanced to the side f the carriage door and sez, holdin' out y hand in a cordial way:

"Good mornin', Mr. Pope; I am glad o see you and see you hold your age so emarkable well."

Bein' took so completely by surprise, e held out his hand. They have told ie since that he meant to have me kiss , but I never thought on't nor shouldn't one it if I had, not bein' in the habit of issin' strange men's hands; no, I grasped olt of it and shook it warmly just as I ould old Uncle Henzy's.

Arvilly and her Book

He riz his hand up in benediction and id some words that I couldn't underand, but good ones I know from his ooks, and I bent my head as reverent as would before Elder Minkley. But as I fted my eyes what wuz my horrow to e Arvilly advance takin' out The Twin rimes from her work-bag and before I ould interfere she had begun to canvass im. Sez she: "Mr. Pope, I have a book ere I would like to call your attention to: The Twin Crimes of America: Intemerance and Greed." Good old creeter, it uz too bad. But it ended triumphant for rvilly, for whether it wuz my noble words him that had softened him down or hether it wuz that he knowed how ramant these two evils wuz in the United tates and wanted to inform himself still rther about it, 'tennyrate he looked the ook over and said he would be glad to ave the book, and he and two more of ie leadin' men nigh him in that procesion bought books, Arvilly deliverin' 'em n the spot and takin' her money. And the stoppage in the crowd hadn't let up nd they started on, I d'no but she would ave canvassed the hull flower of the omish meetin'-house; though we wuz old afterwards by one who pretended to now, that it wuzn't the Pope I had talked and Arvilly had canvassed, but some ther high dignitary in the meetin'-house.

We stayed on in Rome longer than we ad laid out to, for our sweet Dorothy ked it there. And if she had took it nto her head to set down on a lonesome ock in mid ocean, like a mermaid, for a eek, there would the rest on us be sot ound her till her mind changed. For the ead of our party would have managed it me way so she could had her way. Not iat she would do anything aginst the ishes of the rest of us, but she wuz appy there, and the rest of us all liked it nd found plenty of things to interest us, ut at last we did set out for Napies.

Naples' Beautiful Bay

I had sot a good deal of store on seein' he Bay of Naples, and so had the other emales of our party. Robert Strong had een it before. And my pardner when I ried to roust up his interest and admiraon by quotin' the remark so often made: See Naples and die."

He said he wouldn't do any such thing, ot if he could keep alive. "But," sez e, "more'n as likely as not the vile Italn cookin' will be too much for me and our prophecy may come true; I may see Naples and die—from starvation."

But I told him it wuz the incomparable eauty of the seen that wuz meant, that hen you'd seen that you had beheld the est and most beautiful the world could ffer you and you might as well pass way without tryin' any further.

And Josiah said he would ruther see he Jonesville creek down in the paster ack of the house, where it makes a bend ound our sugar house and the sugar males grow clear down to the water's edge, nd pussy millers lean down, so the ussys most touch the water, and you can ee the brook trout darting about over the lean pebbles, than to see forty Napleses.

I too felt a good deal the same, but wouldn't encourage him by sayin' so. And the Bay of Naples wuz beautiful, its beauty stole on you onbeknown and growed and growed till it possessed your hull heart and soul, if you had a soul. It lays like a big blue liquid gem in its encirclin' settin' of fadeless green and flashing white walls, and crowned by the hantin' dretful beauty of Mount Vesuvius.

Italy's Largest City

Naples is a big city, the biggest in Italy, and as easy to git into from land as Jonesville is, only on its principle avenues there are what they call barriers where they collect duties on provisions, etc., brought from the country.

Josiah thought that would be a splendid thing for him. Sez he, "I believe I shall have Ury help me and build a barrier in front of my house and take a tax for big loads that go by. Why," sez he, "at a cent a load I could make a splendid livin'."

But he won't try it. As I told him he might just as well lanch right out on Jonesville creek as a corsair, "and I've always said," sez I, "that never would I live on brigandage."

Some of the principle streets are straight and handsome, with blocks of lava right out of the bosom of the earth for pavement. It give me queer feelin's to tread on't thinkin' that it come from a place way down in the earth that we didn't know anything about and thinkin' what strange things it could tell if stuns could talk. Some of the best streets had sidewalks. It is well lighted by gas.

As you walk along the streets you see rich and poor, beggar and priest, soldier and peasant, every picturesque costoom you can think on and all sorts of faces. But there seems to be a kind of a happy-go-lucky air in 'em all, even to the beggars and the little lazy, ragged children layin' in the sunshine. The people live much out of doors here, you can see 'em washin' and dressin' the children, and doin' housework, and everything right from the street, and though I don't spoze the poor suffer so much here on account of the warm climate, yet dirt and rags and filth and vermin didn't look any better to me here than they did in Jonesville.

Deaconesses Schools

A unique feature of the work of deaconesses is their literary schools. The first was opened in January, 1899, in a fine building at Aurora, Ill., surrounded by nearly four acres of campus. It is for girls and young women only. It offers a full college preparatory course, but takes girls and young ladies who from ill health or other limitations are deficient in their education. Its intermediate department for homeless and orphan girls is especially appreciated. If the real mother must be lacking, an excellent substitute is a deaconess mother. The school last year enrolled more than a hundred students, to whose care ten deaconess teachers devoted their entire time and strength. The proportion of teachers to pupil is very much larger than in ordinary schools, but this supplies the "mothering" so greatly needed by girls from ten to twenty years old. Several of these deaconess teachers have the A.M. degree. The deaconess school for boys in Quincy, Ill., will be opened this fall. In view of the success of the Aurora venture, no one doubts what its future will be. There is a fine plant of trained and enthusiastic deaconesses behind the enterprise, and, most apparent of all, a great need of just such a home school for boys as this will be. The parents or guardians of orphan and homeless children will not be slow to avail themselves of the safe shelter of these Christian institutions.

A Home for Ministers

An interesting ceremony took place at Winona, Ind., on Aug. 25. It was the dedication of a home, the gift of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman of New York, as a summer rest for ministers of any denomination. The only stipulation is that no minister will be received whose income exceeds $1,000. Dr. Chapman has named it the Dwight L. Moody Memorial Building.

THE · DOMINIE-CONDUCTOR

ABRAM BLAUVELT'S "GOSPEL TRAIN" AND HIS WORK AS A LOCAL PREACHER—A CAREER OF CHRISTIAN USEFULNESS

AS A PREACHER

AMONG the great army of railroad men connected with the lines that have their termini in New York and Jersey City, there are few who are better known or more universally respected than Abram Blauvelt, conductor of the "Gospel Train" on the Northern Railroad of New Jersey. For many years, Mr. Blauvelt has been both a conductor and a preacher of the Gospel and his record of service in both capacities is one that is in many respects remarkable. With a kindly smile and a pleasant word for all, he is a man whom travelers generally love to ride with.

The story of his life is one that carries with it much of Christian inspiration and encouragement. He was born at High City, N. J., in 1842, and received a common school education. Much of his earlier life was passed on the farm. In 1862, he entered the army as a volunteer and was honorably discharged in 1863. That year he entered the service of the Northern Railroad. Promotion for faithful and efficient service came gradually. From brakeman, he became baggage-master, then express messenger, extra conductor, and finally regular conductor. To-day he is the oldest conductor on the road, with a record which would do honor to any public servant.

Mr. Blauvelt has long been an earnest Christian. Even as a very young man, during his term of service in the army, his Christian spirit impressed his comrades and had an excellent effect upon the entire regiment. Long years afterward, when he and they were engaged in peaceful occupations, he was elected chaplain of the Twenty-second Regiment Association of Veterans. From his youth it had been his custom to speak at Gospel gatherings when opportunity offered. To a fluent delivery, and a command of simple, yet vigorous language, he added a remarkable acquaintance with God's Word. Even in those early addresses, it is recalled that his deep piety and his tremendous earnestness were everywhere remarked, whether he spoke in a church gathering or exhorted at camp-meeting. It was not until December, 1894, however, that he was regularly ordained by the M. E. Church to preach the Gospel. His first sermon as a local preacher was delivered at the Methodist Church at Piermont-on-the-Hudson, the text being I. Tim. 3: 16. Since that time he has been an indefatigable and successful worker both in and out of the pulpit, and the little church at Nyack-on-the-Hudson in which he preaches, is generally well filled.

To travelers on the Northern Railroad "Dominie" Blauvelt is a familiar figure, and his early morning train from Nyack is popularly denominated the "Gospel Train," in honor of its conductor. He has a kind word for every one, is specially attentive to the children and the aged, and never fails to drop a word of Gospel cheer and encouragement where it will do the most good. Thus, not only by precept, but by example as well, does the Dominie-Conductor illustrate the Gospel he teaches from the pulpit of the little frame church by the Hudson River. He is a fine type of practical Christianity carried into effect in every-day life. His whole career is like a train run on a well-ordered schedule: it shows the value of punctuality, a start on time, a clear track, running gear and lights in order, and making good time for the final destination. Of the Dominie-Conductor, it has been said by one who has known him all his lifetime: "We hope the danger-signal may never be needed for his train and that all switches may be so placed as to keep him upon the straight track he has ridden safely for so many years."

THE CONDUCTOR-DOMINIE'S CHURCH

The Sin of Self-Conceit

We do not usually regard self-conceit as a sin; we think of it as merely a weakness and pity the vain and foolish person who exhibits this absurd quality. But self-conceit carried to its utmost, is a sin. It exalts self and does not put God first. The self-conceited person is inflated, and sees things out of perspective, and not in their just proportions. A proper degree of self-esteem is a good thing, and helps a man or woman along in life, but self-conceit is self-esteem run mad and is sinful.

A Child's Sacrifice

This is quite a sacrifice for a little boy to make:

Mrs. W. G., Bristol, Conn., $5: George Hallister, a little seven-year-old friend, sends the enclosed. He has been saving his pennies for several years to buy a bicycle. Much as a boy prizes a wheel, it was his own suggestion that it be given up and the money be sent instead to the poor little orphan boys and girls of India.

ALL OR NONE

A MAN dies, having made a will. The people who expect a part of the inheritance assemble to hear the will read. The attorney reads it until he comes to a certain passage of the will, when one of the heirs cries out, "I reject that passage." The attorney reads on, and some one else says, "I reject that passage, while I accept all of the rest of the will." The heirs go before the surrogate and the judge decides: "You must take this will as a whole or not at all. You cannot break a part of it and leave the rest intact." Now I say in regard to this Will of my Father, in respect to this last Will and Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ, that if we break any part of the Will we break it all, and we lose our inheritance and go beggared through eternity.

A GAME OF TAG ACROSS THE CONTINENT

WHEN a little girl, aged three years and eight months, starts for a trip across the continent, they tie a tag across her breast, thus inscribed: "This is Helen R. Francis. I am going to James Lockhart, Stroud, Oklahoma. Will the conductors and traveling public please show kind attention?" And she is sure to get there if the conductors do.

It is an illustration of the fact that the majority of passengers on any train are good people, and love little children. Every one of them becomes a guardian to such a tiny traveler. They see that she is well fed, and tucked safely into her berth at night, and so she goes safely over her thousands of miles, unhurt. It is an illustration, too, of the safety of innocence. The great Master set a little child in the midst of his disciples and preached a sermon to them on this text, saying: "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Little children do not know half the dangers of such a trip. And their innocence and ignorance protect them. They say their prayers with the same confidence, as when at home beside a mother's knee, though little Helen had lost her mother, and was going to Stroud to live with her grandmother. On her way she was photographed, and a very sweet and happy picture she made. "He shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways." This, little Helen found to be true on her trip from New York City to Stroud, Oklahoma.

The Chinese Problem

ANOTHER surprise in the Chinese situation, which has been so prolific in surprises, was sprung on the public last week. Russia, separating herself from the other powers, announced her intention of withdrawing from Pekin, removing both her minister and her military forces. The reason assigned, in the circular notes to the other Governments, for this independent action, was that the object of the rescue of the legations having been accomplished, and there being no Chinese government with which to treat, a power that had no territorial designs on China ought to quit the Capital. This action is evidently unwelcome to the other powers, especially to Germany. As the German minister was the only one murdered and as the German general, Count Waldersee, had been appointed to command the united forces, Germany has two valid reasons for resenting this break-up of the mutual understanding. It also shrewdly suspects that there are other reasons for Russia's withdrawal than those assigned. If Russia really instigated the Boxer rising, as many Europeans believe, in the hope that the Chinese government would ask her aid in suppressing it and give "territorial concessions" in payment for such aid, the prompt action of the powers in sending a military force to Pekin must have been extremely unwelcome to her. Realizing that the crafty plot has failed, Russia now seeks to win China's good will by leading the movement for withdrawal. Whether such a construction of her actions is just, is known only to the diplomats of Europe. Our Government is willing to follow Russia's example if the other Governments also agree to withdraw, but still continues to believe that united action is best in the circumstances. There is, however, little doubt that if the Chinese Government has learned its lesson and is now prepared honestly to suppress the Boxer rising, the sooner it is reinstated the better for all concerned, and it can be reinstated only by the foreign forces quitting the capital. No government, especially in China, can control its subjects while a hostile foreign army is in possession of its capital. We cannot afford to be a party to a prolonged occupation, nor can we join in a foreign administration of the affairs of China; we do not wish for any Chinese territory nor for "a sphere of influence," so that we, of all the powers represented, have the strongest motives for supporting the withdrawal. Badly as China has behaved, her conduct must not be made a pretext for wholesale destruction and robbery. If any of the powers are cherishing such designs as Solomon described, our Government will never listen to their proposals.

GEN. AND MRS. CRONJE IN ST. HELENA

Let us swallow them up alive as the grave; we shall find all precious substance; we shall fill our houses with spoil; cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse (Prov. 1:12, 13).

Robbing a Burglar

An unusual scene was witnessed recently in a New York police court. A man was on trial charged with highway robbery. The prosecutor gave his evidence glibly and was very circumstantial in giving the exact place and time of the robbery. No attempt was made on cross-examination to break down his story, but he was asked to explain where he obtained the property which had been taken from him. There was some difficulty in satisfying the questioner and finally the prosecutor was transferred to the prisoner's pen. A detective explained to the police justice that from inquiries he had made, he believed that the robbery had really taken place as the prosecutor alleged, but the property of which he had been relieved he had stolen the same night from a store in the neighborhood and it was really a case of a burglar being robbed by a highwayman. Both men were therefore held for trial. He is not the first man to be stripped of ill-gotten gains. The time will come when all who have defrauded others will so suffer in the righteous judgment of God.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days and at his end shall be a fool (Jer. 17:11).

A Man Without a Country

A curious illustration of the difficulties of the immigration laws was furnished by a case recently before the officers in New Orleans. A negro came to this country from Jamaica, W. I., some years ago and took out naturalization papers. He was young and active and had the necessary amount of money, so there was no difficulty about his admission. Last year he went out to South Africa as a mule-driver in the service of the British army. His contract contained a clause pledging the British Government to bring him back free of expense whenever he decided to leave the service. Under this clause he was brought back to New Orleans recently. The immigration officers, however, objected to his landing. He is now old and penniless, and as he knows no business by which he can earn a livelihood, they thought he was liable to become a public charge. The negro pleaded that he had been admitted once and regarded this country as his home. He could not go back to Jamaica, as he had abjured his allegiance, and he did not want to be sent to South Africa, where he had suffered many hardships. His earnest desire was to live and die here. The officers finally decided against him, as his going away and returning constituted a new case, which must be decided on its merits, and he certainly was in a very different condition from that he was in when he was originally admitted. The officers, therefore, obeyed the letter of the law and sent him back to South Africa. It is well for backsliders that Christ does not adopt that principle in dealing with them. Those who come back repentant, though in rags like the Prodigal Son, are welcomed and reinstated.

A TYPICAL CHINESE BOXER

For I have mercy upon them and they shall be as though I had not cast them off; for I am the Lord their God and will hear them (Zech. 10:6).

The Exiles of St. Helena

Little news reaches the outside world from the Boers who are prisoners in St. Helena. Beyond the general expression of satisfaction with the courtesy and consideration shown to them by the English governor, no word has reached the public from them. Gen. Cronje is of a taciturn nature, and it is reported that he felt hurt by some expressions about his surrender that were made at the time by President Kreuger and Secretary Reitz, so that now he is keeping his own counsel. The photograph of him and his wife taken in his island prison and reproduced on this page, does not show a man pining in discontent or fretting over inaction. Indeed, such a man may be thankful for being relieved of the duty of protracting a struggle clearly hopeless and involving a useless sacrifice of life and property. It is stated, too, that Cronje's belief presses Calvinism to the verge of fatalism. More than once during his campaign, his officers expostulated with him for needlessly exposing himself; but the old general replied: "If it is the will of God that I be shot to-day, I shall be shot, whether I am in the field or down in a well." Such a man may naturally regard his exile as part of the will of God, which even if he cannot understand, he is prepared to accept with submission. It appears that one of the best houses on the island has been set apart for his use; a carriage has been provided for him and he is allowed to drive where he wishes. There are about three thousand Boers on the island who are confined within an enclosure in which tents have been placed. Some of them have constructed bamboo huts for greater privacy. A large number have received permits under which they have engaged themselves as help to the farmers. Their condition is enviable compared with their brethren in the Transvaal, who are engaged in the dangerous service of harassing the British forces. Lord Roberts has now issued a proclamation annexing the Transvaal. This step has been precipitated by the shooting of British soldiers by Boers, who professed to be friendly. Now, every burgher will have to formally declare his attitude. If he swears allegiance to the British Government, he will be allowed to remain on his farm; if he refuses to do so, he will have to quit the country. How many people in Christian lands would be stricken with consternation if God were to make such a demand upon them! Yet he is not deceived as to the attitude of those who do not own him as their Lord.

COUNT VON WALDERSEE

He that is not with me is against me (Matt. 12:30).

Thought He Had Gold

A lad is lying in suffering in a New Jersey hospital as a result of a mistake in values. He was crossing a vacant lot in Hoboken when he noticed something yellow that glittered in the sunlight. Thinking he had surely found a lump of gold, he seized it and put it in his pocket. He had not walked far before he felt a burning sensation, and a strange smoke issued from the pocket in which his treasure was. He dare not put his hand in to get the yellow stuff out, but his clothes were burning and his flesh felt as if it were on fire. He cried out and a man who was passing ran to his help and tore his garments off. The lad was so badly burned that the man called an ambulance and sent him to the hospital. The surgeons there said that he had probably picked up a lump of phosphorus that some one had dropped, and it was that which had produced the burns. He will probably be more careful in the future and not be so ready to think that all is gold that glitters. It might be a valuable lesson, too, for him if he learns that real gold, which would not set him on fire, also has its dangers. It may be acquired in such a way that it will do as much harm to the soul as the false gold did to his body.

For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith and pierced themselves through with many sorrows (I. Timothy 6:10).

BRIEF NOTES

The tent meetings in Philadelphia have been so well attended and so much good has been done in them that they will be continued as long as the favorable weather lasts.

An Interdenominational Conference on the future of the missions in China is to be held at the Presbyterian mission rooms, 156 Fifth Ave., New York, on Sept. 21. All the Protestant Boards will send representatives.

A Chinese rice merchant of Amoy, China, has recently made a donation of $1,200 to the Christian Mission of that city, with which the late Dr. John Talmage was so long connected and in which his daughters still labor.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has received so many invitations to sing and speak during his visit to England that he has been obliged to limit his service at the dedication of the new Spurgeon Tabernacle to one day instead of the ten days originally planned. He expects to spend two months in England.

The Council of the Free Churches in England which represents all Christian denominations except the Protestant Episcopal, proposes to celebrate the opening of the twentieth century by a thoroughly organized evangelical campaign covering the whole country. Eminent preachers have already been assigned to the large cities.

DRUGGING THE GUARDS

A TEMPERANCE LESSON

THE DUTY OF WATCHFULNESS

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 23: Luke 12: 35-46.

Golden Text, Matt. 26: 41: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

WATCHFULNESS is literally wakefulness. A "watch" was originally a man awake at night to guard against danger. But now a "watch" tells the hours of day as well as night, reminding us that day has even greater perils than the dark, and that we need to be awake, in the fullest sense, to guard against them. We might well revive the old custom of putting on watches mottoes that remind us, every time we look at them, to watch. Our golden text recalls one of those mottoes: "The hour is flying, pray" (Fugit hora, ora). Because there are dangers—moral dangers especially, in every hour—we should both watch and pray against temptation. A profounder motto from those old days is: "On this moment hangs eternity" (In hoc momento pendet eternitas). An old Persian poet thus expressed the same thought:

A thousand years did a poor man wait
Outside of heaven's gate.
Then, while a moment brief he dozed,
It opened, and closed.

In theological discussions about the future life, men sometimes declare it unreasonable to believe that one's eternal destiny can turn on one brief act. But every day we see a whole life wrecked physically, financially or morally by one false step of an unguarded moment. In Japan there are three monkey images, now worshiped, but originated, no doubt, by some sage as an object lesson, one of which has a hand over each eye, meaning, "Be careful what you see"; another has a hand over each ear, meaning, "Be careful what you hear"; the third has both hands over his mouth as if to say, "Be doubly watchful as to what goes in and out of your mouth." Gen. Miles has recently reiterated his early warning against the two chief perils of the mouth, liquor and tobacco: "If a young man would retain his clear brain, his manly voice and sound health, he had better eschew both."

Alert Watchers Let your loins be girded and your lights burning. It is alert watchmen that are pictured here, who will not sleep at their post. The five senses are five guards at the gates of the soul. Alcohol, that is Al Gohol—one of the names of the devil—drugs all these God-appointed guards, and secures admittance, not only for himself but for the whole gang of robbers that follow in his train. How alcohol perverts the sense of taste, making it crave at last the drinks which at first it pronounced bitter as gall! When alcohol has drugged the senses, the modest girl hears willingly the foul words she would in her sober senses have resented, and her eyes look upon sights she could not otherwise have tolerated. The sense of cold and heat are the warnings of wakeful guards, but alcohol drugs these watchmen, with resulting sunstroke in the summer heat, and freezing by the wayside in the winter cold. Parents and teachers are themselves God-appointed chief watchers who should be alert to teach the children how these underwatchers may be saved from the foe that ever seeks to put them to sleep that he may enter and destroy.

"Mother," said a boy ten years old, "may I join the temperance society?"

"You are too young yet," said the mother; "you may join when you are old enough."

"But, mother, some of the boys I know were skating on the river on Christmas day, and they had beer; and some of them drank so much that they could not stand."

"You may join the temperance society tomorrow, my son."

Rev. A. E. Dunning, D.D., formerly Sunday School leader of the Congregationalists, has this to say to ungirded, unwatchful teachers who fail to swing the red light of warning and so allow their youthful charges to plunge into the perils of drink:

"Some Sunday School teachers ask what danger there is of the children in their classes growing up to be drunkards. Their parents are Christians. They live amid wholesome surroundings. It is well enough to teach temperance to the children of drunkards; but do these children need to be taught about it? I had in my Sunday School, twenty-five years ago, a class of six boys from ten to twelve years old. All except one came from good families. The parents of that one were dead. He seemed to be the most gentlemanly boy of the class. When they came to be about fifteen or sixteen years old they organized a club. It was secret, but they said its purpose was their moral improvement. They hired a room. Two of them were members of our church. They brought into the club several other boys. One of these they appointed as a chaplain. After a while it was said that liquor was taken to their club-room. Not long afterwards the chaplain left the club. He is now a Christian minister. One day one of the most attractive of the young men came to me and said that he had got into the habit of drinking, and that his parents had found it out. His mother, he said, was almost insane. He begged me to go to her and tell her he would never drink again. But he went from bad to worse till he disappeared. Friends of another came to tell me that he had by forgery secured money from a bank. Employers of another came to say that he had made false entries in their books, and had defrauded them of a considerable sum of money. Another within a few years died a common drunkard. None of these boys at ten years of age seemed likely to be exposed to temptation to drink."

There are two reasons why every teacher in every kind of school should teach temperance faithfully: first because every pupil is in danger; second, to protect the social life of the community by removing or at least reducing this evil, so making it, in the great words of Gladstone, "harder to do wrong, easier to do right." If teachers are true child guardians they will watch eagerly for opportunities to smash the traps for the young that are all about their path, and welcome the temperance lessons through which they can sound the notes of warning.

Watching and Working Blessed are those servants. In all ages there have been some who have interpreted the command to watch for Christ's coming as a call to curious, idle waiting, whereas it is a call to wakefulness, readiness, Christian activity. We are not to say: "We can do nothing, and must wait for him to come and do it all." The watchers in this story are "servants" "girded" for action, putting away temptations to sleep and idleness. Christ comes "girded" also, to do only what they cannot do, and to reward them for their previous service with a feast of joy. The temptation to despair of human efforts and wait for something to happen is peculiarly strong at this time in temperance work. In this foremost country of the world in this reform, the per capita consumption of liquors is increasing at home, and more than ever before our distillers and brewers are flooding other lands with this Yellow River of sorrow; with the aid of our government, even breaking down gradually the one virtue of the total abstinence religions, that have hitherto protected half the world's population against this vice. One of the leaders of our American missionary forces, who has made vain efforts for eight years to get favorable action on the unanswerable plea of Dr. John G. Paton that our government should forbid its merchants as England does, to sell rum and guns to the converted and unconverted cannibals of the New Hebrides, writes thus: "The liquor interest in this country is too powerful to give much hope that our government will take it up . . . The liquor interest and the Roman Catholic interest and the labor interest constitute a trinity of force that rule and are likely to rule this country." But he fails to see that the real difficulty is that Christian citizenship has not girded itself and kindled its beacon lights. There is so little demand for righteous laws, that we who are at the doors of Congress, wonder that we get as many as we do. In the last session of Congress, the House twice voted an anti-saloon amendment to the Hawaiian bill, though not one per cent. of the church members manifested any desire that anything whatever should be done to protect that or any other of our islands against the American saloon. No wonder that it failed at last! Christ will do his part in bringing in his kingdom; aye, and our government will do its part, as in the Roberts' case, when Christian citizenship girds itself and cries aloud as a faithful watcher. The "trinity" that "rules this country," when it will, is the threefold alliance of man, woman and God. But at present God's watchers are mostly asleep or only half awake. Let the handless clock remind us he may come at any moment to call us to account for duties neglected as well as sins committed in our relations to the State as well as in those we owe to the Church. We are divinely commanded not only to render to God the things that are God's, but also to render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's—our taxes, our votes and our petitions. "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh, shall find watching."

Watching Against Wrongdoing If the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched. We are not only to watch for Christ's coming, but we are also to watch against the coming of bad men. The thief most to be feared is not the night prowler who may steal our property, but the day thieves who steal reputation and character, who steal health and virtue. At any hour these highwaymen may come upon us, as polite as many that figure in history and romance, but more dangerous because the working rule of the saloon is not "money or your life," but "money and your life." With music and beautiful decorations the saloons seek to put the fears of well-trained youth to sleep. "The drinker," says the Bible (Prov. 23: 32), "is like one who lieth down in the midst of the sea on the top of a mast," the reference being to what was called "the crow's nest," a sort of bowl at the masthead where the ship's watch could safely stand, holding fast, but from which, if he fell asleep, even for a moment, he would be thrown into the deep. What tragedies have come in all ages out of one unguarded moment! Esau, weary and hungry as he came from the hunt, in that moment of consuming appetite, sold his whole future, as many a boy, many a girl, has done for a moment's enjoyment.

A Chinaman, much addicted to gambling, and earnestly desiring to break himself of the habit, visited the temple of his idol, and after many prostrations, dashed a bowl to pieces, with the words: "Thus may my life be broken if I ever gamble again!"

The fear of breaking his oath kept him for a while; but in the course of time he drifted into the habit again. Once more visiting the temple, after similar prostrations, he held up a candle, and blowing out the flame, exclaimed: "Thus may my life be blown out if I gamble again," with the same result as before.

The gambler's slavery is of mind alone, but the drinker's is both mind and a body, a slavery from which only Christ can emancipate.

The Lion of Judah can break every chain,
And give us the victory again and again.

Stories of Watchfulness Be ye also ready. "How many runs this month?" said a visitor at a fire-engine house. "Didn't turn a wheel" was the reply. In that month the city had paid $400 in the expenses of that fire watch, and had apparently got no benefit in return. But hark! the cry of "Fire," "Fire" rings out. In two minutes the ready horses and ready men are hurrying to the fire, and in fifteen minutes they are at work, and $10,000 in property is saved. "Be ye also ready," swift to hear every warning, swift to act in your own defense or in defense of others, especially of the young, against worse perils than fire that are daily making their sudden inroads—devices to lure to gambling, to impurity, to drink and to more respectable sins no less harmful, such as greed, which is the chief root of all the others.

Now let me tell of a young man who was "ready" in an hour for greater temptation that came suddenly and unexpectedly upon him. He was the son of an American college president, just turned twenty-one. He had gone to Paris for a special course in surgery. At the depot of his native town many comrades had gathered when he departed, among them his sweetheart. She knew how severely his Christian principles would be tried in such a city as Paris, and springing to his side, after good-bys had all been spoken, she whispered, "Charley, dare to be a Daniel." With a look of disappointment, he said, "Only that old saw?" But she cheerily answered, "Only that, Charley, but it may mean much to you." He bore a letter of introduction to a distinguished Frenchman, who, soon after his arrival, gave a small banquet in his honor. He was not sure that his table etiquette was up to the French standard, and was not a little disturbed by that misgiving as he sat, the cynosure of all eyes. He noted also with dismay that before each plate were glasses, ruby, purple, amber and white, the first three for wines of corresponding color, the last for water. During the feast the host filled his ruby glass, an example followed by the guests generally, and proposed the toast, "To the wives, daughters and sweethearts of America." A response was asked from the guest, a servant being told to fill his ruby glass. What followed can best be told in the words he wrote home: "Mother, for a moment I was in an agony of trepidation. I would rather have faced a cannon. All had risen, and in the hand of each was the wine I had pledged from childhood not to taste. My head swam. Suddenly I remembered the words, 'Dare to be a Daniel.' Touching my white glass, a servant filled it with water. Rising, I said: 'I beg leave to say that to the typical wife, daughter and sweetheart of America, the purity of this, Nature's own beverage, illustrates the lives they aim to lead and the dangers which they seek to avoid. Permit me to use it in their dear name.' The host substituted quickly his white glass, followed by all the others, and the toast to American womanhood was fitly drunk in water."

MISSIONARIES TESTIFY TO THE HAPPY RESULTS OF THE BENEFICENCE OF CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS—ANXIOUS ABOUT THE ORPHANS

WHILE news of continued rains in various districts of India encourages the hope of a harvest, it is a significant fact that the number receiving government relief is still over six millions. n analyzing the returns, however, we otice that the number who are working or wages has decreased, while it is those who are receiving gratuitous relief who have increased. This implies that the able-bodied men have gone to work on their and, but having nothing wherewith to upport wives and children while waiting or a harvest, have left them to be cared or by the government. This would account for both the increase and the decrease. All the reports agree that the prospects are brighter than they were, but the most sanguine admit that the next four weeks will be the most critical of all. Happily the missionaries are better prepared for the struggle and many of them are, thanks to the gifts of our readers in money and corn, hopeful of relieving all the suffering within their reach. The corn especially has been a most valuable aid, and it has been an object lesson, the value of which cannot be exaggerated. Dr. Harpster, the Lutheran missionary at Guntur, sends the following eloquent testimony to the effect of the beneficence in his district:

GUNTUR, MADRAS,
July 27, 1900.

TO THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

There have been recent local rains in some parts of the Kistna district, but other localities have received none at all. All hope of the early monsoon has not been abandoned, but the hearts of men are failing them for fear. Under any circumstances no harvest can be reaped before the latter part of September, or the first two weeks in October. In the meantime the want among the lower classes will be great. But thanks to the splendid charity of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the Church at home we are keeping the wolf of starvation at bay in the Kistna district.

Up to date this mission has relieved—some for a few days, some for weeks, others for months—upward of 45,000 famine sufferers. Thousands are receiving doles, but a much larger number are paid a living wage and given employment in sinking wells, excavating water tanks, digging gravel, making roads, weaving, shoe-making—in every way that help can be given and, as far as possible, the self-respect of the people preserved. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S gift of Rs. 666 for blankets is a gift twice blessed: First, in furnishing work to many weavers, and secondly, in the comfort it will bring to the old and the abject poor to whom the blankets will be given when the rains set in.

The donation of American maize was a great benefaction. It was great in conception and great in the reach of its beneficence. A venerable Hindu, watching the issue of the corn to the poor, emaciated creatures, turning to me, asked:

"Was this grain sent out of pure charity?"

"Out of pure charity," I replied.

"Was it given outright, without any pay for it?"

"Not a damardi of pay for it; given outright for the love of God and man."

"Well, sir," he said, "I am an old man, but I have never seen anything like this; have you?"

"I never did," I said, "never anything quite like this."

The fact is the sending of this corn from America has more or less affected the whole Hindu community—those who have received no help at all as well as those who have. As the people have carried it on their heads all over the district, along the high roads, through country lanes, by foot paths through the fields, twenty, thirty or even fifty miles to their distant homes, it has attracted the attention and touched the hearts of the remotest villagers. So far as attracting the attention of the people to the foreign help India is receiving in this time of her sore distress, it has been more effective than thrice the value of the corn invested in native grain and distributed would have been. The fact that it was sent by people living thousands of miles away, across three seas, out of pure philanthropy, has moved the hearts of the people as a thousand sermons would not have done. The truth is the corn was a sermon in itself, and, I incline to think that, so far as Christianity is concerned, the most effective sermon ever preached in the Kistna district.

Still, from week to week the crowds straggling into our compounds are showing increased emaciation. The sights we are obliged to look upon from day to day are sad to see. This morning some twenty men, heads of families from a village forty miles to the northwest, came to my door. I have known them for years and often preached in their village. Before this distress came on they were, as things go in India, well-to-do. As the pinch of want came on they sold their cattle, then their lands, and finally anything and everything that could be turned into food for their wives and little ones. As the weary, rainless months dragged by they held out, ashamed to ask for charity. But at last driven to despair, they set out to make their way to me. As they stood before me, I positively did not recognize at first the strong, robust men of former years, so wan and worn and emaciated they were. I am not ashamed to confess to an obstinate lump in the throat as I returned their salaam. Their case is but one out of a thousand.

For nearly six months we have given ourselves, mind and body, to the one work of relieving the distress of these people. The wear and tear upon mind and body no one who has not gone through it can understand. But it is the missionary opportunity of a lifetime.

J. H. HARPSTER.
American Evangelical Lutheran Mission.

ARRIVAL OF "CHRISTIAN HERALD" CORN IN A COUNTRY VILLAGE IN INDIA

2,000 Being Fed.

Dr. W. J. Wanless, the physician in charge of the Presbyterian Hospital at Miraj, reports the arrival of blankets and a supply of corn. "With this corn," he says, "we are enabled to help in supporting two thousand persons to whom it is given out thrice weekly. The fact that the people come for it from villages, many of them ten miles off, shows both their need and their appreciation. The mighty testimony of this exhibition of disinterested charity will last for generations in India. Its immediate and remote result will be the saving of thousands of lives now and thousands of souls in the future. May God continue to bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers and extend its usefulness over the whole world!"

Rev. B. M. Mitchell, of the Church of the Disciples Mission, at Bina, writes: "The people come from villages far and near for the corn. Some to whom I spoke to-day had walked twenty-four miles to get a portion, and it would do you good to see how thankful they are for it. We have four men weighing out the portions as fast as they can; yet they cannot keep pace with the applicants. The distress is increasing daily here, and must continue to do so until we get a crop. Tell your readers how thankful we are, both missionaries and natives, for their generous help."

A Song at the Mill

A missionary in Sholapur writes: "I had been visiting the famine camp and was returning with my heart heavy almost to breaking with the sights I had witnessed, when to my amazement I heard a woman's voice raised in song. Surely no one could be singing in such a neighborhood! What cause could there be for song? I went to see what it was, and there I saw a woman grinding at a mill. It was one of those quaint, old-fashioned mills of two stones. She was grinding away, and her hungry eyes were sparkling with the prospect of a full meal at last. Oh, you who have sent this grain; you who denied yourselves that these hungry people might eat, Jesus will surely reward you. He sees it, and this hungry woman's glad song must enter his ears like a prayer for a blessing upon you."

Children Fed

Rev. Edgar M. Wilson, Presbyterian Missionary at Ratnagiri, thus describes the feeding of the children with the corn at his station: "We soaked the corn over night and boiled it with salt for an hour or two in the morning. The children brought their little earthen dishes and sat down on the ground in a row. If you could have seen how short a time it took to dispose of the corn, you would have understood how they appreciated it. We had no shelter for such a large number, and once or twice there was a drenching rain while we were giving out the portions. In spite of this not one of the little creatures budged until his dish was filled."

MUST THE ORPHANS PERISH?

It is very gratifying to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as it must be to its readers, to know how much good this gift of corn has done, especially to the children. One likes to read such a story of delight as that of Mr. Wilson. The problem of the children is now a very pressing one, and that not only in the present, but for the future. We are thankful to see that many Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies, as well as private givers, are recognizing the significance of the crisis and are undertaking the support of orphans. But the extent of the need is appalling. The Methodist Episcopal missions alone have seven thousand orphans in their stations, and other missions are in proportion. The following incident, which occurred recently at Ahmadabad, is a specimen of hundreds:

A Sister's Plea

In the Salvation Army refuge there was a bright little girl about eight years old who belonged to the Bhil tribe. Her home was in a village a few miles away. She had been given to the Salvation Army by her parents early this year, when the pressure of the famine had become acute, and they had realized that some member of the family must be given up that the others might have a chance of life. The child was accepted and seemed contented. But there must have been in her heart a love and a yearning for the dear ones at home that a child is sure to feel. That she had that love was proved one day lately after the child had been seven months in the refuge. She came running up to Nurani in great distress. Some people from her village had come in and had told her that her mother, father and uncles were dead of cholera. But her little brother? Was he living? She had learned that he was, and now she flung herself on the ground and begged with tears that she might be allowed to go back to the village and find the child. It was hard to refuse her, but it had to be done, for to consent would have been to imperil both children. Nurani promised to seek the boy, and with that the girl had to be content. Nurani sent to the officer in that village, and soon the news came that the boy was found and was being sent on. No such touching sight had been witnessed for many a day as when the girl clasped her little brother in her arms and conducted him to her protector. Would any one like to adopt those two children, that they may not be separated?

"LITTLE TWELVE THOUSAND"

The Story of a Little Stunted and Scarred Tenement Waif Who Came to Mont-Lawn

LILY. "LITTLE TWELVE THOUSAND"

THIS summer, Mont-Lawn entertained its twelve thousandth little guest. In 1894 "Little One Thousand" came—a wee, ragged maid from Cherry street. Since that time some 11,000 tenement waifs have received their outings of ten days each. What a great army of little ones this would be if they stood in line, thanking the readers of this paper, who have cooperated with us year after year in bringing into darkened child lives their greatest blessing! To hundreds of children the beautiful word "home" was meaningless before they visited Mont-Lawn. Hundreds first saw trees and flowers growing, plucked their first wild-wood blossoms, heard first a wild bird carol, sat down for the first time to an orderly table, wore their first neat clothes and lifted up for the first time their voices in prayer and thanks to God at Mont-Lawn. Many of our children are now servants of the Master whose Gospel of peace and love was first interpreted to them at Mont-Lawn, and the moral tone of whole families and neighborhoods have been changed through their influence. Sabbath after Sabbath for summers past a long line of happy children have trooped into the pretty, flower-decked chapel, singing: "How beautiful to walk in the steps of the Saviour." Sabbath after Sabbath, with bowed heads and folded hands, they have listened while Dr. Klopsch led them in the prayer: "God bless our fathers, our mothers, our brothers and sisters. God grant that all of us may go back little torch-bearers into our homes. Make us more kind, more gentle, more pure and holy." Sabbath after Sabbath they have heard the lovely story of the Good Shepherd, the dear Lord, who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me." Is it wonderful that God has prospered this work, making it his own?

Lily, the tiny tot who bore the dignity of the big number, 12,000, is a typical tenement waif. Our picture shows her as she came first to this office. She is one of a family of five living in two squalid tenement rooms. The oldest child, a diminutive girl of eleven, is housekeeper. Lily, small for four, is six. Her wee face is scarred with hurts received. Her father drinks; her mother has been long dead. The poor little maid has had a hard, hard life. Miss Irwin, head-worker of the Gospel Settlement, says that one bitter morning last winter Lily came to the kindergarten in little garments frozen stiff! They had been washed overnight, hung out on the roof, and then, being the baby's only apparel, were put upon her again by Sarah, the poor "little mother," who was doing her best to make Lily look presentable! At the Home with Lily is her brother Harry and her sister Gertrude. None of these children speak distinctly, the organs of speech being defective in all.

"Little Twelve Thousand's" great soft blue eyes opened in wonder and delight when she was taken to Mont-Lawn. The sail on the steamer Chrystenah, the stage-ride over the lovely country road, the welcome that greeted her at the Home, the lawn, the grass, the scups, the wild-flowers, the good food, her snowy cot in the dormitory, were marvelous, incomprehensible blessings. The complete outfit of good garments in which gentle hands clothed her, above all filled the little maid with a pride and gratitude that her stammering voice sought vainly to express. She followed the teachers about, looking the love and thanks she could not utter. Her advent was made the occasion of a festival for herself and others. Our maimed, halt and blind were taken out to the woods on a special picnic; a table-cloth was spread on the grass, and a little lunch of good things set forth. Our blind boy, our wee crippled girls, our lad with a deformed hand, our two deaf and dumb children were fitting members of this little party.

If any children appreciate more than others the blessings of the home, it is the afflicted ones upon whom, of course, the hardships of tenement life bear more cruelly than upon others. We wish our readers could have seen this happy little picnic of the lame, the halt and the blind.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

AN ANCIENT SANCTUARY

WHOEVER, in these lovely days of the most beautiful season of the year, shall spend some happy time in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, will count it a privilege to worship there with the Moravians. No body of Christian people has adhered more closely to the primitive faith than they; none have ever clung more lovingly to the Cross; none have from early days shown more constantly a missionary spirit. Moravian and missionary are almost synonymous terms; the one irresistibly recalls or suggests the other as soon as it is mentioned. In all its history, too, the Moravian Church has acted much for education, and under its auspices in Pennsylvania several very famous schools have long flourished, sending forth graduates of both sexes to take their places in the world and do its work faithfully and well. True religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep one's self unspotted from the world. In its epitome of creed and practice is summed up the beautiful and unselfish life of the Moravian brethren and their simple-hearted, straightforward and gentle-mannered families. The second building erected in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and also the first place of worship is shown in the interesting picture here displayed. It was commenced in 1741 and finished in 1742. On a tablet in this house of worship these words are inscribed:

> September 28, 1741
> Cornerstone of this House Laid.
> June 23, 1742, "Der Saal." The Chapel was > Consecrated by Count Zinzendorf.
> Ninety-three Indians Were Baptized Within > These Walls.
> The first, on Sept. 16, 1742, were David, a > Mohican, by Zinzendorf, and Joshua, > a Mohawk, by Buttner.
> For Ten Years it was the Only Place of > Worship, and for Fifty Years the Home > of the Moravian Ministers.

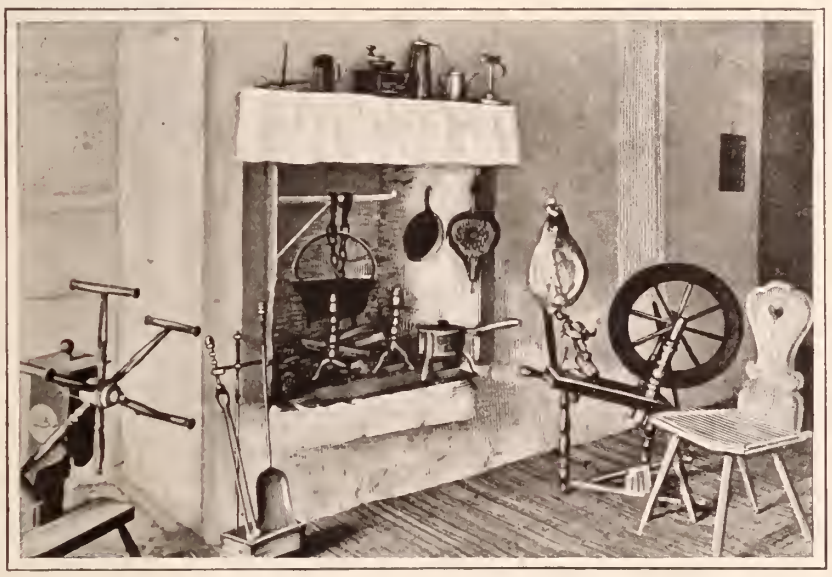
That record of the baptism of ninety-three red men, shows how eager were these German settlers to win their first triumphs from the wilderness for their Lord Jesus. Pennsylvania's whole history shows that peace, brotherly love and fair dealing made an impression on the aborigines, and shines brightly in contrast with much of our lurid colonial history in other portions of the land. Broad-brimmed Quaker and gentle Moravian attracted the rude and war-like sons of the soil to the Prince of Peace, civilized them, taught them the arts of agriculture and commerce, and baptized them into the Christian faith.

A fireplace of the olden time with a kettle suspended from the crane and the household implements hanging about, reminds us of days which antedated the kitchen range and the gas-stove by nearly two hundred years. If you have ever tasted roast meats and broiled fish cooked in an open fireplace; if you know the flavor of hoe-cake and light bread baked in the ashes, you have enjoyed such toothsome viands as are never served to the patrons of Delmonico's or the Waldorf; for no cooking of the modern chef compares with the subtle dainties of food prepared as it was over the fire on the hearth. Nor have we modern folk always the vigorous appetites of those earlier days. There are parts of the Southern mountain land, where one may tramp or drive all day, and come in with a sharpened hunger to eat a meal prepared as our foremothers did; and, from experience, I can testify to its excellence.

The old spinning-wheel, too, still used in rural districts of Pennsylvania, in West Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky has disappeared from our Northern homes, except as an honored relic of the past. In many a stately drawing room and cozy parlor, the spinning-wheel is just now a much-prized ornament, undeniably decorative in its effect, and holding its own bravely among the splendors of its neighboring furniture. In the olden time the good wife carded and spun and wove and handled wool and flax alike for the clothing of her household and the filling of her lavender-scented linen presses. Many thoughts crowd upon us as we visit this Moravian settlement, and especially at Easter, should we go there, we would take part in a celebration of our Lord's resurrection in the early dawn, and join in the triumphant hymns, and come away more than ever glad that we belong to the living Church.



A FIREPLACE OF THE OLDEN TIME IN THE CLERGY HOME, BETHLEHEM, PA.

THE FIRST PLACE OF WORSHIP IN BETHLEHEM, PA.—1741-42

> No more a lily among thorns,
> Feeble and faint and few,
> But countless as the stars of morn,
> And as the early dew.

The house in the picture was originally built of logs, but was weather boarded thirty years ago. We received the photograph from the present inmate of the house—now used as a clergy-house—Mrs. Maria L. Schultz.

Many hallowed associations cluster about such a house, used as a church in olden days, and now as a home, and ever followed by the blessing of the Most High.

Mourning Dress

Mourning with us is best expressed by the wearing of black clothing. There are people in the world whose mourning garb is white; but black, the heavier and more opaque the better, is preferred by Europeans and Americans. Fashion prescribes the length of time during which deep mourning must be worn: for a husband or wife the term is longer than for any other; for a parent or child it is but little shorter, while for relatives-in-law a few weeks or months is a sufficient length of time. The deepest mourning can be modified in a year. There are those who can never be satisfied to abandon mourning once they have assumed it and they do not change it essentially; they wear dark and sombre garments to their last days, but these are usually elderly women who have left the joys of youth behind them.

It is not obligatory to wear mourning at all unless one desires it, for many people have rebelled against it as a foolish custom, and they do not care to incur its expense, or to darken those about them by a style of funereal raiment. We may remark, however, that a mourning dress is a protection, that it saves people from abrupt questions and from misunderstanding, and that it need not be gloomy, nor include crape; it may be simple black, relieved by white band and collar and cuffs, and be appropriate for any occasion.

Swimming

Because every summer a number of valuable lives are lost in the water, the reason is greater that everyone, man, woman and child should learn to swim. The younger the pupil, the apter is he or she to learn the art, which is a simple one, requiring only confidence, attention to a few plain directions, and a quantity of water for exploiting one's skill.

Women and Cats

"Some women are just like cats!" Susie spoke with emphasis.

"What do you mean?" asked Helen.

"Why, I mean that they are so furtive, and so treacherous. They purr and say nice things, and all at once stick out a paw that was hidden under the velvet, and give you a dig and a scratch. I hate slyness, especially the sort that lies in wait and watches a chance to hurt a friend, or say a mean thing, or insinuate something one does not assert outright. I have seen such women."

"Well," said Helen, who liked cats, "I think you are unfair to Puss. Some women have those horrid ways, but most cats are above them."

ROSY TEACHERS

Look Better in the School-Room Than the Sallow Sort.

Young folks naturally like comely objects, and a good-looking, healthy teacher can do vastly more with pupils, everything else considered, than the skinny, dyspeptic teacher can. The instructor in Latin and mathematics in a young ladies' seminary at Macon, Ga., had an experience worthy the attention of any teacher.

She kept running down a little more each year until finally a genuine case of nervous prostration set in and she was confined to her bed for eight months, a perfect wreck, physically and mentally. She and her friends thought it was due to overwork, but she now knows it was due to improper food.

Of course the physicians were called in, but there is almost nothing that can be done in such cases, except to rely on well-selected food and proper care. She was put upon Grape-Nuts, all medicines, also tea, coffee, and iced drinks were taken away. She had Postum Food Coffee once a day. The larger part of her food was Grape-Nuts, for this food is made with special reference to rebuilding the gray matter in the brain and nerve centres.

The lady says: "I had been reduced to 95 pounds in weight when I began using Grape-Nuts. The new food was so delicious and strengthening that I felt new life at once. I have now developed into a perfectly healthy, happy, stout woman, weighing 135 pounds, the greatest weight I ever attained, and have a wonderfully clear, fresh, rosy complexion, instead of the sallow, bilious hue of the past.

"I never now have a symptom of dyspepsia nor any other ache or ail. Am strong physically and I particularly notice the strength of mind. I never experience that tired, weary feeling after a hard day's labor that used to appear. My brain seems as clear and active at night as it was in the morning and I am doing twice the amount of work I ever did. Dont use my name in public, please, but I will answer inquiries." FLY TO PIECES.

The Effect of Coffee on Highly Organized People.

"I have been a coffee user for years, and about two years ago got into a very serious condition of dyspepsia and indigestion. It seemed to me I would fly to pieces. I was so nervous that at the least noise I was distressed, and many times could not straighten myself up because of the pain.

"My physician told me I must not eat any heavy or strong food and ordered a diet, giving me some medicine. I followed directions carefully, but kept on using coffee and did not get any better. Last winter husband, who was away on business, had Postum Food Coffee served to him in the family where he boarded.

"He liked it so well that when he came home he brought some with him. We began using it and I found it most excellent. While I drank it my stomach never bothered me in the least, and I got over my nervous troubles. When the Postum was all gone we returned to coffee, then my stomach began to hurt me as before and the nervous conditions came on again.

"That showed me exactly what was the cause of the whole trouble, so I quit drinking coffee altogether and kept on using Postum Food Coffee. The old troubles left again and I have never had any trouble since." Anna Coen, Mt. Ephraim, Ohio.

IN GOD'S GARDEN

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON

SOMETIMES, the doctor says, in advising us concerning our wearied or overtaxed bodies, "Let nature have a chance." He means, let the beneficent forces stored up within you, find an opportunity to permeate the body with their hoarded health. There is a sense in which the same counsel would apply equally well to overtaxed and over-wearied souls and minds. Nature will gladly take her chance with both body and soul, but with a difference in operation. An over-wearied body may generally be depended upon to utilize and multiply its own recuperative forces. An over-wearied mind must look for beneficent agencies beyond itself, and may count itself happy if not too weary to appropriate eagerly and assimilate easily that which offers from without.

When the work stops too, for a time, many of us have to say,

"It's not the hand only that lieth thus still,
I'm wearied in spirit, I'm listless in will."

If this is our case, then it is quite time that we "let nature have her chance."

* * * *

PERHAPS you do not believe nature can do anything for you even if you give her every opportunity, but she can and she will. Try her. Why should she not? She loved and soothed you when you were a little child if you were troubled or distressed, and she is the same tender mother to this hour. Do you remember long years ago saying softly to yourself in the still beauty of a moonlit night,

"At my feet the river glideth
Like a shadow, sullen, dark;
On the stream the white moon rideth
Like a bark.

There she swings and smiles above me,
Till I think some things there be
In the very heavens that love me,
Even me.

Now the moon is floating to me:
On the stream I see it sway,
Swinging boatlike—as 't would woo me
Far away.

And the stars bend from the azure,
I could touch them where I lie,
And they whisper all the pleasure
Of the sky.

There they smile and shine above me,
Till I think some things there be
In the very heavens that love me,
Even me.

DO YOU remember as a child, when irritated or discontented how the simple being out of doors, the walk in the woods or the fields soothed the irritation and softened the discontent, and sent you home ready to try again, and longing to "be good"? Do you remember later, when the sorrows and anxieties and cares came upon you, and human voices jarred upon the ear and human words seemed empty of all meaning, and human sympathy a mockery—how you longed to get away from it all to where you heard only the voice of the wayside brook and the "wind of the whispering leaves." And do you remember how the wonder and power and charm of the silent ministry of nature to the suffering and hungering soul sent you back so lifted up and strengthened that you felt the sweetness even in common, human words and the blessing in common work?

Ah, but that is "all in the past," you say. The years have been so many, the cares so heavy. Such ministry belonged to that earlier blessed time when an unreal glamor was over the face of nature as it was over the whole experience of life. You cannot think nature would have any such message for you now.

* * * *

IF THIS be true, then is the fault not in nature, which is, to those who can understand her divine language, the truest interpreter of the heart of God. The fault is with the life that has become so overburdened with its cares, its successes, or its disappointments that it no longer has open eyes to see the beauty, open ears to hear earth's myriad voices, open hearts to take in the countless messages of courage and strength and peace. Nature is the same, the soul alone is changed. Still some things, nay all things love us, but we no longer care for a love which we have lost the power to take. The healing awaits us, but we seem able to feel only the clay and to miss the divine touch that anoints our eyelids. We no longer see God because possibly we have forgotten that it is the pure in heart to whom that sight is given.

If we have lost our childhood's comfort in nature, it is only because we have lost our childhood. There is no way back except the old way, by which again the soul becomes as a little child. Then it begins at once to inherit the Kingdom of Heaven. Then the dead world, that had neither smile nor voice, is filled again with music and with light. Then we cease to beg that the world will let us alone and give us a chance to rest, for we have learned in letting ourselves alone, the truest secret of rest. The heart "at leisure from itself" learns not only to "soothe and sympathize" with others, but it is the only heart that can take to and for itself the soothing and sympathy of all the world, and especially of the world of nature, which gives and comforts with neither task nor stress nor strain.

* * * *

LET yourself alone then, tried and troubled soul. Let nature have her chance. The things you strove for in your work and failed to accomplish. Are they haunting you with your failure? Give them up and let them go! The things done that you ought not to have done, it is too late now to undo. The things undone that you ought to have done, it is too late to do. Let them all alone. The mistakes for which it seems as if we were often punished more severely than for our sins—these, too, must be left behind. The feverish regret over what might have been, the feverish strife for what yet may be—let both alike alone, and then with soul and mind unburdened of their load, "Let nature have her chance."

Remember, too, that God said, not only "let there be light," but he said, "lift up your eyes." See, the summer clouds bend tenderly over the hilltops. Their shadows float and drift across the landscape and lie as if asleep in the hollows. The trees spread in great moving masses of shade, or stately and alone from the meadow away to the mountain's base, and the dark firs seem striving to climb the gray bare rocks even to the mountain's crown. Nearer, the turf of the valley waits our aching feet. The water ripples over the stones of the woodland brook with a sound that woos to sleep. The nearer fields are gray sprinkled with daisies and fragrant with clover. Wild vines go shaggling along the broken stone walls, and even the dusty roadside is gay with wayward flowers. The birds chirp softly, the brook sings, the bees hum drousily, the wind has a whisper of peace. See to it that no discord or jar come from your own sore or troubled heart; and as surely as there is God, his messenger of healing is in all these things for you.

Died for his Comrades

Charles Hanson, of West Hill, Iowa, is one of the heroes of the Philippine war. He was killed at Soculan, Mindanao, May 14, when an attempt was made to massacre the American soldiers at that post. At eight o'clock on the morning of the 14th, a guide rushed up the barrack stairs with the news that three or four hundred insurgents were ambushed near the town. He had hardly begun his story when there was a rush of feet, and up the stairs dashed several men, pursued by Tagalos, cutting and slashing, with knives in both hands. The insurgents had come into the town by twos and threes, and distributed themselves so as to be near the barracks. They posed as "amigos," and their weapons were concealed. The main body remained in the bush awaiting the signal. The Americans rallied and drove off their assailants. After a sharp fight of a few minutes the enemy fled, leaving fifty-seven killed and twenty wounded. The Americans lost seven killed and four wounded. Two men, just off guard, were sleeping in a band-stand in front of the barracks. Private Hanson ran to waken them. He might have saved himself by seeking shelter with the others; but, without hesitating an instant, he ran to the rescue of his comrades. The three tried to fight their way to the barracks. Two succeeded, but Hanson fell under the cruel bolos. He gave his life for his friends.

The story related by Miss Frances E. Harris, 301 Onondaga, Street, Syracuse, N. Y., fits exactly the cases of thousands of young girls of her age.

Weak and languid, suffering from nervousness and lack of blood, unequal to the slightest task. It is a disease known as Anæmia, a common ailment among growing girls. She says:

"When I was seventeen years of age I became debilitated and run down in health. I was extremely nervous, lost my appetite and my blood became so thin that there was no color at all in my face. Much of the time I was confined to my bed and was so weak that I could only walk a short distance. The least exercise would bring on shortness of breath and pain in side. Sometimes I could hardly breathe.

"I tried several different doctors without receiving any benefit. I also tried other medicines advertised to cure troubles such as I had but they did me no good.

"I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People advertised in the papers, and decided to try them. The first box helped me, and I procured some more. My appetite improved, my nerves became stronger, and within a short time I gained over twenty-five pounds in weight. My improvement continued, and in all I took a dozen boxes. When they were finished I was entirely cured and am in good health, have a good color and appetite and am as well as ever.

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to many others and will be glad to answer any inquiries if the writers enclose stamp for reply."

(Signed) FRANCES M. HARRIS.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

A Mysterious Helper*

COULD the group have known the trouble in the new cobbler's heart, as he bent all day over his work and thought of the needed wood, their interest in the subject would have been enhanced. When the sun was almost down, Sam remembered that a house was being built several squares away. Carpenters always left many scraps behind them, which village custom allowed anyone to pick up. The cobbler devoutly thanked heaven for the thought, closed the shop, and hurried away to the new building. The men were still at work, and there was a great deal of waste lying about.

"May I have some of these leavin's?" asked Sam of the master builder.

The man looked down from the scaffolding on which he stood, recognized the questioner, turned again to his work, and at last answered, with a scowl, "Yes, I suppose so. It would be all the same, I guess, if I didn't say so. You'd come after dark and help yourself."

Sam pocketed the insult, though the weight of it was heavy. So was that of the bits of board he gathered; but he knew that such thin wood burned rapidly, so he took a load that made him stagger. As he entered the yard behind his house, he saw, through the dusk which was beginning to gather, a man rapidly tossing cord-wood from a wagon to a large pile which already lay on the ground.

"My friend," gasped Sam, dropping his own load and panting from his exertion, "I guess—you've made a—mistake. I hain't ordered a load of wood from nobody. Guess you've come to the wrong house."

"Guess not," replied the man, who was the farmer that had freed his mind at the railway station during the afternoon.

"This is Sam Kimper's," explained the cobbler.

"Just where I was told to come," said the farmer, tossing out the last sticks and stretching his arms to rest upon them.

"Who was it told you to bring it?" asked the resident.

The farmer stooped and took a large package from the front of the wagon and threw it on the ground; then he threw another.

"Won't you tell me who sent it?" Sam asked again.

The farmer turned his head and shouted, "It was God, if you must know; and he told me to bring that bag of flour and shoulder of bacon, too."

Then the farmer drove off, at a gait quite unusual in farm-teams.

The cobbler burst into tears and fell upon his knees. When he arose he looked in the direction from which came the rattle of the retreating wheels, and said to himself, "I wonder if that man was converted in the penitentiary?"

The story, when Sam told it in the house, amazed the family, though little Mary giggled long on hearing the name of the supposed giver. No sooner was supper ended than the child slipped out of the house and hurried to the hotel to tell her sister Jane all about it. Within half an hour the story had passed, through the usual channels, to all lounging-places that were open, and at one of them—the post-office—it was heard by Deacon Quickset. It troubled the good man a great deal, and he said, "There's no knowing how much harm 'll be done the fellow by that speech. If he thinks the Lord is going to take care of him in such unexpected ways, he'll go to loafing and then get back into his old ways."

"Didn't the Lord ever help you in any unexpected way, Deacon?" asked Judge Prency, who nearly every evening spent a few moments in the post-office lobby.

"Why, yes—of course; but, Judge, Sam and I aren't exactly the same kind of men, I think you'll allow."

"Quite right," said the judge. "You're a man of sense and character. But when Jesus was on earth did he give much attention to men of your general character and standing? According to my memory of the record—and I've reread it several times since Sam Kimper's return—he confined his attentions quite closely to the poor and wretched, apparently to the helpless, worthless class to whom the Kimper family would have belonged had it lived at that time. 'They that are whole need no physician'—you remember?—'but they that are sick.'"

Methodism's Great Gathering

Ocean Grove Camp-Meeting Attended by Multitudes—A Spiritual Harvest

OCEAN GROVE'S annual Methodist camp-meeting this year was the largest religious assemblage ever held at that famous resort. Many crossed the Atlantic and numbers traveled from the Pacific to attend the meetings. Probably no less than 75,000 people were on the grounds during the ten days of the camp-meeting just closed.

This year the meetings extended over fifteen days, ending the third day of September. They opened with a prayer service on Aug. 18. The occasion called out a host of "old campaigners" who entered with zest into the exercises. In the evening the Lord's Supper was administered to a large gathering of people including many clergymen. The opening sermon was delivered by Bishop Hamilton, to a congregation that densely crowded the vast auditorium. The newly elected Bishop's clear, penetrating voice reached to the farthest part of the great building. The theme of the discourse was "War," founded on the words of the Psalmist, "He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth." In an eloquent climax the speaker showed that it was love that should rule the hearts of men.

Each day's services began with a consecration meeting in the Tabernacle about sunrise, led by Rev. A. E. Ballard, Vice-President of the Association. Immediately following this, family devotions were held in the Auditorium. At nine o'clock, the Young People's Meeting, led by Rev. C. H. Yatman, drew old and young to the Temple, many who could not obtain entrance listening at the open doors and windows. The "Helping Hand" meeting at the same hour was especially for the unconverted.

Mrs. Bottome, Mother of the King's Daughters, gave a series of Bible readings in the Tabernacle. The Holiness Meetings and Mrs. Lizzie Smith's meetings were features of the afternoons. At four o'clock the Children's Meeting took place, and at a later hour the Twilight Service. After each evening sermon there was a revival "altar service." Thus, from early morn till late at night the voice of singing, prayer and exhortation resounded through the Grove.

On Sunday, Dr. Hanlon's Bible Class met, numbering fully two thousand, when learned divines discussed knotty theological problems. The picturesque Sabbath evening Beach Meetings were held at the foot of Ocean Parkway, where the multitudes worshiped with the waves dashing at their feet.

Among the notable preachers who took part in the camp-meeting services this year were Rev. L. A. Purcell, of the Philadelphia Conference; Rev. H. Wood, of England; Rev. Dr. Sullivan, of Philadelphia; Rev. D. Holmes, of London, Ont.; Rev. Joseph H. Smith, of Philadelphia; J. R. Westwood, Philadelphia; Rev. Thomas O. Hanlon, D.D., President of Pennington Seminary. The season has been one of great spiritual activity and rich blessing has come to many souls as the result of the services.

THE THANKFUL HEART

O GUIDE me, dear Saviour;
Still guide me along,
Still be my companion,
My solace and song.
I know thee, I love thee,
I feel thou art near;
Thy presence is cheering,
Stay, stay with me here.

O keep me, dear Saviour;
Be ever Thine own
This heart full of treasure
By Thee overflown.
This fulness of mercy,
This joy so complete,
O, merciful Saviour,
Thy smiles are so sweet.

I thank thee, dear Saviour,
For blessings so rare;
Thy fondest affections
Thou gav'st me to share.
I found thee, I've proved thee,
And love thee as best,
And shall follow to know thee
In the sunshine of rest.

They Helped India's Orphans

Kind-hearted Friends who Undertake the Support of the Helpless Famine Waifs

FRIENDS of the India Famine Orphans are rapidly multiplying. Every mail brings us new and welcome pledges from different States, proving that the appeal has indeed touched many good Christian hearts.

Mr. F. G. Barnard, Supt. of the M. E. Sabbath School in Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs. Barnard, Pres. of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, their daughter, Mamie Georgia (who at fourteen years of age has fifty pupils, and is probably the youngest primary Sunday School teacher in the State), and their youngest daughter, Ethel Beatrice, twelve years of age, have assumed as their part of the responsibility that has fallen upon the Christian world, the support and education of three little orphan children in India. Each of the little girls will have a girl orphan in India and will put aside five cents a day each for her support. Mr. Barnard will educate a boy in honor of the pastor of Grace M. E. Church, who is doing good and effective work. If every Christian family in our country would as nobly meet this duty, there would be a speedy solution of the problem of the helpless little orphan children of India.

MR. AND MRS. BARNARD AND THEIR DAUGHTERS

A Roman mother said: "These are my jewels." Even so America may say: "These are my jewels" of hundreds of children who are working, saving and sacrificing for the sake of India's helpless, orphaned boys and girls. Many childish scrawls from little lads and lassies, who are "America's jewels," are kept as treasures in this office long after the gifts they contained have sped on missions of mercy to India. Even the little workers with mite boxes have done a good part in saving India's orphans:

Ruth L. O., Idaho Springs. I gave one Mite Box to the Presbyterian Sunday School, and the other I took to the Methodist Sunday School, and altogether I got $2.02, which I send, wishing it were more, and hoping it will save some poor little orphan girls and boys in India.——John F., Mount Vernon Springs, N.C. My little sister, Bernice, and I send our thirteen pennies for little Hindu orphans. Elvira and Eugene send each ten cents, and Nellie sends five.

BERNICE AND JOHN FAUST

Junior Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, Helping Hands, Busy Bees and Sabbath School classes have now the brightest opportunity of centuries to help in evangelizing the world, since it costs only $15 a year to adopt and educate a Hindu orphan, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gladly making all necessary arrangements and putting the band of American children, whenever desired, in direct correspondence with the orphan whose care is undertaken.

The following extracts from our letter-box show how noble THE CHRISTIAN HERALD boys and girls are working for the orphans:

Cornelius DeWitt V——, Union Church, $10.75. I am nine years old. Mama has taken THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for years. I read it. So does papa. I had sympathy for the poor Hindu children, so I went through the congregation and raised this by subscription.——Clyde and Bryan Baker, $3. We are three and six years old. We sold vegetables and solicited from friends and got this small sum for India's poor little children.——Mrs. Mary A. Henderson, $27.50. From the Juvenile Bee-Hive Mission Band. Our little girls worked very faithfully for this.——Harry M., Pine Grove, W. Va. I feel so sorry for the poor little orphans in India. I picked blackberries in my bare feet and sold them, and mama gave me two cents a day to bring water; and I send the money for Hindu orphans.——Little Lottie Wyly, Atlanta, Ga. I send 38 cents. I will send more for the orphans.

Among many touching memorial gifts are these:

Mrs. M. C. Van A., Ferndale, Wash., $10.25. In memory of our darling Ray, our only son, who went to Heaven last May. He was eighteen, a church member, and I was praying he might become a minister.——J. S. G., Honey Grove, Tex., $14.00. Sent by request of Ballard Dial, who asked before he died that his pony and pigs be sold and the money sent to the India sufferers.——Mr. and Mrs. B. De Witt, W. Va. Our little daughter Lillian loved THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. A short time before her death she asked permission to send some of her money to the famine children. We send $1.56, which is all she had.

DASH DOWN THE CUP!

A Temperance Song

DASH down the cup! Drink not again;
Its very touch is degradation!
Quick! dash it down; Oh! do not drain
Its liquid draught of deep damnation!
Break through its toils while yet you may;
Rush from the warmth of its embracing;
Heed not its siren call-away!
Each burning drop a grave is tracing.

Drink not again! Be wise, be free;
Seize on a noble resolution!
Rum's leprous arms encircle thee;
Yield not again to its pollution.
Drown not the still voice of the soul;
Each draught a seed of woe is planting;
Drink not, though beauty pledge the bowl,
There's death beneath its light enchanting.

Shake off the curse with manly might;
Court not a depth of shame and terror;
Turn not your brightest days to night;
Oh! follow not this fatal error.
Crush not a pure and noble mind;
Make not degraded taste a merit;
Wake from your dreams; Oh! be not blind
To God's bright gifts, which you inherit.

Shake off the bonds that bind you down
To cold, relentless, heartless fashion;
Sunder the cursed ties you own—
Sink not a slave to damning passion!
Rise from your burning bed—ashamed,
Yield not again to the foul demon;
Dream not, nor muse—go forth, reclaimed—
Be thou a man—a God-like freeman.

Tares in Your Field*

Cheer in the Parable for the Desponding Soul in the Prospect of Purification

WHILE theologians have disputed about the meaning of the parable of the tares and are not yet by any means in accord about it, there are some lessons which we may fairly learn from it, whatsoever its larger meaning may be. One important lesson is of encouragement for the despondent. When we see so much evil in the church and in the world, we are apt to lose heart. It may comfort us to know that Christ foresaw that it would be so. Howsoever it may originate, evil will come and will grow. The perfect is not here, and there is no use in fretting over it and harassing ourselves, and unfitting ourselves for honest work by dwelling upon the evil that we cannot remedy. There is no lack of useful occupation in the Lord's field. There are many weeds in the field which may be removed; there is much that may be done to improve the quality of the wheat; there are frequent opportunities for sowing good seed; but the business of rooting up this spurious wheat, which looks so like the genuine that we are not sure about it, had better be left alone. The heresy-hunter, the man who is constantly finding fault with his brethren, the critic who keeps a close watch on the sermon to see that it is orthodox and on the conduct of other members, to see that it is consistent, does more harm in the church than good.

One of the most desirable things for everyone to cultivate is the spirit of sweetness and forbearance. The Baptist would rejoice if every church practised baptism by immersion; the Episcopalian would be glad if instead of the extempore prayers, the churches would use such a liturgy as his own; the Presbyterian and the Methodist would like to see the churches give up their individualism and unite under a Conference or a Presbytery. So intense are the preferences in some of these cases and so sure is each man that he is right, that he is liable to look on the man who differs from him as being wilfully blind and to dislike him and oppose him with a ferocity that is far from the spirit of Christ. The doctrines and practices of other churches seem to him as so much evil, which should be rooted up. In one small town, not many years ago, a church which was really doing a good work, was closed, not because the enemies of Christ opposed it; but because two or three Christians of another denomination, who had settled in the town, so bitterly denounced the doctrines that were being preached in it. It is not long since one great church could not rest until one or two of its members, eminent for personal piety and zealous for the honor and glory of Christ, were cast out, because with their piety and zeal they had intellectual beliefs with which their brethren did not agree. It is easy to laugh at the story of the boy who, unable to get rid of the rats in his father's barn, set fire to the barn to burn them out; but his folly was no worse than that of the men who would destroy a church because of the evil in it that they see or imagine. The great Head of the Church knew whereof he spoke when he said: "Let both grow together until the harvest."

There is another reason why there should be no undue haste in the process of destruction. A possibility exists in the Lord's field that does not exist in the field of nature. The human tares may be transmuted into wheat. Some sharp discipline, some change in circumstances may come, out of which the man whose condition was deemed hopeless may emerge chastened and cleansed, a new man. It is related of one of the most successful of the English ministers of the Gospel that when a boy in the Sunday School the teachers voted to expel him, and he was saved from that disgrace by the offer of one of them to take charge of him, and the boy was converted under that teacher's efforts.

It may be, too, that some encouragement may come from this parable to the despondent Christian. He has read the biographies of good men, and looking within himself has seen so much of evil that he has lost heart. He is so far from his ideal, and he perceives the evil tendencies which seem to condemn him as a child of perdition. Certainly if indeed he may hope that he belongs to Christ someone has sown tares in his soul. His life is one continuous struggle with the monsters within him that clamor for indulgence. He cannot root them out, but he can go to Christ to have it done, and he may be sure if, like Paul, he beseeches thrice in vain for deliverance, that the time will come when all the evil within him will like the tares be gathered into bundles for the burning, while his purified soul will be gathered into the garner.

ASK AND YE SHALL RECEIVE

O PRAYING ones who long have prayed,
And yet no answer heard,
Have ye been sometimes half afraid
God might not keep his word?
Seems prayer to fall on deafened ears?
Does heaven seem blind and dumb?
Is hope deferred? Believe—believe—
The answer-time will come!

"Ask what ye will"—his word is true,
His power is all divine;
Ye cannot test his love too far;
His utmost shall be thine.
God does not mock believing prayer;
Ye shall not go unfed!
He gives no serpent for a fish,
Nor gives he stones for bread.

Thy inmost longings may be told;
The hopes that turned to shame;
The empty life, the thwarted plans;
The good that never came.
Say not, "The promise is not mine,
God did not hear me pray;
I prayed—I trusted fully—but
The grave hath barred the way."

God heard thee—he hath not forgot,
Faith shall at length prevail!
Yea—know it! Not one smallest jot
Of all his Word can fail.
O, if ye truly have believed,
Not vain hath been thy prayer!
As God is true, thy hope shall come—
Sometime—some way—some where!

THE DIVINE TEACHER OF ALL THE AGES

∴ CHRIST'S WORDS TO THE PEASANTS OF GALILEE THE GUIDE FOR MODERN LIFE ∴

ONE of the most significant facts in the world's history is expressed in the beautiful picture by Fugel, on this page. It shows a group of modern peasants with their children listening to Christ. We might call it an anachronism, a chronological blunder to represent such women and children—gures that belong to the nineteenth century grouped around a Teacher of the first entury. These women may be seen in any European village; these children re such as are in our own homes and are running about our streets. But the

And here is one of the most convincing proofs of Christ's divinity. Those words of His were like seed which has grown and is ever taking new forms adapted to new circumstances and new conditions of life. They were like the light which on every new day shines on the world lighting men to new tasks, and as useful and as necessary to us in the nineteenth century as to the men of the first. What mere man could have spoken such words? The greatest poets and philosophers, who were admired by their contemporaries and reverenced for their wisdom, have seldom any rtist has not blundered; he is only repeating the lesson of all our Sunday Schools nd pulpits, that the teaching of Him "who spake as never man spake," was not or any one land or period, but was fraught with blessing for all the world and for ll time. Men talk of doctrine and dispute about ritual, but it still is to Him that e come for the light and life that change our nature. Around His feet we gather o learn of Him how to live the highest life possible to men on this earth. His odily presence is withdrawn, but He is with us still in our homes and in our purits. As He said, it was expedient that He go away, for otherwise the spiritual resence that was for all, would have been limited to a few.

From the Celebrated Painting by Fugel

"THE COMMON PEOPLE HEARD HIM GLADLY"

message of use to the men of later times. They are superseded and we listen to our own teachers who understand the conditions of modern life. But Christ's words live! This simple peasant in far-off Galilee has His reverent audiences to-day in every land. Statesmen and judges, soldiers and sailors, bankers and merchants, physicians and lawyers, mothers and fathers still look to Him for guidance, still treasure His words and find in them help and comfort in this changed world. He is their model, not in doing the things that He did, not in moving from place to place teaching and preaching, homeless and penniless, but in imbibing His spirit, adopting His principles and making His ideals the rules of their lives.

10. What is the best method of dealing with a church gossip, who, though well-meaning, is a persistent and seemingly hopeless provoker of disturbance and dissension, through the habit of tale-bearing and love of petty scandal?

QUESTIONS OF THE WEEK

1. What is the best definition of the true missionary spirit and what may be considered a "call?"

The true missionary spirit is present where the heart is overflowing with love and gratitude to the Saviour, is filled with faith in His Word, and is enriched with a personal experience of the blessings of religion. Such a heart abounds with love and pity for those who are not in Christ, and yearns to bring them into the happy condition which it enjoys itself. This irresistible love for souls, born of love for Christ, engenders the desire to go out and help bring others in—to throw out the life-line to the lost. Worldly sacrifice is not considered by one thus consecrated. All things are dross except the love of Jesus. Labor in His service is not a burden, but a delight. The "call" comes to such a one with unmistakable distinctness, when, burning for service, he looks out upon the world and sees its dying, Christless millions. He remembers the Great Commission, and, believing in his heart that he can be of greater service to the cause in the foreign field than at home, he gladly responds: "Here am I, Lord; take me." RICHARD VYSE.

2. Is it probable from the narrative, Judges 11: 34-40, that Jephthah really sacrificed his daughter, or merely kept her from marriage, in view of the provision, Levit. 27: 3-5?

Not a few Biblical scholars have labored, but probably in vain, to fix a sense on the words of the vow which should exclude the idea that a human sacrifice was either intended or might be its unintended result. The language in our version, however doubtless, expresses what was in Jephthah's mind when he made his rash vow, for he was a trans-Jordanic leader, and sunk too likely into semi-paganism, but whether he actually executed his vow admits of doubt. During the two months' interval (Judges 11: 37) he may have become instructed in the law, and ascertained that a dispensation in his case was practicable. "He did unto her his vow," it would seem, by consigning her to perpetual celibacy. The narrative is perhaps designedly ambiguous in order to guard against a light estimate of the obligation of vows. The "daughters" who went to lament her, verse 40, are not said to have lamented her death. The marginal reading "to talk with her" is well supported. The horrible conclusion, however, that she was slain by her father's hand, was held to by Origen, Josephus, many early Christian fathers, Kitto, etc. The other view, that she was doomed to perpetual seclusion, except for four days in a year, has been adopted by Grotius, Bishop Hall, Hales, Hengstenberg, and many other eminent writers. AMELIA HOYT.

3. Should none but consecrated men and women be admitted to membership in a church choir?

A momentous question and easily answered to any seeking soul in John 4: 24; Ephesians 5: 19-20; Colossians 3: 16-17. It seems strange, indeed, that this glaring sin so generally prevails in Protestant churches, encouraged by ministers who are supposed to know and follow their Bible, as God's revealed standard for faith and practise. We read that "the sacrifices and prayers of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord." Is the service of song an any less important act of worship? Many leading men of God in all the denominations have denounced the sad mummery, some of whom have passed to their account. Charles H. Spurgeon, Dr. A. J. Gordon, Dr. James H. Brookes, Stevenson Blackwood, George Muller, Sir William Dawson, D. L. Moody, Dr. E. W. Bullenger, Dr. A. T. Pierson and others deprecate "church music as a fine art simply as an affront to God, rather than an approach to him, for it assumes and presumes to set up an art standard in place of the beauty of holiness." Dr. Bullenger himself a musician, says: "Music is a curse as now used in our churches."
W. O. BUCHANAN.

We might with as little compunction of conscience exclude all who are not Christians from our church pews or from participating in congregational singing as refuse to admit them to the church choir on such a plea. Sacred songs, appropriately selected as by most ministers, are as a continuation of the sermon, or sentiments contained therein, and a powerful factor in the conversion of souls. Constant repetition by the unregenerated of these beautiful thoughts of consecrated men and women may be instrumental in working out their salvation. Sacred music, properly rendered, should be followed by all Christians in a worshipful spirit. Has any one ever frowned down upon "Marguerite," because the musician did not in reality "dread the dreary day" of separation? It is the music we should follow, not the man. Let us hope the music may win the man, if other means should fail.
J. H. MINER.

4. If a girl discovers that the man she loves is addicted to drink, and is sure that if she casts him off the good influence she wields will be lost, and he will probably go utterly to ruin, ought she to run the risk of marrying him in the hope of saving him?

Her action in rejecting or accepting him must depend wholly upon the degree in which he has become addicted to drink. Of the millions of men who drink, as it is termed, in moderation, by no means all are in probable danger of going to rum. The facts and experience of every person prove this. There is no reason whatever why a girl, because she may herself condemn moderate drinking, should refuse to marry a respectable and industrious man whom she loves, merely and solely because he is not a total abstainer. She should try to win him to her way of thinking, and most likely will succeed in doing so perhaps before marriage and more probably afterwards. If he is addicted to the use of liquor to excess, with a weak will and his success in life imperiled, she will certainly commit an act of useless folly in linking her fortunes with his, and which may involve her in his ultimate ruin. For, if he has not the will and desire to reform before marriage, the loss of her influence is not material. If he will not reform because of her influence and his love for her before marriage, he will not do so later when expectation and hope are replaced by possession and he has nothing but her entreaties to strengthen his weak and vacillating judgment.
H. C. UNDERHILL.

5. What are the most cogent reasons to be advanced in support of woman's right to preach and teach in spiritual affairs?

Man needs woman's help for, to quote a homely maxim, "two heads are better than one," and this not only in household, but in affairs of church and state. True, woman, after the fall, was placed in subjection to man as a penalty for her sin. But that ban was not meant to endure for indefinite millenniums, any more than the curse pronounced on Canaan's race. It would seem to have run its course, and no one is under obligation to perpetuate it. The church needs a variety of gifts, needs the gifts and talents peculiar to woman, as well as those of man. Most cogent argument of all is this, that the Spirit's call to prophesy (Acts 2: 18) when heard in the hearts of the "hand maidens" of the Lord is to be obeyed as implicitly as when its sacred summoning is heard by the other servants of the Lord. AMELIA HOYT.

6. In view of Christ's acceptance of invitations from publicans and sinners, should the Christian accept an invitation to a party at which he knows there will be much drinking of intoxicants, playing at cards and other amusements in which he cannot consistently indulge?

If a Christian is invited to a pleasure party where he is sure that he can neither profit himself nor be of any spiritual help to others, he ought not to accept. But if he feels that by his presence at the party and by his abstinence from sinful practices he can exercise an influence for the better upon others present, and if he is morally certain of an opportunity to reprove evil indulgences and to testify in behalf of Christ, then it becomes his duty to accept. Christ surely did not accept the invitation of publicans and sinners in order to put himself on a level with them in their practises, but rather to have an opportunity to tell them of the better way. Why may not the disciple follow the Master's example?
G. A. HAURY.

7. What is the origin of the fable concerning "the man in the moon?"

Perhaps the oldest popular notion, found among various nations, is that the "man in the moon" is the Jew who picked up a bundle of sticks on the Sabbath (Num. 15: 32-36). Dante calls the moon-man Cain, and makes the "bush of thorns" emblematic of the curse, "Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee."

The Teutonic legend is that the curse pronounced upon the Sabbath-breaker was, "As you regarded not 'Sunday' on earth, you shall keep a perpetual 'Moonday' in heaven." According to ancient Sanskrit fable, the "man" is a hare, while among the Jews there is a Talmudic story that Jacob's face is visible. Of course, the real "man in the moon" is the shadows cast by lunar mountains.
G. E. KRAUTH.

8. Should a Christian attend a church in which the sermons are helpful to him when he does not agree with the creed of the church, and there is a church accessible with the creed of which he does agree, but in which the sermons are dull and lifeless?

Many a sermon has been found "dull and lifeless" because of the indifference or lack of spiritual interest too often found in the listeners. But setting this aside, and taking that the sermons are really dull and lifeless, that is, not filled with that enthusiasm which every true minister of the Gospel should have, I, for my part, would go where the sermons were helpful to me, even if I did not agree with the creed. For there could not be such a vast difference in the two creeds, or the advocate of the opposite creed could not preach a helpful sermon, at least, not by following the creed of the church. Do not all churches of all creeds have for their object a purer, higher life; a life in Christ, the Son of God, and an eternal reward—heaven? On these paramount points all agree, and the minor differences, pertaining to modes of worship, etc., should not form such a barrier as to keep a person from going where he can derive the most good. MAY E. THOLKE.

9. Does a girl, in adopting a business career, sacrifice more than she gains?

If a girl be of strong character, sterling qualities, she will gain far more than she sacrifices. Because of her intercourse with men on a business—not social—plane, while losing many of her former ideas as to man's chivalry, strength of character, superior abilities, etc., she will become stronger, not weaker; more self-reliant, but not assertive; more just, not critical; more distinctly womanly, not more masculine. If she views life from the right view-point, performs her duties faithfully and well, all the good qualities will be cultivated and amplified, many weaknesses eliminated because of competition with men. If she is naturally weak, hypersusceptible to her surroundings, she will lose much, gaining little. But home is, and always will be, her rightful sphere, the domain God intended her to occupy. The gentler side of her is here developed or drawn out; in following a business career it is forced out, though she is meantime growing stronger. On the whole, the average girl is improved, if permitted a few years of business life.
LOUISE A. JACOBS.

10. Name a metaphor which is used to symbolize the body, the church, the grave and heaven, and quote the passages in which it is so used?

House is a metaphor used to symbolize the body, the church, the grave and heaven in the following passages of Scripture, viz.: 1. The body. Job 4: 19. "Them that dwell in houses of clay"; II. Corinthians 5: 1, "For we know that if the earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2. The church. Psalm 26: 8, "Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house: the place where thy honor dwelleth"; also Psalm 84: 10, "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than dwell in the tents of sin"; I. Tim. 3: 15, "The house of God which is the church." 3. The grave. Job 30: 23, "For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house appointed for all living." 4. Heaven. Psalm 23: 6, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever"; also John 14: 2, "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. HEPPIE W. HAMILTON.

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS

Reader, Philadelphia. What is the origin of the heathen deities? How did they receive the names and attributes ascribed to them by those who worshiped them?

For all information on the subject, consult the Manual of Mythology, The World's Religions, McClintock & Strong's Biblical Encyclopedia, or any good encyclopedia in a public library. The subject cannot be treated in our brief space.

F. B., Bogard, Mo. Is it reasonable to expect that the making of gold from baser metal will ever be successful?

No, it is not. Transmutation is a delusion, which has had its blind followers for centuries, though perhaps they are fewer now than ever, since the world grows more enlightened.

Reader, Midway, Va. When and how did the use of the veil for women originate?

It originated in the East, where, until today, it is an essential part of female costume, especially among Mohammedans, the Koran forbidding women to appear unveiled, except in the presence of their nearest relatives. The veil was used as a sign of modesty, a badge of subjection, or as both in one.

E. M. B., Milford, Mass. Is it ever right to tell a lie, even to save your own life or the life of another?

This question has already been very fully discussed in THE MAIL-BAG. We would advise you to procure a copy of the little book on the subject by Dr. Trumbull, Philadelphia.

Inquirer, Dayton, O. What is the meaning of the words "Orphan Stone?" Is there such a stone?

It is a name once popularly given to the opal, which was regarded as a most unlucky gem. The saying common in mediaeval days was that it was made out of orphans' eyes. A fourteenth century writer called the stone "cattavissimo"—a bringer of ill luck. The superstition is, of course, a silly one, without foundation.

Pendleton, Oreg. What is the origin of the legend of Mount Pilatus?

The legend is of monkish origin and declares that Pilate, having committed suicide in prison at Rome, his body was cast into the Tiber, but as storms arose the Romans took it up and sent it to Vienna where it was thrown into the Rhone. The same phenomenon followed and it was then sent to Losania (Lucerne) where it lies sunk in a pool girt round by great mountains, the one which overhangs the pool then receiving the name Pilatus.

B. K., Waterloo, Ind. Do you think our Saviour would count it anything against us if we labor for others, or do little things which are necessary for us to do in order to keep things running on the Sabbath days?

Only such as can properly be classed as works of necessity and of mercy are justifiable on the Sabbath. What we do for others, if for pity or compassion, may be included in this category, and what is absolutely needed in the line of imperative duty or in order to avert human or brute suffering, or to avoid disaster, may properly come under the same category. This excludes all ordinary work. The question is one which should always be applied to and decided by the individual conscience.

EMPEROR WILLIAM DESCRIBED AS A RULER OF TREMENDOUS EARNESTNESS AND ENERGY AND UNUSUALLY FOND OF TRAVEL—GERMAN ART AND MUSIC

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NOT a beggar in Berlin, not a beggar in Dresden, not a beggar in Germany—as far as we have been able to see. In other European countries, the beggar is a familiar object. Hat in hand, eyes upturned, garments in rags, and an attitude indicating has long been taken. His father and other were paupers. Pedigree of rags. Heritance of want. Squalor of centuries personated. But in Germany, neither the door of churches, nor at the gate railroad stations, nor on the street are you asked for alms. What is the reason? The German nation has no superior among nations in prosperity. The people have enough to eat, and enough to wear, and enough to shelter them. The harvest-fields which we see through the car-window declare that this year a wealthy crop will be added to the national resources. Cleanliness, another sign of prosperity, is everywhere evident. Dirt is always poor. Plenty of water in Germany, wisely distributed, and everywhere used. Midsummer, and yet not a malodor afloat. Berlin as healthy in August as in January. Only two cases of intoxication have we seen in all the empire. German beer is not as bad as American whiskey. No doubt there are poverty and suffering, but we do not know where to find them.

Germany's religion has much to do with her prosperity. As the most revered name in St. Petersburg is Peter the Great, and there are shown the houses where he lived, and the axes with which he cut, and the cups out of which he drank, and the staff with which he walked, and the boats which he built, and the pens with which he wrote, and the beds on which he slept, and the crown which he wore, and the throne on which he sat, so in Germany the great name is Martin Luther, and we are taken to the chairs in the window of Wittenberg, where he talked with his wife, and the door of the church on which he hammered the Theses, and the pulpit where he preached, and the mugs out of which he drank before apollinaris water was found, and the tomb where near by that of Philip Melanchthon he sleeps the long sleep, and the statues in all the great cities where he stands with the Bible in hand, and with lips of marble or bronze is still preaching the Gospel with which he shook the earth, and proclaiming a religious emancipation which will yet give all nations the right to worship God in their own way. Luther is still the mightiest religious power in Germany.

Likewise the long reign of Kaiser William I. was a salutary reign. He chose for his winter and summer residence the plainest and simplest of his palaces, leaving for the inspection of tourists the royal palace, where Frederick the Great entertained Voltaire in vast rooms amid painting and statuary, and chuckling together over what they considered the joke of all time, the Christian religion, and also forsaking the palace at Potsdam, its walls encrusted with precious stones, and august with masterpieces, the stupendous structure built at the close of the seven years' war to prove that the national resources were not exhausted. The two palaces occupied by Kaiser William, according to the season, look like prosperous homes, but completely unpretentious. You are led through his late residence in Berlin, admiring its simplicity, and through his study, where he sat with Bismarck, and drafted plans for the national welfare, and put down the foundation of an empire which I think will last as long as the sun and moon endure. For the history of almost every nation it requires pen and sword closely united. That which was achieved by Thomas Jefferson's pen and George Washington's sword, and Alexander Hamilton's financial genius for institutions in America, William I. and Von Moltke and Bismarck achieved for Germany.

The present Emperor has enlisted the hearts of all his people. While many criticize his pronunciamentos and do not like this, or do not like that, William II. will hand down to his son a mightier sceptre than that which he received from the dying hand of his father, Emperor Frederick, who reigned only ninety-three days, and which his grandfather wielded twenty-seven years. German blood has iron in it, and the German government will last long after frivolous France and cruel Spain have again and again changed from republicanism to monarchy, and from monarchy back to republicanism. The present Emperor is ubiquitous; now laying the corner-stone of a church, now unveiling a monument, now launching a ship, now reviewing a regiment, now in one city and now in another. At a Punch-and-Judy show, some time ago, the performer gave what he considered the characteristics of the three Emperors who reigned within four months over Germany, Kaiser William, Frederick and William II. The man of the show said: "Kaiser William will be remembered by his saying, 'I have no time to be weary.' Emperor Frederick had for characteristic utterance, 'It is well to suffer without complaining.' The present Emperor will be known for his familiar saying, 'Augusta! pack the trunks.'" For this disrespect the showman was two months imprisoned. After he had served his time in jail and had come out, he continued his show, but with the following change of remark: "Kaiser William will be remembered by his saying, 'I have no time to be weary.' Emperor Frederick by his saying, 'It is well to suffer without complaining.' But I am not permitted to say what is the characteristic saying of the present Emperor." Then the audience supplied the lacking information by shouting, "Augusta! pack the trunks."

But Emperor William loses nothing through this facetiousness. There is an earnest side to his nature which all recognize. He preached a sermon on his yacht a few days ago, a mere extract going through the press, but my learned and genial friend, Rev. Dr. Dickey, pastor of the American church in Berlin, for whom I preached Sabbath before last, has translated the Emperor's sermon, which must have taken three-quarters of an hour in delivery, and is very forceful and brilliant. He is the only emperor I ever heard of who preached, although King David provided texts for a great many sermons, but why not kings and emperors take the pulpit?

But I am most impressed with the fact that Germany is the home of pictures and music. You walk through the palaces at Berlin and Potsdam with their glorified walls, and the galleries at Dresden, containing the best work of the great masters dead and living, and you study until you are bewildered. But I care not whether you visit the room in Dresden Gallery containing the "Sistine Madonna" first or last, you will come again and again to look at it. It is a picture from which you never get away. That face of Mary contains so much of motherly pang, and expectation, such shadows of apprehension and such light of victory, such eyes as never before or since looked out from any other canvas, tenderness and strength and love and hope: eyes suggestive of bitter memories and holy ambitions, eyes that contain the story of cold manger in Bethlehem caravansary, and yet of realization that she held in her arms the Redeemer of Nations: the far-away look, as though she saw what thirty-two years after would occur of abuse and torture to the Divine Boy. The curve of the mother's lip, the slight inflation of the nostril, the rounding of the chin, the poise of the neck, the harmony of all the features make one think the work was divinely inspired, for I suppose painter's pencil may be inspired, as well as author's pen, and there is such a thing as prophetic and apostolic work in colors on canvas as well as prophetic and apostolic work in ink on parchment. The Holy Child is a healthy child, with foot that might bound the play-ground before it was spiked to the cross. His hair dishevelled as a boy's hair is apt to be. He will pick wild flowers in the field, and cause his mother some anxieties by his climbing the rocks, and from the hill back of Nazareth will watch the sunset. Maternity and infancy nowhere else were ever so well presented. Some of the colors, for expressiveness, seem a mixture of tears and blood. There is on the canvas enough light for a morning, and enough shadows for a night. She holds the child not with too tight a pressure, as if she would not give him up, for she will have to give him up, nor with too little grasp as though there were anything lacking in affection. She seems by her manner to say "Here is the matchless child for which the ages have waited. God gave him to me, I gave him to the world." The child—how strong he is! Prophetic of the fact that he will yet be able to carry a world on his shoulder, the forehead by its shape implying that he knew already the majesty of the mission on which he had entered the world, yet a thorough child, and not prematurely old, a child's eye, a child's arm, a child's foot, an infant handed out of the eternities, the most precious gift that heaven ever lowered or the earth ever took. All the great painters of the German school and the Italian school and the Dutch school, and the French school and the English school have made at least one attempt in colors to tell the story of Mary and the Child, and there may be greater artists now in the cradle than any who have yet touched easel with pencil, but the probability is that in the last day of the world's existence if a group of artists discuss the comparative merits of those who have attempted to show the world the Infant Christ, that group of artists will agree that the greatest Madonna of all time is the "Sistine Madonna," by Raphael, in the gallery at Dresden.

Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Isaiah 7: 20: . . . In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the King of Assyria.

THE Bible is the boldest book ever written. There are no similitudes in Ossian or the Iliad or the Odyssey so daring. Its imagery sometimes seems on the verge of the reckless, but only seems so. The fact is that God would startle and arouse and propel men and nations. A tame and limping similitude would fail to accomplish the object. While there are times when he employs in the Bible the dove and the daybreak in the presentation of truth, we often find the iron chariot, the lightning, the earthquake, the spray, the sword, and, in my text, the razor. This keen-bladed instrument has advanced in usefulness with the ages. In Bible times and lands the beard remained uncut save in the seasons of mourning and humiliation, but the razor was always a suggestive symbol. David said of Doeg, his antagonist: "Thy tongue is a sharp razor working deceitfully;" that is, it pretends to clear the face, but is really used for deadly incision. In this striking text this weapon of the toilet appears under the following circumstances: Judea needed to have some of its prosperities cut off, and God sends against it three Assyrian kings—first Sennacherib, then Esarhaddon, and afterward Nebuchadnezzar. These that cut down the glory of Judea, are compared to so many sweeps of the razor across the face of the land. And these devastations were called a hired razor because God took the kings of Assyria, with whom he had no sympathy, to do the work, and paid them in palaces and spoils and annexations. These kings were hired to execute the divine behests. And now the text, which on its first reading may have seemed trivial or inapt, is charged with momentous import: "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the King of Assyria."

Well, if God's judgments are razors, we had better be careful how we use them on other people. In careful sheath these domestic weapons are put away, where no one by accident may touch them, and where the hands of children may not reach them. Such instruments must be carefully handled or not handled at all. But how recklessly some people wield the judgments of God! If a man meets with business misfortune, how many there are ready to cry out: "That is a judgment of God upon him because he was unscrupulous, or arrogant, or overreaching, or miserly. I thought he would get cut down! His stables emptied of all the fine bays and sorrels and grays that used to prance by his door. All his resources overthrown, and all that he prided himself on tumbled into demolition. Good for him!" Stop, my brother. Don't sling around too freely the judgments of God,

They are Razors.

Some of the most wicked business men succeed, and they live and die in prosperity, and some of the most honest and conscientious are driven into bankruptcy. Perhaps the unsuccessful man's manner was unfortunate, and he was not really as proud as he looked to be. Some of those who carry their head erect and look imperial are humble as a child, while many a man in seedy coat and slouch hat and unblacked shoes is as proud as Lucifer. You cannot tell by a man's look. Perhaps he was not unscrupulous in business, for there are two sides to every story, and everybody that accomplishes anything for himself or others gets industriously hed about. Perhaps his business misfortune was not a punishment, but the fatherly discipline to prepare him for heaven, and God may love him far more than he loves you, who can pay dollar for dollar, and are put down in the commercial catalogues as A1. Whom the Lord loveth he gives four hundred thousand dollars and lets die on embroidered pillows? No; whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. Better keep your hand off the Lord's razors, lest they cut and wound people that do not deserve it. If you want to shave off some of the bristling pride of your own heart, do so; but be very careful how you put on others. How I do dislike the behavior of those persons who, when people are unfortunate, say: "I told you so—served him right." The mote in their neighbor's eyes, so small that it takes a microscope to find it, gives them more trouble than the beam which obscures their own optics. With air sometimes supercilious and sometimes Pharisaical, and always blasphemous, they take the razor of divine judgment and sharpen it on the hone of their own hard hearts, and then go to work on men cutting mercilessly. They begin by soft expressions of sympathy and pity and half praise, and lather the victim all over before they put on the sharp edge.

Let us be careful how we shoot at others lest we take down the wrong one, remembering the servant of King William Rufus who shot at a deer, but the arrow glanced against a tree and killed the king. Instead of going out with shafts to pierce, and razors to cut, we had better imitate the friend of Richard Cœur de Lion. Richard, in the war of the Crusades, was captured and imprisoned, but none of his friends knew where, so his loyal friend went around the land from stronghold to stronghold, and sang at each window a snatch of song that Richard Cœur de Lion had taught him in other days. And one day coming before a jail where he suspected his king might be incarcerated, he sang two lines of song, and immediately King Richard responded from his cell with the other two lines, and so his whereabouts were discovered, and a successful movement was at once made for his liberation. So let us go up and down the world with the music of kind words and sympathetic hearts, serenading the unfortunate, and trying to get out of trouble men who had noble natures, but by unforeseen circumstances have been incarcerated, thus liberating kings. More hymn-book and less razor.

Spots on the Sun

Especially ought we to be apologetic and merciful toward those who, while they have great faults, have also great virtues. Some people are barren of virtues. No weeds verily, but no flowers. I must not be too much enraged at a nettle along the fence if it be in a field containing forty acres of ripe Michigan wheat. Some time ago naturalists told us there was on the sun a spot twenty thousand miles long, but from the brightness and warmth I concluded it was a good deal of a sun still. The sun can afford to have a very large spot upon it, though it be twenty thousand miles long; and I am very apologetic for those men who have great faults, while at the same time they have magnificent virtues.

Again, when I read in my text that the Lord shaves with the hired razor of Assyria the land of Judea, I think myself of the precision of God's providence. A razor swung the tenth part of an inch out of the right line means either failure or laceration, but God's dealings never slip, and they do not miss, by the thousandth part of an inch, the right direction. People talk as though things in this world were at loose ends. Cholera sweeps across Marseilles and Madrid and Palermo, and we watch anxiously. Will the epidemic sweep Europe and America? People say, "That will entirely depend on whether the inoculation is a successful experiment; that will depend entirely on quarantine regulations; that will depend on the early or late appearance of frost; that epidemic is pitched into the world, and it goes blundering across the continents, and it is all guess work and an appalling perhaps." I think, perhaps, that God had something to do with it, and that his mercy may have in some way protected us. It was right and a necessity that all caution should be used, but there has come enough rags from tatterdemalions, and hidden in these articles of transportation enough choleraic germs to have left by this time all the cities mourning in the cemeteries. I thank all the doctors and quarantines, but more than all, and first of all, and last of all, and all the time, I thank God. In all the six thousand years of the world's existence there has not one thing merely "happened so." God is not an anarchist, but a King, a Father.

When little Tad, the son of President Lincoln, died, all America sympathized with the sorrow in the White House. He used to rush into the room where the Cabinet was in session, and while the most eminent men of the land were discussing the questions of national existence. But the child had no care about those questions. Now God the Father, and God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost are in perpetual session in regard to this world and kindred worlds. Shall you, his child, rush in to criticise or arraign or condemn the divine government? No; the Cabinet of the Eternal Three can govern and will govern in the wisest and best way, and there never will be a mistake, and like shall cut that which ought to be cut, and avoid that which ought to be avoided. Precision to the very hairbreadth. Earthly time-pieces may get out of order, and strike wrong, saying it is one o'clock when it is two, or two when it is three. God's clock is always right, and when it is one it strikes one, and when it is twelve it strikes twelve, and the second hand is as accurate as the minute hand.

Further, my text tells us that God sometimes shaves nations: "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired." With one sharp sweep he went across Judea and down went its pride and its power. In 1861 God shaved the American nation. We had allowed to grow Sabbath desecration and oppression and blasphemy and fraud and impurity and all sorts of turpitude. The South had its sins, and the North its sins, and the East its sins, and the West its sins. We had been warned again and again, and we did not heed. At length the sword of war cut from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf, and from Atlantic seaboard to Pacific seaboard. The pride of the land, not the cowards, but the heroes, on both sides went down. And that which we took for the sword of war was the Lord's razor. In 1862, again, it went across the land. In 1863 again. In 1864 again. Then the sharp instrument was encased and put away. Never in the history of the ages was any land more thoroughly shaved than during those four years of civil combat, and, my brethren, if we do not quit some of our individual and national sins, the Lord will again take us in hand. He has within reach besides war: epidemics, droughts, deluges, plagues—grasshopper and locust—or our overtowering success may so far excite the jealousy of other lands that, under some pretext, the great nations may combine to put us down. Our nation, so easily approached on North and South and from both oceans, might have on hand at once more hostilities than were ever arrayed against any one power. I hope no such combination against us will ever be formed, but I want to show that, as Assyria was the hired razor against Judea, and Cyrus the hired razor against Babylon, and the Huns the hired razor against the Goths, there are now many razors that the Lord could hire if, because of our national sins, he should undertake to shave us. In 1870, Germany was the razor with which the Lord shaved France. Japan was the razor with which he shaved China, and America the razor with which he shaved arrogant, oppressive and Bible-hating Spain. But nations are to repent in a day. May a speedy and world-wide coming to God hinder on both sides the sc all nationai calamity. But do not let n as a nation, either by unrighteous law Washington, or bad lives among ou selves, defy the Almighty.

One would think that our national syn bol of the eagle might sometimes sugge another eagle—that which ancient Rom carried. In the talons of that eagle we clutched at one time Britain, France Spain, Italy, Dalmatia, Rhaetia, Nor cum, Pannonia, Mœsia, Dacia, Thrace Macedonia, Greece, Asia Minor, Syria Phœnicia, Palestine, Egypt, and all Nortl ern Africa, and all the islands of th Mediterranean, indeed, all the world tha was worth having, a hundred and twent millions of people under the wings of th one eagle. Where is she now? As Gibbon, the historian, in his prose poem the "Decline and Fall of The Roman Empire."

Ask her gigantic ruins, bemoaning thei sadness through the ages, the screec owl at windows out of which world-wid conquerors looked. Ask the day of judg ment, when her crowned debauchees Commodus and Pertinax, and Caligul and Diocletian, shall answer for thei infamy? As men and as nations let n repent, and have our trust in a pardonin God, rather than depend on former suc cesses for immunity!

But notice once more, and more tha all, in my text, that God is so kind an loving, that when it is necessary fo him to cut, he has to go to others for th sharp-edged weapon. "In the same da shall the Lord shave with a razor that i hired." God is love. God is pity. Go is help. God is shelter. God is rescue There are no sharp edges about him, n thrusting points, no instruments of lacera tion. If you want balm for wounds, h has that. If you want divine salve fo eyesight, he has that. But if there i sharp and cutting work to do, which re quires a razor, that he hires. God ha nothing about him that hurts, save whe dire necessity demands, and then he ha to go clear off to some one else to get th instrument.

King Henry II. of England crowne his son as king, and on the day of corona tion put on a servant's garb and waited he, the king, at the son's table, to th astonishment of all the princes. But w know of a more wondrous scene—th King of heaven and earth offering to pu on you, his child, the crown of life, an in the form of a servant waiting on yo with blessing. Extol that love, all paint ing, all sculpture, all music, all architect ure, all worship! In Dresdenian galler let Raphael hold him up as a child, an in Antwerp Cathedral let Rubens han him down from the cross as a martyr, an Handel make all his oratorio vibrat around that one chord—"He was wounde for our transgressions, bruised for ou iniquities." But not until all the redeeme get home, and from the countenances i all the galleries of the ransomed shall b revealed the wonders of redemption, shal either man or seraph or archangel know the height, and depth, and length an breadth of the love of God.

The Eternal Monument

At our national capital, a monument i honor of him who did more than any on to achieve our American independence was for scores of years in building, an most of us were discouraged and said i never would be completed. And how glad we all were when in the presence o the highest officials of the nation the work was done! But will the monument to him who died for the eternal liberation of the human race ever be completed? For age the work has been going up; evangelist and apostles and martyrs have been add ing to the heavenly pile, and every one o the millions of redeemed going up from earth has made to it contribution of glad ness, and weight of glory is swung to the top of other weight of glory, higher and higher as the centuries go by, higher and higher as the whole millenniums roll, sapphire on the top of jasper, sardonyx on the top of chalcedony, and chryso prasus above topaz, until far beneath shall be the walls and towers and domes of our earthly capitol, a monument forever and forever rising, and yet never done: "Unto him who hath loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests forever." Alleluiah, amen.

THIS very question has a note of doubt in it that should be at once and forever dispelled by the Prophet's wonderful account of the gathering in of the Gentile world to all the blessings of Christ's work. Summing the whole victory up, he declares, "Behold, these shall come from far, and lo, these from the west;" and as anticipating the world-wide persecution of the Chinese people in this nineteenth century, he mentions them only by name "and these from the land of Sinim"! So far from the Christian Church being discouraged at the present upheaval in Eastern Asia, we should remember that every so-called Christian nation has entered into light only through dark days of turmoil and blood-shed. Satan gives up no territory in hearts or nations without a struggle. And the more valuable the possession the greater the battle to retain it.

One discouraged friend said: "Your Christians are all killed, the missionaries driven out, your property destroyed, and the work of fifty years wiped out. What can you do now"? There is but one reply: Our native Christians are not all killed, and even if every Christian man, woman and child had witnessed unto death, it would still remain true that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." In that awful Sepoy rebellion in India, when brutality sated itself in blood of women and little children, as well as of men, when they cast the dead, the dying, and the living in one well, after a butchery so awful that the blood could be measured in depth, and golden ringlets of children were matted to the walls, then the cry went up: "We have wiped Christianity out of India," and all this in a land owned and ruled by a Christian sovereign. At such a time did the Church of Christ stand appalled, with the weak cry on its lips, "Our missionaries are dead, our property destroyed; what can we do"? Nay! But girding on anew her armor of faith, she sent more missionaries, more money than ever before, and from that day to this, the triumphant cry, "Victory to Jesus!" has been heard throughout India.

Upon what do we ground our assurance for China's salvation?

In the greatest heathen field of the world, this glorious work has come to a halt. The devoted bands of workers are, some of them, shut up in cities, or hid away in unknown places, and perhaps some of them are wearing the martyr's crown, while others have had to reluctantly turn their backs on the destroyed mission house, church and school, and worse still, leave the faithful, helpless, native Christians they had gathered in with such loving labor. All they have had to leave and return home to wait and pray. I am sure not one of them doubts that it is but for a little while when the remnant of the scattered flocks shall be gathered, when the school and hospital, college and church, pastor and Bible-woman shall again be at work throughout the land, with an awakened, repentant, and reinspired church at home bidding them labor with renewed courage and with the assurance that no more shall our returned missionaries, at home for rest, plead in great weariness, and so often in vain, for means to meet the need of work and workers. No more shall missionary societies be hampered in their world-wide beneficent work by empty treasuries. No longer shall we hear the cry of souls, so small that they would even limit Christ's work, "We have enough to do at home!" But instead we will join the late Dr. Behrends in the last prayer I heard him offer, and that in a missionary meeting, "O Lord! we sit here, the children of the wildest savages that ever roamed the forests of Europe. We thank thee that some one believed in foreign missions and sent missionaries to our ancestors. Help us to send the light to others."

KINDERGARTEN BABIES OF FOO-CHOW

There was the ring of victory in the meeting the other day of our Presbyterian friends, when, looking the situation squarely in the face, they declared, "We will do more than ever in China!" That, I believe, will be the spirit of every Protestant church, missionary society and worker. God helping us, we are ready for greater work.

In the Hwa-Sang massacre in the Foo-Chow Church of England mission, six young women, and a father and mother, with three of their children, in one short hour received martyrs' crowns. Two of the young women, Nellie and Topsy Saunders, were the only children of a widowed mother. When the dreadful tidings reached that mother by cable, she said, "Many will take their places," and swiftly were her words verified, for almost as quickly as steamer could bring them, thirty-two young women were on the field to take the places of the six translated, and four families in the place of the one nearly blotted out, and the white-haired, widowed mother herself hastened to take the place of her daughters.

In the presence of such costly giving and devoted service, of the faith of missionaries with generations of Christians back of them, yea and of poor, persecuted natives with no generations of Christians back of them, yet who have stood faithful unto death during these dreadful weeks that have just passed, shall we who are safe at home lose faith and heart? Let the answer come from those who have given their lives for the truth, from that brave native brother at Tung Chino, who took 2,000 stripes on his back rather than deny his Lord; from another who died on his knees praying; from the dear old man who, when told that they would spare his life and house if he would give up the "Jesus doctrine," replied, "I am an old man; take my life, and if you burn my house, I have one far more beautiful in heaven." Shall we speak of such a people as "not worth saving?" Yet they are of the very same people as the "Boxers." What maketh them to differ? The knowledge of and thereby the saving power of Christ.

Have we done our whole duty toward this great Chinese people? Are we in any degree responsible for the cloud of ignorance and superstition and fear that rests upon the mass of that people? Satan has done his utmost to prejudice them against us. Christian missions have been brought into contempt by the Roman Catholic hierarchy in China demanding for themselves official rank and position, which has led to gross oppression of the people and angered them and the government beyond endurance. Those who know all the factors that have worked persistently these many years to incense the Chinese Government and people, only wonder that this rebellion has been so long delayed. What shall the near future bring? If the great powers concede China's right to her own country and independence and urge upon her a reform Chinese—not a Manchu—Government, the Protestant nations of the world standing by her in establishing such, and an open door for the world's commerce, and the greater open door for the world's Christ, with all ecclesiastical civil officials entirely abolished, with such an expurgation and rehabiliment, a speedy end of strife may come, and Christ's kingdom will be hastened in its world-wide sway. But if any of the nations, in greed and injustice, insist upon dismemberment of China, then indeed seems probable a world-wide conflagration that will drive us all to our knees. Oh, that the Church of Christ may be in readiness to suffer or to serve!

Philadelphia's Tent Revival

ALTHOUGH it had been intended to close the summer revival movement under canvas in Philadelphia on August 31, the closing has been deferred in response to a widespread appeal from different sections of the city. As the weather continues warm, the work will go on till further notice. Conversions are reported from all the tents. At Tent No. 2, at Fortieth Street and Wyalusing avenue, West Philadelphia, meetings began on August 26, Rev. John H. Elliott, Dutch Reformed Church of New York, being the speaker. There has not been a single night since the beginning with less than three professed conversions, and on a recent Friday there were twelve who made definite profession of faith. Last week had a total attendance of 4,358, with sixty professed conversions. In Tent No. 6, in the Kensington district, at the close of the meeting, it is not unusual to see numbers of men coming up around the platform and, falling on their knees on the floor of the tent, pray to God for mercy. At Tent No. 7, in the Manayunk section, many of the oldest residents are being brought to a definite decision.

There have been a number of very interesting incidents in connection with the work which have been related by the workers, especially that of an entire household of eight members, most of whom were at one time members of different evangelical churches, but who have neglected religion of late years. They have all recently renewed their covenant vows.

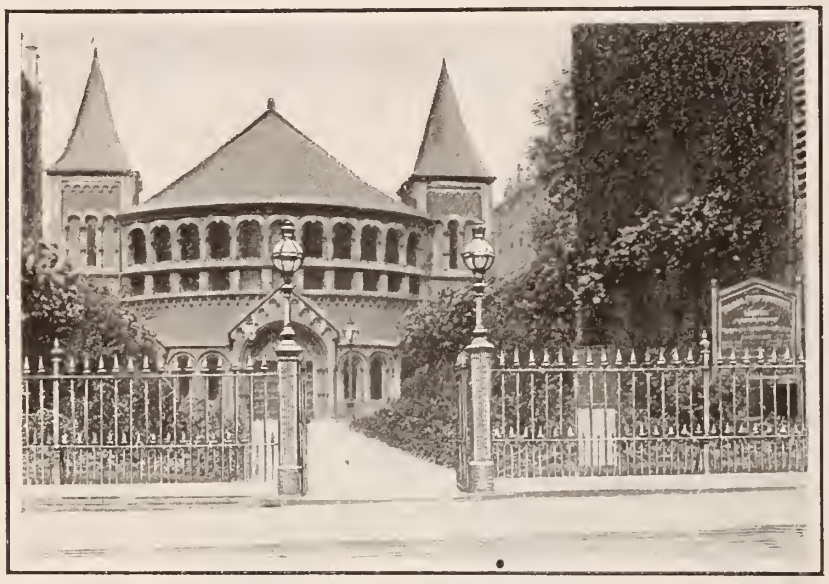
RELIGIOUS LONDON

AN AMERICAN TRAVELER'S VISIT TO NOTABLE INSTITUTIONS IN THE BRITISH METROPOLIS

DURING our stay in London this summer, we were impressed as never before with the immensity of the population of this enormous city. Included in the bounds of the municipality and not reckoning the large districts which bear the same relation to London that Jersey City and Hoboken bear to New York, there are over four and a half million persons. We naturally inquired what was being done to reach so vast a multitude with the Gospel of Christ. We found that the churches were fully alive to the great opportunity and though contending with enormous difficulties, were earnestly endeavoring, in various ways, to bring the Gospel into the lives of those who are outside the churches. One of the latest innovations is a series of tents girdling the whole city. Each of the tents holds from a thousand to eighteen hundred persons and those that we visited were all comfortably full. Some excellent speakers are engaged and go from one tent to another, care being taken to choose in the respective localities speakers best adapted to them. Among those who are working in the tents are Henry Varley, Leonard Weaver, Charles Cook, Charles Inglis, W. R. Lane, Wm. Noble, the temperance evangelist, and the Weaver brothers. Mr. Van de Venter the singer and children's evangelist also is doing good work. The management is vested in a committee representing the free churches, that is, all the evangelical churches outside of the Protestant Episcopal, which in England being an established church does not cooperate with other churches so fully as here.



EXTERIOR OF THE TALBOT TABERNACLE

Besides the tent work we found societies innumerable for reaching special classes, such as policemen, letter-carriers, cab-drivers, sailors etc. Tract Societies also are doing good work in the circulation of religious literature. Akin to this is the Young Men's Christian Association of which Sir George Williams, though past the three score years and ten, is still the active, energetic president. The Young Women's Christian Association under the management of the Hon. Emily Kinnaird, is also a vigorous, useful agency.

The two institutions which interested us most deeply were Dr. Barnardo's work for street waifs and Mr. Charrington's great Mission Hall in East London. No American Christian visitor to the British metropolis should miss seeing both these institutions. We made Dr. Barnardo's acquaintance at a great meeting held in the Talbot Tabernacle, of which Rev. Frank H. White is pastor. He is a remarkable man, singularly modest and unassuming. Considering the immense work that he has done and the tremendous responsibility resting upon him, Dr. Barnardo is one of the most wonderful men I have met. He is an Irishman, a little over fifty years of age. His genial manner and his merry, light-hearted disposition make one forget his years. As he sits on the back of a bench with his feet on the seat chatting about his boys he seems a lad himself with his boyish freshness and love of fun. He has sent thousands of boys into Canadian homes, and has over five thousand children on his hands now whom he is supporting and educating, yet it would puzzle him to tell where next week's supplies are coming from. But the supplies have come hitherto as they were needed, and he has no worrying anxiety about the future. He was led into the work without any premeditation. He went up to London in the early sixties to study medicine, so that he might go out as a medical missionary to China. In the evenings, after finishing his studies for the day, he went into the London slums to see if in any place a good Samaritan was needed. Every night some deed of kindness was done, sometimes through his medical knowledge, sometimes by the ordinary good will of a young, energetic Christian.

One of his favorite haunts was a huge lodging house, very popular among newsboys. He used to like to go there and talk with those who had been able to scrape together the pennies that would purchase a night's rest. In the winter, there were many boys who found rest and warmth there through pennies that came out of the medical student's pocket. It was a real pleasure to him to sit among them listening to their descriptions of their daily life and giving them good advice. One night he found one of his young friends very sick. He must go to a hospital, said Dr. Barnardo. But he had been in the lodging for two days and nights already, being too weak to move, and there was a bill against him for board. The virago who kept the lodging-house insisted on payment before the boy was removed, and she put an attachment on the only property he had—the rags that by courtesy might be called clothes. Dr. Barnardo was in his usual impecunious condition and could not pay the bill; but he was resolved the boy's life should be saved if possible. Taking off his overcoat, he wrapped it around the boy's naked body and bore him off in his arms to the hospital. After the boy's recovery Dr. Barnardo took charge of him. That was the beginning of this great work to which Dr. Barnardo has given his life. He has now Boys' Homes, Girls' Homes, Industrial Training Schools, Infirmaries, Orphan Homes, Deaconess Homes and a host of other agencies for the care of children who, left on the streets, would probably have become criminals. Over thirty years he has been engaged in this work, which has extended gradually, and has done an indescribable amount o good. It was a wonderful experience t go through these institutions, which ar worth a journey across the Atlantic to se Nor is this the only work in London dis tinctively for children. The Children

REV. WM. H. STENTIFORD

Evangelization Society, under the leader ship of Rev. W. H. Stentiford, is als doing great good.

The other marvelous institution I men tioned above—Mr. F. N. Charrington Assembly Hall—is also unique and deepl interesting. The name of Charrington i very familiar to every Londoner. Th Charrington beer is drunk in all the sa loons of the city. The saloon-keeper ca do nothing better to attract customer than stick up a notice that he sells Char rington's beer. But Mr. Fred Charring ton is not a partner in that wealthy firn He was sent to learn the brewing busines and was working hard to fit himself fo the position of head of the house whe his health broke down and the docto ordered him a trip abroad. He speedil recovered and was traveling homewar when he made the acquaintance of Dr W. S. Rainsford, now rector of St George's Church, New York. Dr. Rains ford took a great liking to the youn brewer and they became good friends Their talk often turned on religious topic and eventually young Charrington wa converted. He began at once to loo around for some Christian work to do i his leisure hours. One night he saw drunken man emerge from a saloon, an speak to a woman, evidently his wife The woman quailed before the drunke brute, who knocked her down. Mr Charrington interfered for her protection In the row that ensued, his eye rested o his own father's name over the door o the saloon in which the man had go drunk. He went home with a new sub ject for thought, and the next day after night spent in prayer, he went to hi father and renounced all part and lot i the business that would have made him millionaire.

He secured a small room in which h conducted services every evening. Whe he could get some one else to take charg of the service he would go out and giv an address on some street corner in th East of London. Many people knev him, and the spectacle of a Charringto preaching temperance was considered good joke. But he persevered. Pasto Spurgeon, the Earl of Shaftesbury an other great and good men stood by him and his work grew. In 1883 the grea building known as the Assembly Hal was erected, which has now become lighthouse in the slums. All kinds o societies for the benefit of the poor hav their homes there, and religious service are held in it every evening the yea round. There is a regular corps of offi cers, under the leadership of Mr. Edwi H. Kerwin, who is the General Secre tary. I was present at a meeting held there to celebrate the thirtieth anniver sary of Mr. Charrington's entering o mission work. As I saw the gathering o over fifteen hundred persons who had al been converted in the Mission Hall an afterwards an assembly of four thousan to hear a Gospel address, I could not bu exclaim, "What hath God wrought?"

QUARTERLY REVIEW

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 30: | Golden Text, James 1: 22: "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

JAMES, in writing the Golden Text, and the International Lesson Committee in selecting it for use all around the world, at this time recognized that there are many professing Christians who are content to be "hearers only," spending their religious energy almost wholly in going to meetings, making religion a matter of ears and mouth, or at most of brain and heart, never getting it down into hands and feet. These neglected members we are joined to keep in mind in searching over the lessons of our summer quarter. Let every one for every two—for almost every one has some chum or yoke-fellow, and the plan of the seventy, of working two and two in whatever we do, is a good one—let every one, or every two, pick out some one thing at least in these lessons that they will do this week, for the glory of God and the good of men.

The King's Coronation When a dozen or more faces are photographed on one plate, it often happens that one strong face dominates all others and gives its likeness to the "composite photograph." So in the lessons of this quarter, the transfiguration culminates all, and from that mountain-top we may best review what preceded and followed. Here we see Christ as King standing between saints of heaven and earth, of Old Testament and New, in his journey from heaven to the cross, "the decease which he should accomplish," that was the theme of conversation at his coronation—a coronation not of selfishness, but of self-sacrifice. At his side stood representatives of the Law and the prophets, that had prepared his way; at his feet was his inner cabinet, Peter, James and John; below, battling with demoniacs, were the other apostles; beyond them, on one side of this mount of glory, were the Jews; on the other, the Gentiles—Christ being King and Saviour of both. Even such a meeting as that of the holy mount, in spite of Peter's request, was cut short to put its spiritual energy to use in saving that boy from the devil in the valley below. Who cannot find such a battle in which to use the spiritual knowledge and power received in these wonderful lessons about Him who was "manifested to destroy the works of the devil."

The King's Life with the Lowly Looking back to the first lesson of the quarter, we see Christ as the fisherman's friend, a relation beautifully pictured in the following extract from the story of "Fishin' Jimmy," who had been converted by hearing a fisherman preacher tell the story of this friend of fishermen:

"There wa'n't no sarm'n, not what I'd been used to think was the on'y true kind. There wa'n't no heads, no fustlys nor sec'ndlys, nor nothin'ly bruthrins, but the fust thing I knowed I was hearin' a story, an' 'twas a fishin' story. I was about some one—I hadn't the least idee then who 'twas, an' how much it all meant—some one that was dreffle fond o' fishin' and fishermen, some one that sot everythin' by the water, an' useter go along by the lakes an' ponds, an' sail on 'em, an' talk with the men that was fishin'. An' how the fishermen all asked him, an' asked his advice, an' done jest what he telled 'em about the likeliest places to fish; an' how they allers ketched more fer goin' with him; an' how when he was a-preachin' he wouldn't go into a big meetin'-house an' talk to rich folks all slicked up, but he'd jest go out in a fishin' boat, an' ask the men to move out a mite, an' he'd talk to the folks on shore, the fishin' folks, an' their wives, an' the boys an' gals playin' on the shore.

"An' then he telled us about the day when this preacher come along by the lake—a dreffle sightly place, this min'ster said; he'd stopped it hisself when he was trav'lin' in them countries — an' come acrost two men he knowed well; they was brothers, an' they was fishin'. An' he jest asked 'em in his pleasant-spoken, frien'ly way—there wa'n't never no such a drawin', takin', lovin' way with any one afore as this man had, the min'ster said—he first asked 'em to come along with him; an' they lay down their poles an' their lines an' everythin', an' jined him. An' then he come along a spell further, an' he sees two boys out with their ole father, an' they was settin' in a boat, an' fixin' up their tackle, an' he asked 'em if they'd jine him too, an' they jest dropped all their things, an' left the ole man with the boat an' the fish an' the bait, an' followed the preacher. I don't tell it very good. I've read it an' read it sence that; but I want to make ye see how it sounded to me, how I took it, as the min'ster telled it that summer day in Francony meetin'. Ye see I'd no idee who the story was about, the man put it so plain, in common kind of talk, without any come-to-passes an' whuffers an' thuffers, an' I never conceited 'twas a Bible narr'tive.

"An' so fust thing I knowed I says to myself 'That's the kind o' teacher I want. If I could come acrost a man like that, I'd jest foller him, too, through thick an' thin.' Well, I can't put the rest on it into talk very good; 'taint jest the kind o' thing to speak on 'fore folks, even such good friends as you. I aint the sort to go back on my word—fishermen aint, 'ye know—an' what I'd said to myself 'fore I knowed who I was bindin' myself to, I stuck to a'terwards when I knowed all about him. For 'taint for me to tell ye, who've got so much more larnin' than me, that there was a dreffle lot more to that story than the fishin' part. That lovin', givin' up, suff'rin', dyin' part, ye know it all yerself, an' I can't kinder say much on it, 'cept when I'm jest all by myself, or—'long o' him.

"That afternoon I took my ole Bible that I hadn't read much sence I growed up, an' I went out into the woods 'long the river, an' 'stid o' fishin', I jest sot down an' read that hull story. Now ye know it yerself by heart, an' ye've knowed it all yer born days, so ye can't begin to tell how new and astonishin' 'twas to me, an' how findin' so much fishin' in it kinder helped me understand an' bleeve it. Did j'ever think on it, reely? I tell ye, his r'liging's a fishin' r'liging all through. His friends was fishin' folks; his pulpit was a fishin' boat, or the shore of the lake; he loved the ponds an' streams; an' when his d'sciples went out fishin', if he didn't go hisself with 'em, he'd go a'ter 'em, walkin' on the water to cheer 'em up an' comfort 'em.

"It's an out-doors, woodsy, country story, besides bein' the heav'nliest one that was ever telled."

Who can fail to find a suggestion of something to do in this fishermen lesson? Let it prompt us to get off our religious stilts, and out of our forms, and into the confidence and fellowship of toilers at their tasks that we may tell them of Christ the Carpenter, who can rebuild their lives. We need not wait for power to walk the waves before going to save troubled, storm-tossed souls in his name. Wherever we go let our coming bring joy, because Christ is in us and shines through our faces, and prompts our hands to help and our feet to go about doing good.

The King's Mystic Bread of Life Roman emperors were wont to give their people "bread and games." These too profuse gifts did not promote energy but laziness. The Jews, after the feeding of the five thousand, thought Christ would be such a King, but he rather gives to the inner life the invisible bread of his own Spirit, the light that feeds the intellect, the love that feeds the heart, the enthusiasm that feeds the will.

> Open your heart as a flower to the light!
> Bloom and bear fruit in the glory of right!
> Be of his presence a perfume, a ray,
> Child of the morning, and heir of the day!
> —LUCY LARCOM.

Christian literature of the noblest type, the literature of power, that comes into life like an influence, is bread of life indeed, and we may feed into strength the noblest thoughts and sentiments of others by promoting the circulation of such literature. Has some book or article quickened you? Do not leave it idling on your shelves, but send it about doing good. Going two and two let a whole class or a whole Sabbath School give the bread of life to every home in the whole community.

No Aliens in Christ's Kingdom The story of the Syro-phœnician mother, whose daughter Christ healed in response to her prayer, prompts the question, "What more can any of us do for the foreigners—the mothers, the daughters, the men—that they may truly know the love of him who had no race prejudice, but loves every one as a brother?" Perhaps the foreigner you should help may be some orphan child in India that literally needs some of your "children's crumbs." Or perhaps the foreigner you should bring to Christ is in your own kitchen, a foreign missionary field very much neglected. Your "hired girl" is some mother's darling, somebody's sister, aye, God's daughter and the sister of Christ. Put yourself in her place and live the golden rule.

"FOLLOW ME AND I WILL MAKE YOU FISHERS OF MEN"

Citizenship in The Kingdom From the transfiguration outlook we have been looking back, but now we look from it forward and behold Christ, shortly after saving the demoniac boy, blessing little children, and teaching his disciples that the citizens of his new kingdom were not to be fierce warriors and proud lords, but of child-like simplicity, their characteristics to love, trust, obey.

THE MAISTER AND THE BAIRNS

The Maister sat in a wee cot hoose
Tae the Jordan's waters near,
An' the fisher fowk crushed and croodit roun'
The Maister's words tae hear.

An' even the bairns frae the near-han streets
Was mixin' in wi' the thrang
Laddies an' lassies wi' wee bare feet,
Jinkin' the crood amang.

An' ane o' the Twal' at the Maister's side
Rase up an' cried alood—
"Come, come, bairns, this is nae place far you.
Rin awa' hame oot o' the crood."

But the Maister said as they turned awa'
"Let the wee bairns come tae me!"
An' he gaithered them roun' him whar he sat,
An' he hfit ane one up on his knee.

Ay, he gathered them 'roun him where he sat,
An' strakit their curly hair.
An' he said tae the won'er'in fisher fowk
That croodit aroun' him there—

"Send nae the weans awa' frae me
But raither this lesson learn—
That nane 'll win at heaven's gett
That isna as pure as a bairn."

An' he that has ta'en us for kith and kin
Tho' a' Prince o' the Far Awa',
Gaithered the wee ones in his airms
And blessed them ane an' a'.

Who can fail to see what this lesson should prompt us to do? It is nothing less than to bring one child and another and another to Jesus as the children's Saviour. A well-taught child of three and five is sometimes able to make a definite choice of Christ, the first choice right as in the case of Samuel and Jeremiah and John the Baptist and Timothy. But surely at eight when a child is by law recognized as capable of being a criminal, it is capable of choosing Christ instead, having perhaps never been less than a Christian, because having never rejected Christ. Like Peter, many are holding the children back, to whom the child's version of the Saviour's rebuke is pertinent: "Suffer the children to come unto me, and don't any of you stop them from one and all to come."

Forgiving in Place of Fighting Most kings have taught their followers to fight, but Jesus taught his to forgive, even as they hoped to be forgiven. Fighting has been a great failure. It proves nothing only who is strongest. The only real conquest of an enemy is to make him a friend. In every department of life there are things people are trying to do at the hardest by force that might be done easier and better by kindness. Even in dollars and cents "Brotherhood in business" is a better motto than the heartless proverb, "Business is business." The employers who treat their workmen as men and brothers are least afflicted with strikes and lockouts and skimped work and revengeful dynamite. The sun will make a man take off his overcoat quicker than the north wind. Let us forgive not alone that we may be forgiven, but also that we may get a load of soul-sinking hate off our own hearts, and may save our foe by setting before him the spirit of the cross. Is there not something for some of us to do in reconciling friends who have quarreled, and whose souls are loaded with grudges that will sink them if not thrown off. They cannot truly pray while a grudge rises like a wall between them and the forgiving Christ, who said, "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar; first be reconciled to thy brother and then come and offer thy gift."

Light Bearers The story of Christ as the light of the world healing the blind man may be used, first, to teach others how to come to Christ for healing of the soul. A lady teacher tells this story: "A young lady from my Bible class came to my study a few days since with the earnest inquiry, 'How shall I find the Lord? I don't understand how to find him. Where shall I go?'

"'My dear Mary,' I replied, 'he is here in this room, tenderly waiting to receive you.' As she sat weeping, this passage came to mind, which I repeated at once: 'As many as touched him, were made perfectly whole.' She raised her head eagerly, and said, 'Is that all?' and with beaming face extended her hands, as if to embrace him, crying, 'My Saviour, my dear Saviour!'"

Think you not there was joy among the angels when Jesus proclaimed, as he did on earth, "Some one hath touched me!"—and wrote with his own hand the name of another Mary in the Book of Life?

Wayside Work Of the next three lessons we have already noted the suggestion of the lesson of the seventy sent forth, that we should work in pairs for counsel and courage. The lessons of the Good Shepherd and the Samaritan both point to wayside work. Let us remember we make the journey of life but once, and so let us not pass by on the other side any opportunity to help another, for that opportunity can never be recalled. Like faithful under-shepherds, let us watch over the lambs that are in daily peril of thieves and robbers, who would rob them of innocence. Let us bring every soul of man we can reach into the safe sheep-fold, which is the heart of God, whose door is the Cross.

The King's Warnings. The two last lessons of the quarter are about the two chief perils that threaten the citizens of God's kingdom, Greed and Appetite. The rich man who forgets his soul and God and heaven, and lives a life of selfish luxury, Christ says, is a fool. Like Esau, he has sold a great future for a transient feast. This fool has said by his materialism of self indulgence, "There is no God." He has acted as if he had no soul and no hereafter. But God cries in his ears, "This night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall these things be?" Not a dollar of his wealth could he carry. "How much did he leave?" they said. And a wise one answered, "He left all he had." Let us lay up our treasure in heaven.

Kindred to this victim of luxury was the servant who, in the temperance lesson on watchfulness, said, "My lord delayeth his coming, and began to drink and be drunken" when he should have been watching and working, preparing for his lord's coming. To such also Christ comes suddenly in judgment. What Christ-like man would take the liquor-dealer's gold, with all the weight of tears and blood and the eternity of remorse that goes with it. And what shall we do about this? If we are really awake, that is, alert, we shall find near our own door some temperance work to do of prevention or cure.

DO YOUR BEST

THE late Williard Parker, the eminent surgeon, had a case of goitre brought to him for treatment. Those who have traveled in Switzerland know of the awful swelling that is called the goitre. The patient brought to Dr. Parker was a millionaire many times over, and they wanted the doctor to perform the surgery and to warrant the safety of the patient and his recovery, and they said they would give him a million dollars if he would warrant the undertaking. "Oh," said the doctor, "I cannot warrant anything, but I will do the best I can!" My friend said to Dr. Parker, "How did you feel when you were about to undertake that surgery?" "Well," said he, "my hand trembled dreadfully, because, you know, I am an old man now; my hand trembled dreadfully; but just as soon as the instrument touched the delicate place my nerves were strong as steel, and without any excitement I went right through the successful operation, and with no anxieties; as soon as I began my hand was firm."

And we may have a great many anxieties about what is to come in life, and we may tremble about the great responsibility, but when we come up to the right place God will steady our hand; he will take hold of us, he will give us courage, and without any perturbation we will go right through.

A parishioner asked a clergyman why the congregation had filled up and why the church was now so prosperous above what it had ever been before. "Well," said the clergyman, "I will tell you the secret. I have always done my best." And in whatever occupation or profession God has put you, do your best; whether the world appreciates it or not, do your best—always do your best. Domitian, the Roman emperor, for one hour every day caught flies and killed them with his penknife; and there are people with imperial opportunity who set themselves to some insignificant business.

Oh, for something grand to do, and then concentrate all your energies of body, mind and soul upon that one thing, and nothing in earth or hell can stand before you.

OUR readers will be interested the following maxims or sayi of wise men who lived m years ago. Their suggesti prove that human nature l been substantially the same many ages, notwithstanding are taught to believe under term "evolution" that our bodies, a therefore our needs and ideas, have b marvelously revolutionized since the ginning. They show that the ideas the most enlightened men as to the vantages of virtue and the true purp of life have been substantially the sa during this long period.

The first extracts are from Gauta Buddha, who is supposed to have li about 540 B. C.:

Love one another, live in peace, cont your thoughts and passions, give up y desires.

Never in this world does hatred cease hatred. Hatred ceases by love.

The foolish follow after vanity while the w guard earnestness as their greatest treasure

He whose mind is subdued and perfec controlled is happy.

Watch your thoughts.

Control your tongue.

Overcome anger by love.

One may overcome a thousand thousa men in battle, but he who conquers hims alone is the greatest victor.

Be pure and live with the pure.

Regulate the mind, and the body will itself go right.

This is the greatest happiness to subd the selfish thought of I.

The next extract is from the sayings writings of Zoroaster, a Persian w flourished about 1000 B. C.:

Before his death, Zoroaster reduced l twenty-one books to three new and i mortal maxims;

Some of the sayings of Ptah-ho-te who is said to have flourished somewhe between 3000 and 5000 years B. C., a given below, and are taken from MSS. the British Museum. This book or man script is supposed to be the oldest in th world, and the writer appeals to the wri ings of ancients before him as authorit He was an Egyptian.

Boers in Flight

RECENT dispatches from South Africa indicate that the Boer resistance to British power is slowly succumbing. After abandoning the Boer capital, President Kruger made the seat of his government at Machadodorp, on the east of Pretoria. He evidently regarded that position as only temporary, for he did not take up a residence in the town, but made his home in the railroad cars in which he had traveled thither. Thence, on the approach of the British forces, he, with President Steyn, of the Orange Free State, removed to Lydenburg. General Buller followed and captured Lydenburg. The two Presidents are now said to have gone in a northeasterly direction, apparently intending, if too closely pressed, to escape into Portuguese territory. Meanwhile the Boer generals, Botha and De Wet, are harassing the British communications, tearing up the railroad tracks and occasionally capturing a trainload of provisions or ammunition. Their work is done chiefly in the South and West. The era of pitched battles appears to be over, and the Boer tactics have become of the guerilla character. Unless the British succeed in capturing President Kruger, the war may be indefinitely prolonged. It is reported that large numbers of the Boers have returned to their farms, and the bulk of the forces now in arms against the British are the Irish-Americans and the Dutch and German volunteers, who went to the help of the Boers in the early months of the struggle. It is difficult to see what gain can come to the country, or the Boers, by protracting the conflict. They cannot now hope to avert the annexation of the two republics; and if they must sue for peace, as seems inevitable, it would appear to be the course of wisdom to avoid irritating the power whose magnanimity is so essential to their future welfare.

Agree with thine adversary quickly whilst thou art in the way with him (Matt. 5:25).

Claimants Disappointed

The State Department at Washington has issued a notice that will cause disappointment to many persons. The notice states that the State Department and the United States Legation at the Hague have been flooded with inquiries from citizens about estates in Holland awaiting claimants. The writers have been informed that the Dutch government is holding estates in trust pending the production of the legal heirs. Some unscrupulous agents have been looking up in the country districts persons whose names indicate that they are of Dutch extraction, and have led them to believe that they are the heirs for whom search is being made. The Department gives a long list of names of estates about which inquiries have been made, and says that the Dutch government knows of no such estates nor has it any other estates in hand awaiting heirs. "Moreover, there being no office in the Netherlands for the record of wills, where investigation might be instituted, it devolves upon any person having any claim to an estate in that country to state where the testator died, and even then it should be borne in mind that the legislation of the Netherlands effectually and without appeal disposes of claims which were not proved prior to 1852." It is much to be wished that the persons to whom this notice will bring disappointment could be induced to seek that heavenly inheritance which is offered to all who seek it through Christ.

An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you (I. Peter 1:4).

A Test of Torpedo Practice

An interesting experiment was made off the coast of Newport, R. I., on Aug. 31. A United States tug, the Leyden, was first taken to the head of the bay and anchored. There its powerful searchlight was turned on and the bay was flooded with light from the station. The object was to ascertain whether a vessel so situated could be approached by a torpedo boat without detection and destroyed. Several boats put out for her, but were seen from the Leyden. The Holland, the famous disappearing boat, however, put out her lights and was sunk until almost entirely under water. She was then scarcely visible and succeeded in getting within a hundred and fifty feet of the Leyden without being detected. The experiment shows that with such a boat as the Holland, that can sail when almost or quite submerged, the mightiest battleship might be destroyed, while no danger was suspected. It is thus that souls are ruined. Those who trust in their own strength and are not perpetually vigilant are liable to fall before some insidious temptation.

He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool; but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered (Prov. 28:26).

A Royal Explorer

A cable despatch from Stockholm announces the arrival on that coast of the Duke of Abruzzi, who has been on an exploring expedition in the Arctic. He sailed from Christiania, Norway, in June of last year, to try to reach the North Pole. He has not been successful in that attempt, but he penetrated about twenty miles farther than any explorer has ever been before. Previously Nansen held the record, he having gone farther North than Lockhart the American explorer, by four degrees. The Duke's plan differed from Nansen's, which was to reach the Pole in his ship, the Fram. The Duke's plan was to go as far North in his ship, the Stella Polare, as he could, and then proceed in a straight line northward in sleds drawn by Esquimaux dogs. The steamer was left in latitude 80 degrees, and three parties started in sleds. The third party, led by Captain Cagni, alone made the record, the other two having been compelled to return. The third party was absent one hundred and four days. Its food gave out on the journey, and the explorers survived only by eating the dogs. The Duke's hands were frost-bitten, and two of his fingers were amputated. He is a cousin of the present King of Italy. His father was Amadeso, a son of Victor Emanuel I. It is seldom that a royal prince undertakes such work as exploration: when he does, he learns that his high birth and station give him no advantages over ordinary men. All his life long the duke will go maimed as the result of his expedition and will be a living illustration of the fact that nature has no respect for princes.

They are exalted for a little while, but are gone and brought low; they are taken out of the way as all other (Job 24:24).

Egyptian Relics

A discovery of great interest to antiquarians has been made at Abydos by explorers working under the superintendence of Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie. In exploring the ancient Egyptian city the workmen came upon a number of tombs which evidently belonged to a very early period. On opening them, articles were found which proved that the interments must have been made during the reigns of the first dynasty of the Pharaohs, long before Jacob and his sons went down to Egypt. It is believed that the date must be as far back as 4,700 years before Christ. One of the tombs was that of the fourth king of that dynasty. It contained among other objects a beautifully made receptacle for eye-paint. A box was also found filled with pottery, both the box and the pottery showing exquisite workmanship and artistic skill. The figures are deep red on a pink ground and represent fishes, gazelles, etc. At the present time it would be difficult for our most skilful workmen to produce anything quite so beautiful. Another discovery was a box of ivory made in the shape of two swans. This also was a receptacle for eye-paint. Besides these, a pair of copper tweezers and a copper harpoon show that at that early period the Egyptians understood the art of working in metals. One of the most interesting finds was the fragment of a saucer on which some workman had scrawled a few words. Little did the man who wrote the words and those who made those beautiful objects think that after six thousand years they would be brought to light, to tell the world the kind of men they were. They show that there was a civilization in those remote times which has so completely perished, that only these relics remain to tell us of its ever having existed. Happily, for us, while empires rise and fall and civilizations pass away, there is permanence in heaven:

The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations (Ps. 33:11).

Dangerous Counterfeits

A Washington, D. C., journal calls attention to the unusually large number of counterfeit coins now in circulation. They are, it says, chiefly the gold coins that have been imitated. It is possible for the counterfeiters to make large profits by the manufacture of coins containing a large quantity of gold, but not the quantity contained in the genuine coin. They make up the difference with alloy of lighter weight. Other counterfeiters work on the genuine coins. They saw them through, remove the interior, insert base metal in the place, and then unite the two outsides by brazing. In all cases the criminal takes care that the outside of the coins is real gold, and the alloy is put within, where it will not be seen. The same method is adopted in deceiving the Church. The hypocrites who succeed in joining it, and afterwards bring reproach upon it, take care to assume the appearance and language of the genuine Christian.

Now do ye make clean the outside of the cup and platter, but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness (Luke 11:39).

BRIEF NOTES

Rev. Charles L. Mirriam, the Congregational minister of Lowell, Mass., has spent his summer vacation among the canal men on the Erie canal. He dressed as a common sailor and mixed with the men on friendly terms. The experience was somewhat rough but he reports hopefully of the work done.

Mrs. Allan, a Presbyterian lady belonging to the family which maintains the Allan Line of steamers, recently decided to equip a Gospel ship for service on the coasts of the Japanese Islands. She died before her project was executed, but her son, Mr. Robert S. Allan, has carried it out, and has devoted a fine new steamer to the purpose. Its name is The Ship of Good News, or in Japanese Fudniu Maru.

The American Bible Society has just issued its eighty-fourth annual report, showing its total issues for the year at home and abroad to be 1,406,801 copies. Of this amount, 832,496 were distributed outside of this country. More than half of the issue was manufactured at the Bible House, in this city, and a large part of the rest was printed in Turkey, Syria, China and Japan. The Society received $287,409.04 during the year.

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

Samantha in Naples

IN Naples as a rule the lower parts of the houses are shops, restaurants, etc., and the upper stories are used for dwellings. The beautiful terraces of the city and the flat roofs of the houses are covered with shrubs and flowers, and filled with gayly dressed promenaders, givin' it a gay appearance. And you don't see in the faces of the crowd any expression of fear for the danger signal that smokes up in the sky, no more than our faces to home show signs of our realizin' the big danger signals on our own horizon.

I d'no as I ever hearn of the third city that wuz destroyed when Herculanean and Pompeii wuz. But Vesuvius did put an end to another city called Stabea at that time, most two thousand years ago, but that is some years back and I d'no as it is strange that the news hadn't got to Jonesville yet.

Naples has three hundred meetin'-houses, enough you would say to make the citizens do as they ort to. But I don't spoze they do. I hearn, and it come quite straight, too, that it is a dretful city for folks to act and behave, though it used us real well.

It has a good many theatres and has a large museum where I would been glad to spent more time than I did. Dretful interestin' to me wuz the rich frescoes and marbles dug up in the buried cities. Just to think on't how long they stayed down there under the ground, and now come out lookin' as well as ever whilst the Love or the Ambition that carved the exquisite lines have gone away so fur that we can't foller 'em; way into some other planet, mebby. Bronze statutes, the finest collection in the world they say, and all sorts of weapons, Etruscan vases, coins, tablets, marbles, ornaments of all kinds enough to make your head feel dizzy to glance at 'em.

Some of the statutes I didn't want Josiah to see; they wuzn't dressed decent to appear in company, but then agin I knew he wuz a perfessor and had always read about the Garden of Eden and Eve when she and Adam first took the place and wuz so scanty on't for clothes, but I didn't like their looks. Miss Meechim thought they wuz genteel and called it high art, and Josiah, for a wonder, agreed with her; they hardly ever think alike.

A Warning to Josiah

But I sez, "Josiah Allen, while I am a livin' woman, and a Methodist sister, you never will be sculped with nothin' but a towel hung over one arm, not even a paper collar on, and," sez I, "what should we think to go into a photograph gallery to home and see Sister Bobbett and Sister Gowdey portrayed with a little mosquiter nettin' slung over one shoulder?" Sez I, "It would be the town's talk and ort to be—you can call it high art, Miss Meechim, if you want to, but I shall always call it low art."

Miss Meechim murmured sunthin' about its bein' genteel, and Josiah looked round and didn't pay the attention to my earnest words that he ort to. I believe they did for a spell shet up them statters of Venus, but they had let 'em out agin when we wuz there. There wuz one statter of a woman with the top of her head and her arms off. Josiah said to me: "The idee of puttin' that poor cripple in here amongst decent lookin' wimmen; if they pictured her at all they ought to pictured her as bein' carried to a hosspital."

Miss Meechim wuz nigh by and I see she had gone almost into spazzums of admiration over it, and on our family's account, didn't want to fall too low down in her estimation, so I wunk at him and whispered, "Josiah, that is the celebrated Sikey; it is the proper thing to fall into extacies of admiration and wonder when you see it." And I as I say not wantin' to demean myself any further before Miss Meechim, put up my two hands in an attitude of wonder, but which she could take for admiration if she wanted to, but I didn't say it wuz.

Appreciating "High Art"

But Josiah sez, "Catch me a praisin' up a no armed female, one who has been scalped, too, in the bargain."

I hope Miss Meechim didn't hear him. She always praised just what wuz proper to praise, she always read in her guide book just what she ought to admire and then proceeded to admire it to once. As she boasted her mind wuz a eminently conservative and genteel mind.

As for me my mind and sperit loved to grope around more and find out things to praise and blame kindly by rote and not by note, and Dorothy and Robert Strong was some so.

Arvilly wuz more bent on disseminatin' her books to help and instruct, and would have canvassed Michael Angelo himself for the Twin Crimes, turning her back onto his most wonderful creations. As for Josiah, a wild goat leapin' through museums and picture galleries couldn't have been more scornful of contemporaneous judgment exceptin' on the cases when he tried to be fashionable.

Dear little Tommy would wander round with his arms clasped behind him under his velvet jacket and wonner at things to himself and I spoze Carabi walked up and down beside him though we couldn't see him. Sometimes I felt kinder conscience smitten to think I couldn't honestly admire what seemed to be the proper thing to, and then agin I kinder leaned up agin the memory of John Ruskin and how he liked in art what he did like, and not what it was fashionable to, and I felt comforted.

One day, tired out with sightseein' and havin' sunthin' of a headache, I stayed to home while all the rest of the party went out and Miss Meechim invited me into their settin'-room as it wuz cooler there, so I had sot there for some time readin' a good book and enjoyin' my poor health as well as I could, when a card wuz brung in for Robert Strong. I told the hall boy that he wuz out but wuz expected back soon and in a few minutes he come back usherin' in a good lookin' man who said he wuz anxious to see him on business and that he would wait for him. I knowed him from his picture as well as his card: it wuz Mr. Carnafeller, a multi-millionaire, who had got his enormous wealth from trusts and monopolies.

I couldn't go back into my room for Josiah had the key, and so we introduced ourselves and had quite a agreeable visit,

VIEWING THE ARTISTIC WONDERS OF THE NAPLES GALLERY

A Little Talk on Wealth

And bein' so dretful anxious to convince him, I begun some as the M. E. ministers some times do in a low, still voice, gradually risin' higher and deeper and more earnest. I told him my idees of trusts and monopolies and what a danger I thought they wuz to individual and national life. And I described the feelin's I felt to see such droves of poor people out of work and starvin' for the necessaries of life, whilst a few wuz pilin' up enormous and onneeded wealth, and I sez:

"Mr. Carnafeller, what good does it do to heap up such a lot of money jest to think you own it and hide it from the tax collector? And bring up your daughters to luxury and foolish display, their gole being to give you a titled son-in-law who will bend down toward you from his eminence jest fur enough to reach your pockets, and if you refuse to have them emptied too many times you will anon or oftener have your daughter returned to you, her beauty eat up by sorrow, her ears tinglin' and heart burnin' with experiences a poor girl would never know. And bring up your sons to idleness and temptation, when you know, Mr. Carnafeller, that it is Earnest Toil, wise-headed hard-handed step-ma, that goads her sons on to labor and success. And it is not, as a rule, the sons of millionaires who are our great men. It is the sons of Labor and Privation that hold the prizes of life to-day and will to-morrow."

And sez I, reasonable: "What is the use, Mr. Carnafeller, of so much money, anyway? You can't ride in but one buggy at a time, or wear more than one coat and vest, or sleep on more than one bed and three pillers at the outside or eat more than three meals a day with any comfort, so why not let poorer folks have a chance to eat one meal a day—lots of 'em would be tickled to death to.

"Our Lord said: 'Take no thought for the morrow what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink;' and he must have meant that the time wuz comin' when juster laws should prevail, when Mammon should yield to Mercy and plunder changed to plenty for all and no burden of riches for any. The Bible sez that in those days when the pure influence of Jesus still rested on his disciples that they had everything in common."

A Millionaire's Idea

Sez Mr. Carnafeller, "Start ten men out rich Monday morning and nine of them would be poor Saturday night, and the tenth one would own the money of all the rest."

And I sez: "I presoom so, if they had their own way, and that is a big argument to prove that there ought to be a wise head and a merciful hand at the hellum to look out for the hull on 'em. A good father and mother with a big family of children takes care of the hull on 'em. And if one is miserly and one a spendthrift and one a dissipator and one overambitious they watch over 'em and curb these different traits of theirn and adjust 'em to the good of all and the honor of their pa and ma. They spur on the indolent and improvident, hold back the greedy and ambitious, watch and see that the careless and good-natured don't git trod on, nor the strong make slaves of the weaker. The feeble are protected, temptations are kept out of the way of the feeble wills; the honest, industrious ones hain't allowed to perish for want of work they would gladly do, and the strong, keen-witted ones hain't allowed to steal from the onfaculized ones. Why, how it would look for that pa to let some of his children heap up more money than they could use, whilst some of the children wuz starvin'? It would make talk and ort to."

Mr. Carnafeller said, "Millionares are very charitable; look at their generous gifts on every side."

And I sez, "Yes, that's so; but Charity, though she's a good creeter and well thought on, hain't so good as Justice in lots of places."

We are glad of this renewed opportunity which enables us to offer a boon like this to the millions of commendably ambitious men and women, who are literally hungering and thirsting for knowledge, to whom we may now open up this treasure-house of useful and accurate information, and bid them revel in its riches to their heart's content.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is very handsomely and durably bound in modern silk-finished cloth with genuine gold stamp. The twelve large octavo volumes, aggregating nearly 10,000 large pages, make an imposing array, attractive enough to ornament the largest and costliest library in the world. No other encyclopedia can make a better exhibit on the book shelves, and the ownership of this great work, a complete library in itself, ranks its possessor among the intellectually progressive men of the day.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia has "The Christian Herald" Imprint, which is a guaranty of the excellence and reliability of the work. We know it thoroughly and recommend it unhesitatingly. It is regarded as standard in "The Christian Herald" Editorial rooms.

The publication of this great work is a response to the universal silent prayer of young men for some means of educating themselves. Such an opportunity has never before been offered, and the eagerness with which it is being seized shows both the great need and the great appreciation.

A Home Business College

Without commerce, agriculture and manufacturing would be like a body without arms and legs. Commerce is the connecting-link between nations and between men. It is the instinct of barter and sale that has built the roads, railways and ships which make communication possible between all parts of the world. The man who enters trade must not be content to study price-lists, but must widen his grasp of affairs by a comprehensive study of all the machinery of business. He cannot gain a personal experience of it all—life would be too short for that—but he can study its principles in books; and nowhere but in the World-Wide Encyclopedia will he find them all brought together, convenient to his hand.

In any branch of business the man who, by persistent self-culture, has gained a general knowledge, perseverance, resolution, and an accurate realization of his own powers and his own limitations, will be able to far outstrip his competitor who has neglected self-culture. Let the merchant or the young man just starting in a business career study the World-Wide Encyclopedia's article on "Commerce," and follow it up by a study on the other subjects in the following list:

Healthful Recreations

THERE are scores of healthy amusements which, when indulged in to a rational extent, are of actual benefit to the worker by relaxing his mind and strengthening his body. When one's occupation is sedentary, as that of a student, a professional man, or many artisans, active exercise is needed daily to keep the body in trim for its work. The World-Wide Encyclopedia is as complete in this direction as in all others, and gives descriptions of many sports which can be indulged in to advantage by the student. Self-made Men

Some of the most successful leaders in every profession and every industry have been what are called "self-made men," because they had no advantages of early training and no one to give them a start in life. Henry Wilson, who became vice-president of the United States, was a poor boy whose parents apprenticed him to a farmer when he was ten years old. And yet, in spite of the hard work of the farm, Henry Wilson found time before he was twenty-one to read a thousand books and lay the foundation of the ripe learning that gave him power and prominence in public affairs.

The young man who decides to purchase the World-Wide Encyclopedia need not fear that after years of study he must shun comparison with the graduates of schools and universities, with those whose means and leisure may have enabled them to employ expensive tutors. He who possesses a copy of that great work, and utilizes it for careful and intelligent study, need fear no comparison with the product of expensive university training. He will have levied tribute on the brightest minds of the age and of all ages. The concentrated learning of the centuries will be placed at his disposal—the ripest thoughts of all philosophers, the tenets of all theologies, the principles of every science, the rules of every profession, and the practical details of every industry. The world will be his curriculum, and its brightest and best thinkers will be his instructors. The rise and fall of nations, the triumphs of statecraft and diplomacy, the influence on action and thought of great discoveries in science, will all be laid bare to his delighted view. The growth of the arts, the latest improvements in handicrafts, the principles of law, of medicine, of commerce, and of agriculture will be unfolded in their due and proper order before him. The wealth of the world will be his, from which to pluck the jewels he admires the most to set in his own crown of knowledge.

Think of it!—an up-to-date Encyclopedia for only $15—on monthly instalments of only one dollar each. Had we not purchased 5,000 sets for members of "The Christian Herald" family in sheets and then had them beautifully and substantially bound, saving all middlemen's profits, nothing short of double this figure could have secured a set.

This Home University is open, and all are welcome. There is no bar of age, sex or condition. Man is never too young nor too old to learn. Dr. Priestly was 40 years old when his attention was directed to the peculiar action of gases escaping from a beer vat, and he began the studies which resulted in his important discoveries in chemistry. Socrates learned to play musical instruments in his old age, and Cato was eighty when he studied the Greek language. Izaak Walton was ninety when he wrote his immortal work, The Complete Angler, and thousands of other men have done their best work late in life. Genius sometimes blossoms late in life, and no man should let his years discourage him from learning.

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints in the sands of time."

Longfellow's familiar stanza may well recur to the student who peruses the life histories of renowned persons contained in the World-Wide Encyclopedia or any considerable number of them. Very few of them had any exceptional advantages to start with. What marked them as men set apart from their fellows, the millions who have gone to their graves leaving no monuments of great achievements behind them, was chiefly their fixedness of purpose and the untiring energy with which they carried it out; in other words, their willingness and capacity for work. "Genius is infinite capacity for taking pains," according to one definition; and if the reader can learn from these biographies the lesson of perseverance and also of patience, he will be well on the high road to success. He, too, may leave behind him footprints in the sands of time.

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is a Standard Work of 12 Massive Volumes, Containing nearly 10,000 large pages—Numerous Illustrations—96 Accurately Colored Maps, all brought down to date, including the Spanish-American War, and is elsewhere sold at $30. Our price is just half—$15 on monthly instalments of One Dollar Each, or 10 per cent. discount for cash.

Readers of the gentler sex need not be told that some of the most noted names in history have been those of women, who, as artists, authors or rulers, have by force of genius attracted and held the world's attention. In the World-Wide Encyclopedia will be found the biographies of a galaxy of noted women who have won renown by their intellect, or reverence and love by softer, diviner qualities.

Sound Advice to Artisans

FARMING is the keystone of civilization and manufacturing is the corner-stone. Without the artisan there would be no comforts in life, no luxuries, and not even what we have grown to look upon as necessities. Mankind would still be wearing skins of animals and sleeping in caves. The artisan, the man who works with his hands to fashion or help fashion the endless products of the inventive skill of the ages, occupies a position of importance and dignity. He is a producer in the literal sense of the word. He can take to his heart the words of Daniel Webster: "Labor is one of the great elements of society, the great substantial interest on which we all stand."

A good artisan, a skilled mechanic, has something to be proud of; and the more skill he has, the greater success he will achieve, the greater advancement. What the artisan should carefully avoid is the danger of plodding in a single groove, of becoming a mere machine. Study of the principles on which his work is based and of the tools and forces with which he is operating and the materials he is using will enable the mechanic to become more than a mere machine. Intelligent study and self-culture, joined to the practical knowledge which comes from his actual labor, will increase his earning capacity as well as his satisfaction in his work. Such study will enable him to develop into the foreman, the inventor, the contractor, the employer, the manufacturer. He may emulate or surpass the Whitneys, the Stephensons, the Franklins, Wattses, McCormicks, Edisons, Bessemers, and their like, who were not satisfied with the repetition of a daily task, but were constantly striving to improve old machines or invent new methods.

The artisan will also find that a study of the lives of inventors and mechanicians will stimulate his ambition, and that his knowledge cannot be too wide or too minute to aid his ambition. Self-culture will be to him a stepping-stone to success.

In aiding the artisan, ambitious of self-culture, there is nothing to approach the World-Wide Encyclopedia which will furnish him with information on every conceivable subject connected with his trade. The dyer, cooper, foundryman, printer, miner, carpenter, mason, can all find plentiful stores of knowledge in its magic pages. We have room here only for the lists of studies that have been arranged for workers in wood and workers in metals.

Many of the hundreds of biographies contained in the World-Wide Encyclopedia are character studies of the strongest kind which no young man can read without being deeply impressed by their lessons. A good character is as valuable a possession as great learning.

Valuable Suggestions

The World-Wide Encyclopedia is an inexhaustible mine of wealth to the earnest student, into which he may delve at will for the bright nuggets of the gold of wisdom. It is an endless orchard in which he may wander, plucking from every variety of the tree of knowledge the ripe fruit nourished by the work and thought of all the sages of the world.

A continued course of reading in the World-Wide Encyclopedia will strengthen the student, be he young or old, for the battle of life which is yearly growing more difficult because of the increase of competition in every field of endeavor. He will realize to the full the truth of the saying that "Learning is wealth to the poor, an honor to the rich, an aid to the young, and a support and comfort to the aged."

The great advantage of the World-Wide Encyclopedia is the prodigality and thoroughness of its resources. The student of law or medicine, the embryo architect, artist, botanist, farmer, mechanic or merchant, can not only find here the principles that will fit him for the prosecution of his chosen line of endeavor, but can acquire the broad culture given by general knowledge that will sharpen his faculties and increase his strength in his special field.

Are you discouraged because you have not yet achieved success? Take courage and read in the World-Wide Encyclopedia the life of Robert Bruce, who, after years of failure to free Scotland from English rule, being hunted for his life, lay in hiding in a cave, where he saw a spider trying to clamber up the bare wall. Six times the spider renewed the task, each time falling back to the ground, but the seventh time it succeeded. Bruce, who had in despair determined to flee from his country, took the lesson to heart, made one more effort, and won.

Formed on the best examples, ripened on the best learning, the possessor of the World-Wide Encyclopedia will have a magnificent outfit for his life-work. Facility will come with labor, and the principles he has learned will become more thoroughly his own when he is putting them in practice. Let him not forget, either, that the Encyclopedia never graduates its students. Its curriculum is as long as life itself, for there is always more to learn; and the home will always remain the ideal place for learning.

Self-culture is not a meaningless phrase, but a living, breathing reality. It enlarges the ideals, elevates the thoughts and ennobles the labor of its possessor, no matter how commonplace or humble that labor may be. It gives a zest to life, a joy to the daily round of labor, which nothing can give so well as the constant intercourse with the great minds of the past and the great thoughts and intellectual movements of the present. Be he poor in all else, the possessor of self-culture can count himself rich in the best of all riches.

The Key to the Study of the World-Wide Encyclopedia which accompanies every set Free, will help you to pursue any particular course of reading.

A Word to Farmers

All wealth comes originally from the soil. The farmer bears the weight of the world upon his shoulders. He is the keystone of civilization. To be successful he must be something of a naturalist and something of a chemist; he must know what soils are suited to the production of different crops, and what fertilizers are best adapted to aid in the cultivation of each crop. When the farmer is intelligent and knows how to produce the best results without exhaustive labor, farm life is the healthiest and most invigorating in the world. The time has passed when farming can be successfully conducted without keen intelligence and a thorough scientific knowledge, and the World-Wide Encyclopedia is rich in information which will enable a man to become a scientific farmer. Brains and ability are fully as necessary in farming as in any other pursuit.

From the hour when a boy can read his mother-tongue he has it absolutely in his power, without classes, teachers or school buildings, to master all the learning of the world.

He sez, "We give big gifts to the churches."

And I sez, "Yes, I know it; but do you think," sez I, "that the Lord is goin' to think any better on you for raisin' up costly temples sacred to the Lord who specially said in his first sermon that he had come to preach the Gopel to the poor, give sight to the blind, set at liberty them that are bound? As it is you rare up magnificent temples and hire eloquent clergymen to preach the doctrine that condemns you if they preach the Bible, which a good many on 'em do. For you must remember what it sez:

Samantha Grows Eloquent

"If you who have plenty give not to your brother in need, how dwelleth the love of God in you? And if you have two coats and your poorer brother has none, you ort to give him your second best one. And you kneel down on your soft hassocks and pray all your enormous, needless wealth away from you, for you pray, 'Thy kingdom come,' which you know is the kingdom of love and equality and justice, and 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven,' when you know that God's will is mercy, pity and love. And 'Give us our daily bread,' when you must know that you are takin' it right out of the mouths of the poor when you are makin' your big corners on wheat and meat, and treezin' the widder and orphan when you make your corners on coal."

Sez I, "Look at Robert Strong's City of Justice. Love, peace and happiness rains there. Every workman is content, for he has his pay for his labor and a fair per centage on profits. If the factory is prosperous the workmen knows that he gets just as much accordin' for the work he puts in as if he owned the hull thing, and it is for his advantage to give good work and help it along all he can.

"Intemperance is not allowed to show its hoof and horns inside that city, for that would be injustice to the weak-willed and their families. Greed and plunder and the whiskey power has to stay outside, for the Bible sez without are dogs.

"Robert Strong might wring all the money he could from these workmen, wrop himself in a jewelled robe and set up in a gold chair and look down on the bent forms of the poor, sweating and groaning and striking and starving below him. But he don't want to. He is down there right by the side of 'em. Capital and labor walking side by side some like the lion and the lamb. He has enough for his wants, and they have enough for their wants, and there is mutual good-will there and peace and happiness. Hain't that better than discontent and envy and despair, bloody riots and revolutions? Cold, selfish, greedy Capital clutching its money-bags, and cowering and hiding away from starvin' infuriated strikers."

Sez I, growin' real eloquent, "Monopoly is the great American brigand hid in the black forest of politics. It has seized Labor in its clutches and wrings a ransom out of every toiler in the land.

"Monopoly steals out of Uncle Sam's pocket with one hand and with the other clutches the bread-money out of the tremblin', weak fingers of the poor. Is our law," sez I, "a travesty, a vain sham, that a man that steals millions for greed goes unpunished, while a man who steals a loaf to keep his children from starvin' is punished by our laws and scorfed at? Monopoly makes the poor pay tribute on every loaf of bread and bucket of coal, and the government looks on and helps it. Shame! shame that it is so!"

The Opportunities of Wealth

Sez Mr. Carnafeller, "Where would the world be to-day if it wuzn't for rich people building railroads, stringing telegraph and telephone wires, binding the cities and continents together?"

"Yes," sez I, "I set store by what they've done, just as I do on them good old creeters who used to carry the mails in their saddle-bags for so much a year. Folks felt tickled to death, I spoze, when they could send a letter by somebody for ten cents a letter. And it wuz a great improvement on havin' to write and send it by hum labor, a boy and a ox team. But when I see Uncle Sam can carry 'em for two cents and one cent a-piece, why I can't help favorin' the idee of givin' Uncle Sam the job. And if he can carry letters so much cheaper why can't he carry packages at just the same reduced rate, and talk over the wires, etc., etc.

"Not that I look down on them saddle-bags—fur from it—I honor 'em, and I honor the rich men that have cut iron roads through continents, mountain and abyss, honor them that have made talkin' under the ocean possible and through the pathless air. Yes, indeed, I honor 'em from nearly the bottom of my heart. But I would honor 'em still more if they should now all on 'em stand up in a row before Uncle Sam, and say, We have done all we could to help the people (and ourselves at the same time) and now as we see that you can help 'em still more than we can, we turn our improvements all over into your hands to use for the people, for you can make travel jest as much cheaper as letter carryin', and do it just as peaceable. Why, what a stir it would make on earth and in heaven, and Uncle Sam would see that they didn't lose anything by it. He'd see jest what a grand thing they wuz doin', and pay 'em well for it. And these rich men, instead of leavin' their wealth in bags of greenbacks for moth and rust and lawyers to corrupt, and fightin' heirs to break through their wills and steal, would leave it in grateful memories and a niche in history where their benine faces would stand up with all the great benefactors of the race. Hain't that better, Mr. Carnafeller, than to leave jest money for a fashionable wife and golf-playin' sons to run through?"

"HE LOOKED REAL CONVINCED"

A Hint From History

Mr. Carnafellar said he believed it wuz better; he looked real convinced. And seein' him in this softened frame of mind I went on and brung up a number of incidents provin' that the great folks of the past had held a good many of my idees in regard to wealth. I reminded him of Mr. Cincinnatus who did so much to make Rome glorious, when the public sought him out for honors (he not a-prancin' through the country with torch-light processions talkin' himself hoarse, and lavishin' money to git it), no indeed, when they sought him for a candidate for public honors they found him a not fixin' up the primarys and buyin' bosses, but plowin' away just as peaceable as his oxen, workin' on his own little farm of four acres. He wuz satisfied with makin' enough to live on. Live and let live was his motto.

"And Mr. Regulus, the leader of the great Roman forces wuz satisfied with his little farm of seven acres, creepin' up a little in amount from four to seven. But it wuzn't till long, long afterwards that the rich grew enormously rich and the poor poorer, and what a man had wuz honored instead of what he wuz. Over and over the drama has been played out, moderation and contentment, luxury and discontent, revolution and ruin, but I did hope that our republic, havin' more warnin's and nigher the millenium, wouldn't go the same old jog trot up, up—up, and down, down, down. I wuz some in hopes they would hear to me, but I d'no."

Samantha Has Hopes

I could see that Mr. Carnafeller wuz greatly impressed by what I said. I see he took out his watch a number of times, wantin' to see, I mistrusted, the exact minute that I said different things. He wuz jest like the rest of them millionares, a first-rate lookin' and actin' creeter when you git down to the real man, but run away with by Ambition and Greed, a span that will take the bits in their mouth and dash off and carry any one further than they mean to be carried. He didn't say so right out but he kinder gin me to understand that I'd convinced him more'n a little. And I am lookin' every day to see him make a dicker with Uncle Sam (a good-hearted creeter too as ever lived Uncle Sam is, only led away sometimes by bad councilors), yes, I expect he will make a dicker with Uncle Sam for the good of the public and hasten on the day of love and justice. I am lookin' for it and prayin' for it; in fact the hull world is prayin' for it every day whether they know it or not when they pray "Thy kingdom come."

But to resoom: Robert Strong and Josiah come back almost simeltaneously, and I don't know what Mr. Carnatellar's bizness wuz with Robert, sunthin' about California affairs I guess, mebby politics or sunthin'. But 'tennyrate, if it wuz, anything out of the way I know he would never get Robert to jine in with him.

Chilian Friends Help India

From the remotest lands comes sympathetic help for suffering India. The following letter from Chili, South America, shows that the story of India's woes has awakened pity in that distant republic:

CHRISTIAN HERALD:—Inclosed, Messrs. Guggenheim's New York draft for $5. This represents the following subscriptions for famine fund from Playa, Blanca (native) Chilian converts, Methodist Episcopalian Church members: Sister Juanawde Gonzales, 70 cents; Sister Martina C. de Lewis, 70 cents; Brother and Sister Guerrero, 70 cents; Brother and Sister Godoi, 70 cents; Brother Jose Manuel Heredia, 70 cents; Brother Juan de Dios Santis, 70 cents; Brother J. L. de Dios Santis, 80 cents. Total, $5. These people are poor people of working class, who spontaneously have done this. They are a noble and bright group of Christians, and a good sample of God's having chosen the poor of this world for his kingdom. J. L.

Trains Stopped by Deer

At different times reports have appeared in the newspaper of railroad traffic being impeded by locusts and grasshoppers. A few days ago a Colorado despatch stated that great droves of deer were crossing the tracks between Grand Junction and Glenwood Springs, and at times they interfered with passing trains. There were from 10,000 to 20,000 animals in one herd, and when this was passing the road was blocked for nearly two hours. These, during the summer, are scattered over the mesas or tablelands of Routt and Rio Blanco counties. As winter approaches they collect in immense herds, and start for the winter pastures and salt licks several hundred miles to the south. Deer headed for their wintering grounds rush irresistibly over everything in their path.

The Best of All Testaments

When I open my Red Letter New Testament I always read Christ's words with a thrill of pleasure before taking up the regular readings. Then I find myself reading only the red letters. I was surprised to find all of Rev. 2 and 8 chapters were Christ's words. Then it continually reminds me of his blood shed for us. I am delighted with mine, and have given two to friends.

Work of the American Board

The receipts of the American Board of Foreign Missions of July were $62.781.76, as against $58,614.05 for the corresponding month last year. The total receipts for eleven months of 1900 is $589,935.60, a net increase in donations and legacies of $64.904.84 over the corresponding eleven months of 1899.

THEY 'LL NEVER SEEM OLD

I WONDER if any would call them old—
They do not feel old themselves—
But mother is sixty-six, we're told,
And father, three score and twelve.
Stepping so blithely where e'er they go,
So ready to hear and see;
They never seem old to me. Oh, no!
They never seem old to me.

Their love is so true—so tender and strong,
I know it must really seem
They have not been living so very long,
But are dreaming, still, "Love's young dream."
Carrying sunshine where clouds hang low,
Good angels wherever they be,
They'll never seem old to me, Oh, no!
They'll never seem old to me.

The same dear hands on the Bible lid,
The same dear words of prayer;
They seem to me as they always did,
Undamaged by time or care.
I hardly know if their hair is gray—
Perhaps it may slightly be—
But, smiling and loving the same old way,
They never seem old to me.

'Tis human sympathy sweet and warm,
That springs from a heart of truth;
'Tis tender love that will age transform,
And give it the stamp of youth.
The years will roll as they've always rolled,
And be as the years must be;
But father and mother will never seem old,
They'll never seem old to me.

A Blind Church Organist

THOUGH never having seen a keyboard or a pedal, the blind organist, Frank Irwin, can find his own way to the church organ loft and play a prelude that will put a large congregation into the attitude of worship. Strange as it may seem, this young man, who has never seen the light of the sun, is a gifted player of music, secular or sacred. The pastor can announce for his congregation any ordinary hymn from the book, simply read the first line, and this blind musician at once plays the fitting tune. Frank Irwin was born in Brooklyn in 1877. In spite of great obstacles, this consecrated Christian has developed his talent as few could have done under similar circumstances. He always has had a passion for music, and, while a mere child, would come to his sister's piano and play for hours. At six years of age he was able to render tunes by ear with rare ability. At eleven years he had entered the New York Institute for the Blind, and studied under W. B. Wait, who did all he could to develop his musical talent. The blind student undertook a scientific study of music, adopting the "point system" for reading the scale. He has also become proficient with the violin. He has composed some excellent original pieces. He plays with much expression and for some time past has filled various positions as church organist, playing recently the organ of the Union Evangelical Church at Corona, L. I., to the delight of the congregation.

INDIA'S ORPHAN CHILDREN PLEAD FOR HELP

WILL YOU MAKE A SACRIFICE TO MAINTAIN AND EDUCATE ONE FATHERLESS CHILD IN INDIA?

FROM Bishop J. M. Thoburn and Rev. E. S. Hume, who are in this country recovering from illness, and from missionaries in India of all denominations appeals of the most urgent character have been received during the past two weeks on behalf of the orphans. We should judge from the statements they make that there must be nearly if not quite half a million of these little creatures to be provided for. Some of the missionaries have received as many as one thousand into their institutions. They could not refuse them admission when their bright little faces, pinched with hunger, pleaded so eloquently for food. The question the missionaries are now asking with sinking hearts is Must They Be Given Up?

It is impossible that the missionaries can support them. Their incomes are small; all that they have saved was given away in the famine; the Mission Boards have no funds available for the purpose. It rests with the Christian public to say whether the orphans shall be turned out to beg or steal, or whether they shall be supported, educated and prepared for a Christian life. The letters of the missionaries put this alternative clearly. Glad as they would be to keep the children, and willingly as they would give the toil of teaching them, they cannot undertake the charge without immediate help.

The crisis was so urgent and the possibility of the missionaries being compelled to abandon the children was so dire that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has to its Interdenominational Missionary Committee in Bombay, to be distributed among the missionaries who have taken in the largest number of orphans, and whose need is consequently the most urgent. This sum will suffice to maintain five thousand orphans for four months. It was imperative that something should be done, and that quickly, to reassure the missionaries whose hearts were sinking at the prospect before them. We are convinced that the Christian people of America, when once they realize the need and the blessing that will come from this work, will give liberally and promptly as they have done heretofore in response to the appeals of the missionaries; but time pressed and therefore this earnest of coming support was sent forward. Fifty thousand dollars will be needed to continue the support of these five thousand children through the year. It seems a large sum, but when we consider what will be the result of so many receiving a Christian education, we perceive that there is no way in which such a sum could be invested with so much hope of beneficent results. Those children will carry the good news of the Gospel far and wide through India, and their message and their lives will like leaven permeate the millions of that benighted and afflicted land.

Again we urge as the easiest and most delightful method of bearing the burden,

The Plan of Adoption.

Any man or woman, any childless couple, any bereaved parents may adopt a child—boy or girl. That child will be educated and maintained in an orphanage of any denomination that the foster-parents may prefer, for there are missionaries of every denomination with orphans on their hands whom they are anxious to keep. The missionaries undertake that the child shall be informed of the name of its benefactors and promise that at regular intervals those benefactors shall be informed by letter of the condition and progress of their adopted child. The cost will be fifteen dollars a year—thirty cents a week—and for that small sum a child may be saved for time and for eternity.

What is a Child Worth?

Let a mother answer. Missionaries tell us that wicked men and women are eager to get all the children they can obtain, that they may train them up to vice. Should these children in the orphanages be turned out many of them will be lured into the toils of these evil-minded persons. It is therefore no baseless fear that points the appeal for help. What gratification it will be in years to come; what consolation it will be for a dying pillow, to feel that by a small sacrifice at this time, some man or woman is living a Christian life in India who might, without that sacrifice, be lost in this life and that which is to come! It is a magnificent opportunity that may never occur again in a century.

Little Sudena

One illustration of the opportunities now offering to missionaries is given in a letter from Miss Hattie Bruce of the American Board's Mission at Satara. It appears that a man living at Arphal, near Satara lost his wife through the complaint most prevalent just now in India—misery and starvation. She left him just one legacy that in other times would have been very precious to the bereaved husband—a four-month's-old baby girl. But in these awful days he did not know what to do with her. It was a problem that taxed all his energies to find food for himself. He went about with the child in his arms begging milk for her; but it was a hard matter and very soon he began to regard the little girl as an incumbrance. Among other people to whom he applied for help was Vithoba, a native Christian teacher, to whom he confided his intention of disposing of the baby to one of the harpies before mentioned who provide for the lusts of the vicious men of the cities. Vithoba begged him to do nothing so unnatural. The father said he could not keep the child, and these women were willing to buy her. Vithoba had no money to offer, but he was anxious to obtain the child that it might be brought up by the Christians. But he had received some American corn from the cargo of the Quito, so he offered him four seers (about 28 pounds) of the corn in exchange for the child. The offer was tempting, for the man was hungry, but still he hesitated. Finally he was induced to accompany Vithoba to Satara, where the conduct of negotiations was transferred to Miss Bruce. Eventually a CHRISTIAN HERALD blanket was added to the offer, and the father went away satisfied. Miss Bruce has named the girl Sudena, which means Happy Day, because it was a happy day for her when American corn and a blanket saved her from so sad a fate. "With many thanks to your readers," writes Miss Bruce, "on Sudena's behalf for the privilege they have placed within our reach by their generosity, I am yours gratefully." She adds one interesting detail in a postscript. There is, as already reported, a dearth of clothes. The deft fingers of the women have transformed the bags in which the Quito's cargo was packed, into quite presentable garments for the children, and now many a little girl is running around with a garment on which the stamp of is conspicuous. It is not inappropriate, for the little figure inside the bag owes its plumpness to the corn which once filled the bag. If the donors of the corn saw the bonnie little creatures so labeled, they would rejoice at the transformation and would take this American corn in its new form to their hearts.

Rev. J. H. Garden, of the Methodist Episcopal mission at Vikarabad, writes cheerfully of his work among the children. He is confident that the American people will support so Christlike a work. He has not only filled his home with orphan children but has erected two great wooden sheds in his compound, one for boys and one for girls, each capable of accommodating three hundred, that number being now on his hands.

H. Huizinga, of the Ongole Orphanage, writes: "I want to tell you about a little Mohammedan baby girl of six months old, which was brought to me by its own emaciated mother. 'Take it, sir,' she said, 'I have no food for myself and no milk for this child and its twin sister.' I took the little skeleton baby into the orphanage; I don't buy babies, nor did this mother ask any price for hers, but I gave her a small sum to help her, and to take care of herself and her remaining child. Our little one has greatly improved the ten days that she has been with us, and the other children are very fond of it.

"The number of orphans brought to us is increasing daily. We hope to be able to receive all who come and to provide for them until they are grown up. We shall teach them all to work, and, except in special cases, we shall try to make them better fitted for the work and the environment in which they or their parents previously were. The various details of the problems arising from the assumption of so many homeless waifs are constantly before the director and the advisory council. We look to God, the Father of the fatherless, both for guidance and for means to carry on this work."

2,800 Orphans

Dr. R. A. Hume, of Ahmednagar, writes that the American Board's Marathi Mission had, on July 25th, by actual count, 2,251 orphans on its hands, and by August 5th the number had risen to 2,800. "Thus far," he adds, "support has been pledged for not more than twenty of these. I earnestly hope that through some American fund, probably chiefly through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD means will be found to support all these."

Miss Lilian E. Marks of the Methodist Episcopal Mission at Ajmere in the Rajputana country, received a share of the money remitted from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund and asks us to thank our readers for the help rendered in the time of need. She says: "We have received all the orphans who have been brought to us. We have now eight hundred and forty orphans and widows under our care and the responsibility is very great."

To these urgent appeals it is unnecessary to add any word of emphasis. They speak for themselves. The harvest truly is great. The missionaries are ready for the labor, and all that is needed is the small sum required for the support of each child. All who desire to have a share in this grand work should send on their contributions immediately. We would especially urge the need on Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies. One teacher or member should introduce the subject and should take care that his organization shall support one child at least. The money may be sent to us monthly or quarterly, and will be promptly acknowledged in these columns and remitted to India. It is important that the missionaries know without loss of time how many orphans they are justified in undertaking to keep, and this depends on the pledges of support made by American Christians.

LITTLE FOLKS WHO HELPED INDIA'S ORPHANS

.. How Young Americans Plead, Labored and Sacrificed for the Hapless Famine Waifs ..

WE would like to issue a beautiful volume, calling it the "Book of Golden Deeds," in which should be recorded all the letters received at this office from youthful Americans, who are reaching out hands of help to India's destitute orphaned children. It should be an album of honor, too, for the pictured faces of all of India's little friends should shine forth from its pages. It would be more interesting than any book of fairy stories ever published, for, while fairy stories tell of marvelous deeds that were never wrought, this would tell of beautiful deeds well done by children who followed the Golden Rule. The sacrifices and labors of children in the interest of the perishing, the fatherless and motherless, must be precious indeed in the eyes of the Master, who loved little children so. The following letters record no small sacrifices on the part of some boys and girls.

Mrs. H. L. B. Raleigh, Ill., $1. From Hal, aged six years. He had saved it to buy a tool chest.—A Friend, $10. From a young girl who went without carfare, to save money to buy a camera. Reading in a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that fell into her hands of the destitute, helpless children of India, she said, "Oh, I can't be so wicked and selfish as to spend this on a camera. I hear the cry of those poor little babies all night! This money will almost care for one orphan for a whole year."—Mrs. G. Parker, Minn., $1. "My little five-year-old son, Warren, has been saving up his money for over a year to buy a blackboard. May the Lord bless his little gift!"—Evelyn Dennison: "I send four cents, all I have."—Mrs. Ingle, 25 cents. "My little boy sends all his money for India's children."—Claire Woodsun, Maine, 25 cents. "I had it to buy candy with it."—Lattie Aggie Boray, $5. "I gave up my birthday party to make some poor little orphans happy on my birthday."—George and Hazel Reynolds, $2.25. Hazel sold her three chickens to make hers.—May Hughes, $1. "My sister Janie and I have made it for the wee India orphans."

The way our little friends have toiled for India is a lesson of inspiration to older people who carry upon their hearts the cause of India's orphaned thousands. The warden of St. James P. E. Church, Drifton, Pa., sending $18.94 for his Sunday School, says: "Some of the children earned their pennies toward this offering by picking huckleberries when the thermometer registered in the nineties." Little Maybelle Harris, writes: "I want to send this three cents to buy a dinner for a poor little orphan girl in India. It is all I have got. I wiped dust off a big floor to make it." Perhaps some grown folks may smile at the way this little man, Raye Bell, made his money for India, but none will say it was an easy way. "My papa told me if I would have my tooth pulled, he would give me fifty cents. I had it pulled. Here is the fifty cents."

Mary Allie Pratt sends $2.82, saying: "I earned, saved and begged the money."

Lena J., a brave little Texan, eleven years old, did not raise the $1.63 which she sends, very easily. She writes us:

I am eleven years old. Mama and I sat here and read and cried ourselves sick at the pitiful Hindus. We couldn't let such a call go unheeded. Mama is a widow on a farm here, and no boys, and she is not stout, but we can do a little, so I got on a horse, and rode from twelve till nightfall, and only collected eighty cents. Oh, my heart ached, for I felt like I ought to have done better. But there isn't much money, and there's so many questions asked, it's hard work for a child to get much money for the orphans.

Surely, the boys and girls who are giving the savings in their little banks to the orphans in India are giving unto God and so laying up treasure in heaven.

Mrs. Drain, Ill., $2. "My little daughter, Grace, and my little son, James, saved $2 in pennies in their savings bank, but they want all the pennies to go towards saving some poor orphan."—Edna and Emma, two little schoolmates, Fall River, $5.20, "that we took out of our banks, and got from our papas and mamas, and from our schoolmates. We hope it will help save some poor children."—Wallace and Charles and Baby John Marten, $2.50 "for India's poor children."—Warren and Ninabelle. "We send our ten dollars for India."—Willie and Hettie, New Bedford, $3.39. "For the little children that have no papa and mama, and nothing to eat."—Porter Merle Waldron, $1. "I have been saving my money, but now I must send it to the poor India orphans."

Some young people took very pleasant ways to raise money for orphans. May Babcock sends $4, the proceeds of an entertainment. Carol, Nettie and Gladys send the proceeds of a fair. Master Dennis Blue writes:

It being my birthday, I started to see how much I could get for India's children. I got $5.

Every child whose face appears on this page has helped India's unhappy little ones. One little helper, Lillian, is now in heaven with Jesus.

Some very tiny folks have lent their strength to the orphan's cause. "I am only two years old," Ola Parsley's mama writes for her, "but old enough to do my part. Please put me among 'India's Little Helpers.'" Little Clifford and Ione, Madison, Minn., send "our dollar to help some poor orphan." In the names of many wee folks, mothers and fathers make offering. "Please send this fifty cents to India from one of Colorado's sweetest babies, Merlie Lee," writes Merlie's mama. Mrs. M. F. Bennett, North Carolina, sends $1, "in the name of my dear little grandchild, Frances."

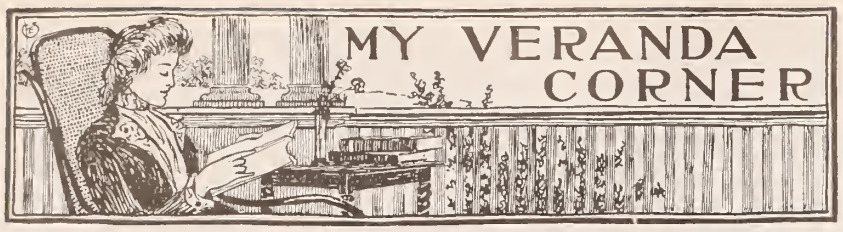
THESE BELONG TO THE BAND OF INDIA'S LITTLE HELPERS



BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

LIFE'S MORNING

THE young mother does not always believe it, but her happiest day of life is lived when her baby is in her arms, in the crib, toddling about the floor, creeping about and clinging to her skirts. There will never again be moments so exquisite as those in which she realizes how absolutely her own her darling is, how dependent on her for everything, how clinging and trustful, because knowing no other love. Sometimes the mother grows discouraged and weary and thinks herself circumscribed by her cares, but this is very short-sighted. She will always belong to her child, even if she and he both live to be old people together, but after his independent life begins, his life of individual care, labor and responsibility, he will not be hers as in the morning-time, when she makes his sunshine by her smile, and his shadow by her frown.

IN THE MORNING OF LIFE

Every day sees the most marvelous growth, when a baby's life is counted by months. It is almost miraculous, the swiftness of the child's development, the dawn of intelligence, the awakening of thought, imagination and reason. Happy the household which has a cradle! Mournful, indeed, the home where there is an empty crib. God guard mother and babe!

Dog-Days

The dog-days are hard to bear while they last, days hot and humid, days breathless and devitalized. But only a few week's hence and we shall be complaining of the frost, of the cold, of the bitter blasts, of the keen, knife-like edge of the icy winter time. Is it not a good thing that our Lord makes the weather, and not we, that he is responsible for the cold and the heat, that he orders the climate at his own pleasure? Hot weather or cold, this is a beautiful world.

Song-Birds and Sparrows

The poor little English sparrow has so many enemies and so few friends; he is so often called a ruffian in feathers, and his destruction of insects is so little prized, that I am glad to receive from a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a very nice letter in his behalf. The sparrow's champion says: "If you want to hear song-birds that are song-birds you must go to England, the home of the despised sparrow. In a residence there of some years, I never saw the sparrow attack a song-bird, though I have seen the sparrows go for a chicken-hawk and make things so lively for him that he sighed for solitude. We need laws against the trade that kills birds for decorating ladies' hats; these enforced would give us song-birds enough to charm our ears and protect our fruit-trees."

Thank you my friend. I like your letter, and agree with its sentiments.

Winsome Youth

By virtue of its freshness, its zest and enthusiasm, youth is winsome. What a blank ensues in a home when the son goes away to seek his fortune, or when the first daughter marries! The buoyant step, the merry laugh, the engaging manner are missed every hour of the day, and the work drags; father comes in tired from the farm; mother mixes sighs with the dough as she kneads the bread. There is desolation, for the light of the house has gone away. It is all the harder to bear if the youth was considerate, tactful, unselfish and deferential, was in truth very winsome.

A Pie Party

Enclosed find three dollar for the sufferers in India. A schoolmate and I made a pie supper and got this little mite. Perhaps it will do a little good. Please write us if we can help you any more and we will try to do better next time. Your friend, Kettle, W. Va., Aug. 2, 1900. ESTA HUNT.

Indeed, the mite will do a great deal of good and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is glad to welcome all such contributions to aid in its great enterprise of assisting the famine-stricken people of India. Some readers may not understand just what a pie supper is. In many communities they are a popular form of entertainment, combining sociability with the endeavor to raise money for the church or for any good object. All the young people in a given neighborhood are invited, and pies, attractively set forth on long tables, or on small round ones, are on sale. Each pie bears the name of the young woman who made it pasted on the bottom of the pie-plate. The young gentlemen choose each a pie, and then each has for his partner of the evening, the girl who made the dainty. A lover is rarely mistaken in selecting the pie his sweetheart made, and it now and then happens that a girl's pie is so good that it proves for her a certificate of merit, and the man who sits by her for an evening begs her to become his pie-maker for life. It is said, but I fancy it is a slander, that the plain girls make the best pies, and the pretty girls the poorest. If this is so, the attendant man never finds it out, for a man in love would consider sole-leather and sawdust delicious if Bright-eyes sat opposite and chatted while he ate the combination. The pie-party is a variation of the necktie, the bonnet-trimming and the apron party; also of the picnic-basket supper, with which all women who resort to women's methods of raising funds for charity are well acquainted.

Esta Hunt and her schoolmate have set a good example in this kind deed of theirs and we trust others may follow it and report results.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—E. S. A. At Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, you can take a complete course in millinery.

—LUCY M. Her mother's kitchen is the best place in which a young girl can learn housework.

—R. That is a lovely plan of yours, keeping water in your yard that all thirsty birds may drink. I am glad you speak kindly of the sparrows.

—MILRED. I think your hair needs brushing. Be careful to brush it before going to bed, with one hundred strokes of the brush. Shampooing is good, but must not be too frequent.

—B. G. Marriage under a floral rainbow is very pretty, the sign being that no matter what trials come there will always be sunshine, so long as there is mutual confidence, love and esteem between husband and wife.

—IRENE. The best remedy I know for low spirits is hard work. Occupy yourself with whatever comes to hand. By all means see your physician. I fancy that your physical condition may account for your melancholy. Don't go to blaming Divine Providence, dear lady. Ask God's help and go forward doing the best you can yourself.

—COUNTRY GIRL. White organdy will make a beautiful wedding-gown; few materials are daintier. I would have it with a short train and trim it with narrow ruffles. If it must be early in the afternoon, have two o'clock as the hour of the ceremony. The groom may wear gray trousers, but should have a black coat. Gray is a suitable color for a bride's traveling dress, and is useful on many occasions after the event for church and visiting. Have refreshments served as soon as possible after the congratulations to the happy pair. I would have chicken salad, sandwiches, creamed oysters and coffee, and perhaps ice cream. Your idea about the wedding cake cut in pieces and placed in little boxes for every guest is a very good one, but not really a necessity. The bride should herself cut the first piece of her wedding cake as it stands on the table. If cake is given to the guests, it must be ready beforehand.

—P. W. Circumstances determine how many cards a man leaves when calling. If at a house where he is intimate he may ask for the ladies, and send a single card. If the call be more general, he may send a card to each lady. I do not think it needful always to waste visiting cards. If his hostess opens the door herself and there is no card-receiver anywhere, he may or may not leave his card on a table. The omission would not be impolite. Send a note of thanks to the secretary of an organization when thanks are in order. There is no etiquette as to the exchange of photographs but only intimate friends exchange them. Your picture is a personal token, not given to everyone.

SOME OF OUR LITTLE FRESH-AIR GUESTS

THE CRIPPLED ORPHANS—THE WIDOW'S BOYS—LITTLE NUMBER TWELVE THOUSAND'S BROTHER

MANY little ones, brought to the brink of the grave by the summer's heat and by deadly environments of wretched tenement homes, are alive to-day, brown, strong and "ready to go to school," because of outings given them by generous readers of this paper. And many a tenement mother, whose burdens our readers have helped to lift, is to-day thanking God and blessing them for the mercy shown.

This is an extract from a letter we received in June from a lady who takes much interest in our Fresh-Air work:

I am writing for Mrs. Donovan, a most faithful, honorable woman, a widow with four boys under twelve wholly dependent upon her. During August she gets but little work, and if she could send her little ones away for a fortnight, it would be a great help to her.

This note came from Mrs. Donovan, August 22:

DEAR DR. KLOPSCH: I thank you for the nice time my three boys had up at Nyack. They were delighted with the place and the treatment they received. I was worried because I had no work, and with four children it was very hard. God will reward you. You have the everlasting gratitude of me and my boys, who won't ever forget the kindness they received.

HARRY, "LITTLE TWELVE THOUSAND'S" BROTHER

Many of our readers, after seeing her story in this paper, have written to us about little Bertha Brown, who "had never seen the country, never so much as seen a park." Her father dead, her mother dying, her oldest sister, Adelaide, in a hospital for an injury sustained by a fall, her youngest sister provided for by adoption, the little maid seemed indeed alone save for the interest of the kind lady who took her to her own home and brought her to our notice. Since that time, Bertha went to Mont-Lawn and enjoyed her outing greatly, and later she found a good and permanent home. Here is a letter from Bertha's kind friend about Adelaide:

Last week her mother died in the Hospital for Consumptives. I went over to see Adelaide on Saturday. The poor little thing is broken-hearted. It was impossible for her to see her mother (she had not seen her for about two months), as she is obliged to lie in a rolling chair, her entire right side from chest to foot in plaster. She is ten years old, very sweet and lovable. I enclose the pathetic letter written by the little one in the hospital when the news came that she was motherless. It was to her aged grandfather:

DEAR GRANDPA: I received a letter from Mrs. G. this morning, and it told me sad news. It said my mama died, and I cried awful. I am so sorry of it. I know it is better for her, but I would like to see her. I want to see her so much. I suppose you was there when it happened. I hope you will get along alright. Now I am an orphant but I can't help it. I will close my letter with lots of love. I send my love to mama in heaven.

When Adelaide was well enough, she went to St. Giles' Home for Cripples; from there, with a lame playmate, she came to the Bible House, and both children were sent to Mont-Lawn. These two little crippled orphans, limping about the lawn hand in hand, made a touching picture. They were very cheerful, gentle and lovable, and enjoyed their outing thoroughly.

Harry is brother of the wee maid, called "Little Twelve Thousand," because she was the twelve thousandth guest our Home has entertained. No children have been to Mont-Lawn this summer who enjoyed its privileges more heartily than these poor waifs. Their organs of speech are so defective that they could not express with their tongues the joy and gratitude that shone forth in every glance of their big blue eyes. Rags never clothed two gentler, sweeter, more affectionate children than "Little 11,999" and "Little 12,000."

Some little children of a poor missionary were among our happiest guests. Their parents live in a tiny home on a crowded thoroughfare of the slums; and for seven long years have worked faithfully night and day among the people of the district, who are too poor to pay them anything. This summer, an uptown church agreed to supply the missionary's place and let him and his wife take a rest. They could not rest at home with people coming to them daily with their needs and woes: their sick to be nursed and doctored, their wayward ones looked after, their imprisoned ones visited and helped. Leave their little tenement home for a trip to the country? Oh, how they longed for such a rest! But whence would the money come to pay transportation and board for themselves and their four children? The thing was impossible! They gave up all thought of a vacation. A lady who worked in their mission and who knew of the circumstances, told THE CHRISTIAN HERALD about it; whereupon their happy children, who had never had an outing, went up to Mont-Lawn, and their tired papa, mama and sick baby brother had a trip to the country, too.

A poor but most worthy workingman writes to Housemother Collins:

My boy, Leon, tells us he is having a real good time at Mont-Lawn. Both myself and wife thank you for your kindness and love to the poorest of the poor. God will bless you and your helpers for your work of love, remembering how the Saviour said that "whoso giveth unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water, shall in no wise lose his reward."

Nearly five years ago I was led to God in a meeting at the Bowery Mission, and I have found companionship with Christ a constant help and comfort. God abundantly bless Dr. Klopsch in all his work for fallen humanity. We will bear the Children's Home in our prayers before the throne of heavenly grace both early and late."

Tenement children who have no papa, mama, Sunday School teacher, or kind missionary to present their case and ask an outing for them, plead their own cause by coming in person, rags and all, to the Bible House, or by writing out applications that are marvels of misspelling and good endeavor. Minnie's laborious epistle explained:

DEERE DR. KLOPSCH: i Nede it very Bad wood you be so kine an let me no if you like to let me Have Ten Dase in Mont-Lawn, Niack i wood Be verry much Pleased if you Do So i think you wood rite to me an let me no if you wood or not. Yore Loving Friend.

THE WISH AND THE PRAYER

OH that mine eye might closed be,
To what becomes me not to see;
That deafness might possess mine ear
To what concerns me not to hear;
That truth my tongue might always tie
From ever speaking foolishly!
That no vain thought might ever rest
Or be conceived within my breast;
That by each word, each deed, each thought,
Glory may to my God be brought!
But what are wishes? Lord, mine eye
On thee is fixed; to thee I cry.
Oh, purge out all my dross, my sin;
Make me more white than snow within;
Wash, Lord, and purify my heart,
And make it clean in every part;
And when 'tis clean, Lord, keep it so,
For that is more than I can do.

A STRANGE NEW YEAR'S CARD

ONE of the traits of the Hebrew in America is that though he may be slow to emulate the customs of his Christian neighbors, yet when he does so he is often quick to improve upon the original. Twenty-five or thirty years ago the Jewish New Year greetings were customarily expressed in writing. Recently the Jews have begun to adopt in some degree the Christian forms of Christmas, New Year's and Easter cards. Eliminating the distinctively Christian emblems from the illuminated cards, they print their New Year greetings in Hebrew, either on a separate small card or upon the larger and more elaborate design itself. Of late years there have been many original designs for conveying good wishes. One designer struck the keynote of Jewish sentiment by inventing a purely religious design for Jewish high holiday greeting cards. This is shown in the illustration on this page. It represents a synagogue shrine constructed of exquisitely tinted celluloid and bearing two gilded lions on top, with a white satin curtain descending in the centre. On the curtain, stamped in gold, is an English coat-of-arms around the Decalogue in Hebrew, and the Hebrew words: "May you be inscribed in the Book of Life for a Happy Year." When the curtain is lifted up, a three-inch scroll is revealed within the shrine. The scroll contains the Pentateuch in fine but very clear Hebrew type, a perfect miniature of the scroll which is found in every Jewish synagogue. The Jewish New Year celebration will be ushered in on the evening of the 23d inst., and, with but short intervals, it ends on the evening of October 16th.

TRAINED NURSE.
Remarks about Nourishing Food.

"A physician's wife, Mrs. Dr. Landon, gave me a packet of Grape-Nuts about a year ago, with the remark that she was sure I would find the food very beneficial, both for my own use and for my patients. I was particularly attracted to the food, as at that time the weather was very hot and I appreciated the fact that the Grape-Nuts required no cooking.

"The food was deliciously crisp, and most inviting to the appetite. After making use of it twice a day for three or four weeks, I discovered that it was a most wonderful invigorator. I used to suffer greatly from exhaustion, headaches and depression of spirits. My work had been very trying at times and indigestion had set in.

"Now I am always well and ready for any amount of work, have an abundance of active energy and cheerfulness and mental poise. I have proved to my entire satisfaction that this change has been brought about by Grape-Nuts food.

"The fact that it is predigested is a very desirable feature. I have had many remarkable results in feeding Grape-Nuts to my patients, and I cannot speak too highly of the food. My friends constantly comment on the change in my appearance. I have gained nine pounds since beginning the use of this food." Eleanor Miller, Trained Medical and Surgical Nurse, 515 Jeff. St., Bay City, Mich.

SUFFERING PIMA INDIANS

The Diversion of Water Has Made a Desert of Their Fertile Lands

SOMETIME ago the attention of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was directed to the condition of a large number of Indians of the Pima tribe, who were represented as bordering on destitution. With a view to ascertaining the exact facts, and for the purpose, also, of learning whether aid was necessary, we sent a letter of inquiry to Mr. S. M. McCowan, the superintendent of the Indian School Service at Phoenix, Ariz., who replied as follows:

The condition of these Indians is somewhat serious, and I have at various times used what influence I possessed toward assisting them by calling the attention of the government officials to their condition and making various suggestions for their relief. The Pima Indians number some 4,000, settled on three reservations, under the control of a single agent. The Indians on two of these reservations, the two small ones (the Gila Reservation and Salt River), are not suffering, and probably will not, inasmuch as they secure water from the canals that supply the white settlers as on the Salt River Reservation, or by means of underground currents of water which rise to the surface at convenient points as on the Gila Reservation; but on the Sacaton Reservation, much the largest of the three, the supply of irrigating water has been entirely cut off by the white settlers who have settled above them on the Gila River and appropriated all the water running in that stream. During the present season these Indians have not had a drop of water, except what has fallen in two or three slight showers in the early spring. These showers were enough to mature perhaps an eighth of a crop of wheat, nothing else. These industrious, independent and harmless Indians, whose boast it is that they know not the color of the white man's blood, who have always welcomed the white man and made it possible for him to live in Arizona and develop its great resources, have been deprived permanently of all water supply; and, if you know this country at all, you know that the land, without water enough to properly irrigate it, is utterly valueless. It seems to me the only way of relieving these deserving Indians and helping them to permanent prosperity, is for the government to appropriate sufficient funds to build storage water reservoirs which will impound the surplus storm waters and melting snows, and from which these waters can be discharged at such times and in such quantities as required. I am opposed very emphatically to beginning the making of paupers of these Indians by the issue of rations without any compensation in labor. Mr. Brosius, Agent for the Indian Rights Association, of Philadelphia, is on the reservation now investigating their needs, and he will take the part of these Indians actively upon his return to Washington.

It is to be hoped that the government will promptly take the necessary steps to relieve this peaceful and industrious people, who, through no fault of their own, have suddenly found their farms and gardens transformed into a desert.

Answered Prayers

Superintendent Franklin N. Wolcott, Bowdoin Square Tabernacle, Boston, Mass., writes:

On April 11 you gave in your paper a brief account of our Interdenominational Noonday Prayer Meeting. Since then we have received daily requests for prayer from all parts of the country, the writers saying they learned of our meeting through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our meetings are increasing in members, in interest and power, and in the number of conversions. During the last forty days we received 1,107 requests for prayer; 346 reported answers to prayer, and 62 started in the Christian life.

Old subscriber, Chicago, writes:

At a critical time I prayed to our dear Heavenly Father to remove my trouble if it was His will, promising to acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD if my prayer was answered. Now I write to redeem my promise as the trouble has entirely disappeared. Bless his Holy Name.

Girl Reader, Ill., writes:

I promised God that I would acknowledge my faith in him to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, if he would answer a prayer I asked. He has answered and I now give him the glory.

J. A. T., New York City, writes:

I desire to make manifest the presence of divine assistance in answer to prayer. Firmly believing in the existence of a Saviour but not experiencing heretofore, an intercession of the unseen, living hand, as a relief from deep trials, I do now believe in the function and power of our sincere petitions to him as it has certainly relieved me from despondency and despair and permanently removed a doubt which seemed improbable to believe.

Devoted Reader, Canajoharie, N. Y., writes:

I want to send in my testimony in regard to answered prayer. I promised the Lord I would do this if he would answer my prayer to let me hear from a dear friend, with whom I had some difficulty. Within a few days, a letter came through which a reconciliation ensued.

Mrs. E. W. H., Manu, Mo., writes:

I can say that God has directly answered many prayers for me. One I shall mention: I asked him for strength and health to do work that I had to do. He gave me both, and when I feel that I cannot (physically) do that which seems to be my duty, I ask the Lord for strength and he always helps me.

A. A. S., LeRoy, writes:

I have been lately cured in answer to prayer, and now desire to gratefully acknowledge God's goodness through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. F. L., Langdon, N. Y., writes:

I desire to acknowledge, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, my restoration to health in answer to prayer. I know He will answer prayer if we ask in faith and do not doubt.

S. J. E., Georgia, writes:

In our section the crops were dying of drought. I decided to go to God for the rain, resolving that if he would answer my prayer I would acknowledge it publicly. The day I made the request it rained, and next day the request was repeated and the hot thirst of our parching fields was quenched. I only know, like the healed blind man, that in answer to our cry we received the rain, and I feel it my duty to keep my promise and make the acknowledgment. Praise God!

H. E. H., New York City, writes:

I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answer to prayer. Through a misunderstanding I lost the confidence of a very dear friend. Being a firm believer in prayer, I prayed that the wrong might be righted. My prayer was answered and all is made right. Please publish, that it may encourage some who are in doubt.

Mrs. S. D. Ballard, Wash., writes:

We made a promise if God answered our prayers and opened a way for one whom we tenderly loved we would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He has answered, and we now will keep our pledge and give him the glory.

B. E., Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

Several weeks ago I was in great distress of mind, and I went to God in prayer with my trouble, promising if he heard my cry I would write to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. My prayer was answered. I certainly believe in prayer.

Seattle's "Wayside Mission"

The rescue and medical work founded in Seattle, Wash., by Capt. Alex. de Soto is making excellent progress. His floating hospital on the old steamship Idaho is crowded with patients to whom skilled physicians minister for the ailments of the body while the Christian workers of Capt. de Soto's band strive to touch the hearts of the unfortunates. There are on the hospital ship besides medical attendants, a matron, five nurses, a night watchman, a cook and a porter. On August 11th, the new "Wayside Mission" was opened at No. 119 Washington street, Seattle, where Capt. de Soto and his helpers are conducting a spiritual work on broader lines and with larger facilities than at the former location. The combined mission and hospital work are warmly approved by the citizens of Seattle and by the various churches. Anyone interested in the progress of this worthy movement may address the Superintendent at 119 Washington Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Johnny's Lesson

Johnny's lessons are hard to learn—
Sums to do and maps to draw;
A troublesome problem at every turn,
And perfect work is the teacher's law.

Johnny must take them one by one:
Do not look at the whole, my boy;
Step by step are our life-tasks done,
If our powers are bent to the tasks with joy.

Johnny will find in the future strife
That we fight our battles bit by bit,
And the hardest day on the field of life
Will pass if we joyfully enter it.

And, moment by moment, hour by hour,
Take the work and expect the pay;
From the folded bud springs the fragrant flower,
And God is watching our passing day.

Storm-Swept Texas Needs Our Help

THOUSANDS PERISH IN THE GREAT STORM OF SEPT. 8—GALVESTON'S PITIFUL CONDITION—"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" OPENS RELIEF WORK

ON the night of September 8th, the southern and central counties of the State of Texas were swept by a West Indian hurricane of widespread extent and unprecedented violence. For thirty hours it raged unabated, and it was accompanied by great tidal waves, which swept the entire coastline of the State, submerging many of the cities and towns along the Gulf and carrying death and devastation far inland. Nearly a hundred towns and villages suffered from the onrush of the great wall of water from the Gulf, and the hurricane which followed. The wind reached a maximum velocity of eighty-six miles an hour.

Six thousand persons are believed to have perished in the storm, and the damage to property is variously estimated at from $15,000,000 to $40,000,000.

The city of Galveston was the greatest sufferer, being in the centre of the storm track. Here, between two and three thousand persons are believed to have perished. A large part of the city was submerged, and all the railroad tracks leading to it in different directions were washed away. In Houston, many buildings were either partially or wholly destroyed. stores were flooded and a great deal of damage is reported. The following list gives an approximate idea of the loss of life, although it is probable that later information will increase the figures considerably.

Galveston, 3,000 dead; Chenango Junction, 4 dead, many missing; Brooksline, 9 dead, 50 injured; Tenbroke, 2 dead, 17 reported missing; Houston, 1 dead, 20 injured; Southville, many reported killed; Alvin wiped out, 7 dead; Rockport, reported destroyed; Sabine Pass, reported destroyed, 400 dead; Port Arthur, reported destroyed; Alta Loma, destroyed; Pearl, partly destroyed; Virginia Point, 10 drowned, many missing; Bolivar, reported destroyed; Hempstead, cut off; Corpus Christi, High Island, Stowell, Winnie, Brownsville, Lockport, Aransas Pass, Port Lavaca, all cut off; Seabroke, two known dead, others missing; La Porte, much damage done; Morgan's Point, three dead, many missing; Hitchcock, reported destroyed; Oceanland, swept away; Mustang Island, submerged and three resort hotels destroyed.

All the accounts of the storm show that it extended over an area of hundreds of miles from East to West, and that it carried destruction through half the State. Railroad trains were lifted from the track by the force of the wind. Buildings, whether of brick or wood, were levelled as though they had been straw. On the water front, steamers were stranded and many boats were wrecked. Telegraph lines were swept down in all directions. As the hurricane swept through the cotton belt, it is believed that the entire cotton crop may be destroyed.

Galveston is built on an island. For many hours after the storm, it was submerged and isolated. Only one man was able to get from Galveston through to Houston the day after the storm. A relief train started from Houston, but could not get further than within six miles of Virginia City—ten miles from Galveston—and it returned. The crew of the train found the prairie covered with lumber, debris, pianos, trunks, bedding, furniture and dead bodies. Two hundred bodies were counted from the windows of the train. All the tracks and bridges beyond were destroyed and the whole country was strewn with wrecked property. At a little place called Pearl, every house was levelled, and this sad condition of death and desolation was duplicated on every side for a hundred miles up and down the Gulf coast. From the train nothing could be seen of Galveston, the greater part being apparently submerged. At Virginia Point, the water stood fifteen feet deep in the streets. A Santa Fe train was wrecked in the storm near Alvin, several passengers being killed and a number injured. From the Red River, on the north to the Gulf, hardly a town or village escaped. From Austin west the storm swept the country bare of everything.

Eye-witnesses of the disaster at Galveston City who have reached Houston, say the city is a complete wreck. The storm began Saturday morning and by noon the whole city was alarmed and the people were abandoning their houses. The wind and rain were violent beyond description. By 3 p. m. the Gulf waters were rushing into the Bay. At dark the whole city was under water and its 40,000 souls were facing death. There were many instances of heroism, and many sad cases of suddenly bereaved fathers, mothers and children whose lamentations for their lost ones could be heard amid the storm. Seven hundred people huddled together for safety in the city hall, all more or less injured; the Orphan's Home, St. Mary's Infirmary, Rosenberg High School, Old Woman's Home, Catholic Orphan Asylum, Cotton Exchange, hotels, newspaper offices, railroad and steamship offices were all wrecked by the storm and many perished in these buildings. The big sea-going steamers, Alamo (American), Launton, Red Cross and Kendal Castle (British), Gylla (Norwegian), and an ocean liner, name unknown, were wrecked in the harbor and over 100 other craft of all sorts suffered a like fate. Eighty-five soldiers and two officers of Second Battery O, 1st U. S. Artillery, were drowned in barracks at Fort San Jacinto in the harbor. The mainland was strewn with wreckage and corpses. Seven hundred bodies were washed ashore at Virginia Point.

The disaster is one of the greatest ever known on the continent, and the loss of life may yet prove even more appalling. The storm originated near the Windward Islands in the West Indies, and swept through the Caribbean toward Cuba, where it caused great damage. It then passed over Southern Florida and into the Gulf, with the terrible results already stated. Galveston had previously suffered by severe storms in 1875 and 1891. Port Arthur, which is reported destroyed, was apparently destined to be a great shipping centre. Sabine Pass has also suffered heavily from earlier storm visitations.

Immediately after receiving the first intelligence of the disaster at Galveston, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD telegraphed to the Governor of Texas as follows:

"New York, Sept. 10, 1900.

"Hon. Jos. B. Sayers, Governor,
"Austin, Texas:

"Draw at sight on The Christian Herald for $1,000 for your relief work. How can we most speedily and effectively render help? Our best services are at your disposal. Louis Klopsch."

To this Governor Sayers replied, accepting the gift with thanks, and stating that the loss of life and property had been very great. Offers of help were also telegraphed by Dr. Klopsch to the Galveston and Houston authorities. Governer Sayers has organized relief committees and the work of aiding the sufferers is already under way. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has arranged to open a relief Headquarters in Galveston, and for that purpose has sent to the afflicted city as Commissioners, Gilson Willets, who accompanied Dr. Klopsch during his recent tour through famine-stricken India, and George A. Seaman, who conducted THE CHRISTIAN HERALD relief expedition on the steamboat Welcome during the great floods in the Lower Mississippi Valley in 1897. All contributions in support of the Galveston relief work will be received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and duly acknowledged in its columns. As the need is urgent, in order to avoid prolonged suffering, it is hoped our readers will respond liberally and quickly.

This is not a cry from a foreign land, but from our own stricken brothers and sisters at home, and it should not be permitted to go unheeded. Send your offering as quickly as possible to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, No. 92 Bible House, New York City.

The edge of your skirt is not a trifle.

A skirt is far from being a perfect skirt if it has an inferior binding

A poor binding always looks badly. It wears out quickly. It never fits properly and makes the edge of the skirt wrinkle and pucker.

It is unsatisfactory while it lasts and as it wears out quickly it has to be replaced and is far more expensive in the end than the best bindings made.

The best bindings made, either in Bias Velveteen or Brush Edge, are unquestionably the famous S. H. & M. Brand. Their superior excellence is conceded.

It is due to the high grade of materials used, the expert workmanship, their wide variety, perfection of fit to the curves of the skirt and extreme durability.

Look on the back or on the label of every yard of bias velveteen or brush edge skirt binding you buy for the S. H. & M. registered trade mark and insist on finding it there.

There are absolutely none "just as good."

FIT THE GROCER

Wife Made the Suggestion.

A grocer has excellent opportunity to know the effects of special foods on his customers. Mr. R. A. Lytle, of 557 St. Clair St., Cleveland, Ohio has a long list of customers that have been helped in health by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

He says, regarding his own experience: "Two years ago I had been drinking coffee and must say that I was almost wrecked in my nerves.

"Particularly in the morning I was so irritable and upset that I could hardly wait until the coffee was served, and then I had no appetite for breakfast and did not feel like attending to my store duties.

"One day my wife suggested that inasmuch as I was selling so much Postum Food Coffee there must be some merit in it, and suggested that we try it. I took home a package and she prepared it according to directions. The result was a very happy one. My nervousness gradually disappeared, and to-day my nerves are all right. I would advise everyone affected in any way with nervousness or stomach troubles, to leave off coffee and use Postum Food Coffee."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Star-Worshipers of Mesopotamia*

IN the towns along the lower Euphrates and Tigris, especially at Amara, Sukes Shiukh, Busrah and Mohammerah, there dwell an interesting people, variously known as Sabeans, Nasorians, or St. John Christians. They call themselves Mandaeans, and although numbering four or five thousand, they are, and have always been, entirely distinct from the Jews, Moslems and Christians among whom they have dwelt for centuries. Their origin is lost in obscurity, although the few scholars who have studied the subject trace their history through the maze of their religion to ancient Babylonia and Chaldea. In this remnant of a race and religion we seem to have an example of the oldest form of idolatry, star-worship, and many of their mysterious customs may throw a side-light upon the cult of ancient Babylonia. Mandaeism is not only of deep interest as the only existing religion compounded of Christian, heathen and Jewish elements, but it affords another proof of the early spread of religious ideas in the East, and the Babylonian origin of much that is supposed to be Alexandrian Gnosticism in a semi-Christian, semi-pagan garb.

Isolated by a creed, cult and language of their own, the Sabeans love their isolation, and do not intermarry with strangers nor accept a proselyte to their faith. Nearly all of them follow one of three trades. They raise the finest dairy products of Mesopotamia, they build a peculiar kind of light canoe, called mashoof, and all others are silversmiths. No traveler should visit their villages without carrying away specimens of their beautiful inlaid-work, black metal on silver and gold. A peaceful people they are, industrious, though mostly poor, and seldom affording trouble to their Turkish rulers. Both men and women have a remarkably fine physique; tall, of dark complexion, good features, and with long, black beards. Some of the men are typical patriarchs, even as we imagine Abraham, who left their present country for Haran. On ordinary days their dress does not distinguish them from Moslems or Jews, but on feast days they wear only white. Their women go about unveiled; they are rather taller, and have a more masculine cast of features than Moslem women.

The two great things that distinguish the Sabeans are their language and their religion. Both are remarkable. The former because of its long preservation among a dying people, and the latter as the most remarkable example of religious syncretism.

Although meeting Sabeans for years, and being their guest on frequent journeys up and down the rivers, I could find no satisfactory answer to the question what their real faith and cult were. The popular story, that they turn to the North Star when they pray, and "baptize" every Sunday, was all that Moslems or Christians could tell. Books of travel gave fragmentary, conflicting, and often grossly erroneous statements. According to some accounts, they were idolators; others classed them with Christians. An anonymous article in the London Standard, Oct. 19, 1894, entitled, "A Prayer-Meeting of the Star-Worshipers," curiously gave me the key to open the lock of their silence. Whoever wrote it must have been perfectly acquainted with their religious ceremonies, for when I translated it to a company of Sabeans at Amara they were dumbfounded. Knowing that I knew something, made it easy for them to tell me more.

All our investigations end as we began, by finding that the Sabeans "worship that which they know not," and profess a creed whose origin is hidden from them, and whose elements, gathered from the four corners of the earth, are as diverse as they are incongruous. Who is able to classify these elements, or among so much heterogeneous debris dig down to the original foundation of the structure? If we could, would we not, as in so many other cases, come back to Babylonia and the monuments?

Mars and Its Satellites*

IN recent years something interesting has been discovered relating to the planet Mars, which has been the subject of much thought and speculation. Mars had heretofore been described in the books as one of the planets that had no moon nor satellite. But lately it has been definitely ascertained that Mars has two satellites; that they are small; and that Mars hugs them so close to himself that it has been a difficult matter to find them. The honor of having discovered these moons belongs to Professor Hall, of the Washington Observatory, Washington, D. C.

The discovery was the result of a diligent and persevering effort, combined with a perfect knowledge of the situation, and just what was required to accomplish a determined purpose. If Mars had any satellites, Professor Hall was resolved to know it; and he found them, though they were small and close to the planet, as we have said.

The larger of the two is twenty-two and one-half miles in diameter, 16,500 miles distant from the planet, and revolves about it in thirty hours and eighteen minutes, about six hours more than Mars takes to rotate on itself. So far no new rule or principle appears to be involved.

But the small satellite, about eighteen miles in diameter, and 4,000 miles away, revolves about the planet in seven hours and thirty-nine minutes, flying around more than three times while the planet is revolving once.

This appears to be something new in nature. There is nothing like it known in the solar system, where a satellite revolves about a primary in less time than the planet turns on its own axis.

Can this new course of procedure be accounted for; and if so, how? There is one way in which we would account for it, and if true, as we believe, it will fully explain the movements of the satellites of Mars; and that is, that the planet itself is a large dynamo, though small in comparison to the sun; and that this is so, is made more apparent by the fact that the polar lights of the planet make it manifest that he is under the influence and power of electric currents: that is, that there is passing through the centre of Mars a current of electricity which, according to the electro-magnetic law, has a current of magnetic force passing one way around it in direct ratio to the quantity of electric current through the wire or centre of the planet.

As this magnetic current is strongest close to the wire or electric current, and decreases inversely as the square of the distance, therefore these satellites of Mars, being in close proximity to it, and under the influence of this magnetic force, are carried around it faster than the planet itself rotates.

If the satellites were 30,000 to 50,000 miles away, they would be beyond the magnetic force, and would then revolve steadily about the planet, being carried around it by the power or attraction of gravitation that reaches out everywhere: revolving on the same plan of procedure on which our moon is caused to revolve about the earth.

The following is a plain, straightforward statement of the way in which an aggravated case of rheumatism was conquered. The words ring true; but anyone who is inclined to doubt the remarkable story can easily investigate it, for it is related by Mr. H. L. Burns, of 44 Brinckerhoff Avenue, Utica, N. Y., one of the best known grocers of that city. When seen at his store at the junction of Park Avenue and Mary Street, Mr. Burns said:

"Six years ago this month I began to feel a slight pain in my hips and legs, and as the pain grew worse it extended to my feet. They swelled all out of shape and the pain was dreadful. Finally my feet began to grow numb and I could barely hobble about. One day when I had come down to the store I got to the steps and could go no farther. I tried for several minutes, but could not raise my feet. Finally a passer-by helped me into the store and I at once put myself in a doctor's care. Electricity was tried, but without relief; in fact the feeling in my feet was so far gone that I scarcely felt the full force of the battery.

"One day Miss Kernans, a member of the family of the late Senator Kernans of this city, told me about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and asked me to try them. I said I would, and I made up my mind I would give them a fair trial, so I bought ten boxes. In my opinion the majority of people are not willing to give a remedy a fair trial. I knew that two or three boxes would not remove as bad a case as mine, but I found that I had bought more than were necessary. I began to find great relief by the time I had used five boxes, and by the time I had finished the seventh box I was entirely relieved. I had no more pain, swelling or numbness than I have to-day, and that was five years ago.

"I have recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to a great many people, for there is no doubt in my mind that anyone who is suffering with rheumatism will be relieved if the pills are given a fair trial."

[Signed]

Trivial Excuses*

Procrastination the Most Prevalent of All Impediments to Christ's Kingdom

SO much emphasis has in these days been placed, and rightly, on the gentleness and love of Christ, that there is danger of forgetting that there was a sterner side to his character. He insisted on his kingly character and claims, and made no secret of the consequences of rejecting them. He would be satisfied with no second place in the hearts or affections of his followers, but boldly demanded a place above wife or child, father or mother. He must be supreme, and they who would not give him that position were not worthy to be counted his disciples. He pleads with men to come to him that they may have life; his invitations are infinitely cordial and loving; he will receive the outcast and the criminal; but all who come must be sensible of the privilege and must pledge their allegiance to him. Whatsoever claims business and family and social relations may have are recognized, but far above and supreme over all is the claim of Christ. Anything that is an obstacle to his sway must be ruthlessly sacrificed, though it be as dear as a right eye, as precious as a right hand. His yoke is easy and his burden is light, but it is a yoke, and he is no true follower of Christ who would shake it from his shoulders or shrink from the obligations it imposes.

A commonplace remark intended to turn the conversation away from personal duty to a general topic in which all could agree, elicited the parable of the Great Supper. It is a different parable, both in its occasion and its lesson, from the parable reported in Matthew 22. In the latter there is definite opposition and a spirit of rebellion and malignity that do not appear here. "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God" is the pious platitude of the guest. But in Christ's hands the pointless remark becomes a text for an appropriate lesson, and, as usual, a story is told to bring the lesson home. Some wealthy man makes a feast, and sends out his invitations beforehand. These are accepted, but when the appointed day comes, and the servants are sent around to remind the guests of their engagement, they made excuses for not keeping it. They were, no doubt, genuine reasons, and there was nothing wrong in their occupations. The land must be examined, the oxen must be tried, and it would be a slight to a bride to leave her to attend a feast. But if the guests had been in earnest in their desire to attend, some way would have been found to keep the engagement. It might have involved vexation, possibly some disappointment or loss, but a way would have been found. The host was hurt; he perceived that his guests did not care enough for his feast to make a sacrifice to come. So he declares that they shall not come, but the feast shall not be wasted, for there are plenty of hungry people who will know how to appreciate such a repast. So the significant announcement is made that the house will be filled.

It is the small things of life that do the most mischief in our day in keeping men from Christ. As Gospel invitations are made every day, there is a feeling that they may be accepted at any time. It will do just as well another week or another year. There is some special claim just now on the attention; there is some social relation that must be dropped; there is some object to be achieved, and when this is done then we will be more at liberty to attend to this matter of religion. Thousands of men, now far stricken in years, fully intended when they were young and when they were middle-aged, to make this a definite business. If they had been told that they would put it off till it was too late, they would not have believed it. They would not definitely reject Christ. At school and college they were too busy with their studies; when they had graduated they were too much engrossed with the choice of a profession, or with love-making. When they were married and settled they would have a better opportunity. Then there came business anxieties and the cares of a family, and so the question of the soul was postponed, and so it has been from year to year. As the old proverb has it: "By the road of by and bye one reaches the town of never." Christ's injunction: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God" needs to be sounded in every ear. It is dangerous to delay and even if life brought no risks, it is dishonoring to God. The offer of eternal life! Surely there is no boon that this life contains that can be compared with that and the possibility of missing it is the greatest of all calamities. The announcement is made that all things are now ready. If the offer were a fortune it would receive immediate attention, yet this offer, infinitely more important, is deferred for a more convenient season, until it is too late.

PRAYED FOR TWENTY-FIVE YEARS

A THRILLING scene was witnessed in the Gospel Tent in New York a few days ago. Among the crowds gathered at one of the evening services was a lady who paid close attention to Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt's address. She was accompanied by a man, evidently her husband, who appeared less familiar than she with the order of the exercises. At the close of his address, Mr. Pratt invited any one present who desired to make confession of Christ to do so there and then. This lady was among those who responded. In a voice trembling with emotion, she told of the conversion of her husband. For twenty-five years, she said, she had been praying that he might be born again. No result had come, but she could not bear to give up hope. Day after day, year after year, her chief supplication was that he might be saved. When the tent meetings began this summer, she had begged him to accompany her. At first he declined, but one night he yielded to her urging and went with her. He was deeply impressed, and he went again and again, and at last she had the joy of knowing that he had given himself to Christ. "He cannot speak for himself in such an assembly as this," she said; "but he is truly converted, and he is here to-night rejoicing in Christ." After she had taken her seat, her husband rose. "I can speak for myself," he said. And then in solemn earnest tones, he told how he had come to the meetings a stranger to Christ and indifferent to the Gospel; and how the Holy Spirit had moved on his soul bringing him into light and peace. It was a short but sincere, manly testimony, evidently coming straight from the heart.

This is only one of many remarkable conversions which have occurred this summer. They show that even when many churches are closed and the time seems unpropitious for Gospel effort, God blesses a work done in his name. We regret to learn that this year there is a deficiency in the contributions for the expenses. There ought not to be any difficulty in raising the small sum required for a work the usefulness of which has been so abundantly proved. Any sums sent to this office toward the amount needed—which is about five hundred dollars—will be gladly received and forwarded to the Committee in charge.

Missionary Martyrs

A despatch from Tien-Tsin brings a rumor of the murder of sixteen Protestant missionaries at the Fen-cho-fu and Taiku stations, China, during July. The victims were chiefly Americans. No confirmation of the news has been received by the missionary boards in New York, and they still cherish the hope that the missionaries may have escaped. For the past two months fears have been entertained that the nine Congregational missionaries in the Shansi Province suffered the same fate as their fellow workers at Pao-ting-fu. Messengers have been unable to reach the missions in the Shansi Province on account of the horde of Boxers thronging the country. At Fen-cho-fu were stationed Mr. and Mrs. Ernest R. Atwater and Charles W. Price, and at Taiku Mr. and Mrs. Dwight H. Clapp, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Williams and Miss Mary L. Partridge. The representatives of the Missionary Alliance came from Sweden.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere. Over $28,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions Will be Answered Oct. 24

1. The Bible teaches that a wife should be "subject to her husband" in all things. Does such subjection imply implicit obedience even if it should lead on her part to a life of hopeless, slavish toil, that would wreck both mind and body, while the husband takes life more easily and apparently cares little for the consequences to his partner?

2. A certain animal is occasionally mentioned in Scripture as a type of wicked persons. Give five passages in which the resemblance appears.

3. Is it our Christian duty to forgive one who has defrauded us, even though he neither asks or desires our forgiveness?

4. Is the gloomy picture of old age in Ecclesiastes 12 a portraiture of old age in general, or only of the old age of those who have not remembered their Creator in the days of their youth?

5. Where, when and how did the expression to "keep under one's thumb" originate?

6. Is a Christian business man justified in selling a particular article at cost price, with the object of causing the public to think that all his goods are below the market prices?

7. Why are the bells tolled for the dead and when was the custom introduced?

8. Is a father wise in opposing the early marriage of his children when he has no objection to the particular marriages on their merits?

9. In what sense is the dragon associated with China's religion and history?

10. Ought the sacrament to be refused to persons who, having been divorced, have married again?

QUESTIONS OF THE WEEK

1. What attitude ought we, as a nation, to take toward the millions of men who are willing to work, but are unable to obtain employment?

The difficulty lies not in universal inadequacy of employment but in its unequal distribution. Bring the man and the work together. Our cities are crowded with idle men while in many portions of our land it is absolutely impossible to procure farm laborers. Government, both national and state, should continually circulate reliable information as to the needs and condition of the market for labor, as information of the weather and kindred topics is sent out for the benefit of the sailor and the farmer. Our country is not overpopulated at all, but the idle are congested, often through no fault of their own, in our large cities. Emigration to the thinly settled portions of our land should be encouraged by the national government by gifts of free land, and loans of money for railroad fares, to purchase farm utensils, etc., and by the appropriation of sums of money to be spent, under government control, to build roads and for irrigation purposes, and the like. This, with a reasonable restriction of pauper, ignorant and otherwise undesirable immigration, will speedily settle the problem of the unemployed who are willing to work but cannot find it.

H. C. UNDERHILL.

2. What is the most successful method of combating intemperance?

1. Legislation. Laws should be enforced forbidding the making or selling of all intoxicating liquors, except by competent physicians, who are bound by law to use it only for medicinal purposes. 2. Education. The injurious effects of alcoholic drinks on the brain and other organs of the body should be so thoroughly taught to the young in the public schools that all such stimulants will be regarded as a most deadly enemy to the body. 3. Moral suasion. Through the church, reform societies, etc., men who are most subject to intemperance on account of the conditions of life, should be brought under the influence of higher principles and nobler planes of living and thinking.

Thus by education and moral suasion the demand will die out and consequently the supply will cease; and by legislation those who cannot or will not be reached by the other two forces will be forced by law to abandon intemperance. FREDERICK H. BATES.

3. What three things, other than divine grace, are most essential for one's happiness?

As regards man's earthly existence, he has three beings: physical, intellectual and moral; and in order that he may be happy, it is necessary that all of these be uniformly developed, and so regulated as to obtain a just equilibrium. Therefore, I would say that, other than divine grace, the three most important requisites for one's happiness are: First, a sound body, with perfect health; second, a well-balanced mind, capable of adaptability, or of adjusting one's self to his immediate circumstances; third, "a conscience void of offense." CHAS. D. HANGER.

ANOTHER OPINION

First, good health; second, worthy, congenial, remunerative occupation; third, congenial home and friends. JOSEPH HAMILTON.

4. What remunerative employments are open to women living at home and continuing in the performance of home duties?

There are quite a number of employments for women who are obliged to take them up at home. Some require special instruction, while others simply demand neatness and common sense. The following list is one of many which could be made: 1. Taking boarders; 2. Gardening (flowers and vegetables); 3. Home bakery; 4. Canned fruits and jellies; 5. Laundry; 6. Raising poultry; 7. Raising cows; 8. Giving parlor lectures; 9. Giving readings and recitations; 10. Giving music lessons; 11. Giving painting lessons; 12. Embroidery work; 13. Dressmaking (to a limited extent); 14. Knitting or crocheting; 15. Authorship; 16. Battenberg lace work; 17. Cleaning and pressing clothing; 18. Private kindergarten. Of course, some of these employments —such as dressmaking and kindergarten work —could hardly be carried on profitably where there was a large family to be cared for. There would not be much profit in knitting or crocheting unless one could give a great deal of time to it, but the others are quite remunerative. EDITH C. ROBINSON.

5. When and where was the first postal card made?

August 1, 1869, in Austria. They were called "correspondenz karte," and were invented by Dr. E. Harmann, of the Imperial Academy of Vienna. Stamped paper, much like the postal, was issued earlier, and unstamped cards are said to have been used even earlier in Japan.

CAROLINE SCHNEIDER.

6. Where and how did the signs for planting according to the moon originate?

The custom of planting according to the moon is a relic of moon-worship, and is of great antiquity. The idea that the phases of the moon influence plant-life seems to have existed among many pagan races living far apart, as for instance, the Druids of Britain and the fire-worshipers of Persia. We still find in the agricultural districts of all countries some adherents to this superstition—for it is nothing more. GOODLOE HARPER.

7. In the sale of a house, a horse, or a piece of merchandise, the seller being a professed Christian, is it his duty to point out the defects which the intending purchaser may have overlooked, even though by so doing he should lose his customer?

The seller is morally though not legally bound to point out defects in the article he offers for sale. For instance: He offers a balky horse for sale and puts on him the price he is actually worth, in view of that defect. A customer looking the horse over and not knowing of the defect, thinks the price extraordinarily low for such an animal and buys him. He cannot complain that he is cheated, for he paid no more for the animal than he was worth and it may be contended that he should not have purchased until he had tried the horse. But he feels that the seller in not disclosing the defect did not treat him fairly. The purchaser has a right to say that the seller did not act on the Golden Rule. The seller is not justified in taking advantage of his customer's ignorance or carelessness. If he begins to do so, he is likely to get so morally obtuse that he would pass a counterfeit bill on a half-blind man if he was so unfortunate as to have taken one by mistake.

ROBERT WYNN.

8. What great king decided to have a vast library, which after infinite pains and research finally dwindled down to three words?

According to the tradition, Dabshelim, a King of India, was ambitious to have the largest library in the world. He accumulated so many books that a hundred brachmans were needed to keep them in order and a thousand dromedaries were used to transport them from place to place. Dabshelim, being unable to read all the books, commanded his three ablest brachmans to make extracts from them. After twenty years labor, they had made a compilation of 12,000 volumes, which thirty camels could carry. These were afterward reduced to fifteen camel-loads, to ten, to four, to two, and at last there were just enough books to conveniently load a mule. Dabshelim, now aged, sent for Pilpay, his wise vizier, and explained that the library was yet too large for his reading. Pilpay, with the King's approval, himself undertook the task of condensation. He wrote upon a palm leaf four brief paragraphs. The first comprised the whole history of mankind (and therefore was an epitome of the library) in three words: "Born, suffer, die." The lesson from these was to live the good and the true, to govern our passions and to trust in God, the fountain of virtue and happiness. RICHARD VYSE.

9. What is the origin of the phrase: "A little bird told me?"

It is directly traceable to Eccles. 10: 20: "Curse not the king, no, not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter." In part, however, the phrase may have its origin in the story of the "talking bird" as told in the Arabian Nights. This story has been reproduced in various forms, the principal one being the fairy story of Prince Chery and his cousin Fairstar. They, according to the story, obtained the little green bird that could tell all secrets. G. A. HAURY.

10. Is it wise or otherwise to give "pocket-money" or "spending-money" to children, and what rule should parents in ordinary circumstances observe in this respect?

To teach the child not only the value of money, but the difficulty of obtaining it, as well as the right use of it, should be the duty of every parent. Can this be best done where the money is given outright? Many maintain that it cannot, but that practically all should be earned. Should we favor a stipulated monthly allowance, we should teach its value by requiring that certain pleasures, delicacies, or even necessities, be procured by the same, or else gone without. This teaches forethought and prudence in the child, and leads it, as it learns the value of money, to invent ways of obtaining it. Many think that it is better to have practically all the money earned by the performance of small duties, thus teaching the value of work at the same time. The lessons in wisdom of choice, good judgment, prudence and economy, which also follow, prove that it is wise for the child to have some money truly its own. My rule would be to pay for certain labors, not those of love, etc., requiring either a proper expenditure or saving of the money, and then to refuse absolutely to give money for trifles whenever their fancy calls for it.

MISCELLANEOUS QUESTIONS

Reader, Hicks Store, Va. A minister whom I heard lately said that he doubted whether a Christian who had not joined the Church could be saved. Has he Scriptural warrant for such an assertion?

He probably based his assertion of doubt on some such passage as Luke 9: 26, in which Christ demanded public confession of him. There are other forms of public confession besides that of joining a church, but that is the ordinary and recognized mode. It is the duty of every Christian to identify himself with a Christian church, that he may make it known where he stands, that he may help in advancing Christ's kingdom and that his own soul may be nourished by the association with other Christians; but we believe many who have not joined any church will be saved.

Inquirer, Macon, Ga. 1. Was any city of America ever the capital of Portugal? I have seen a reference to "the American Capital of Portugal." 2. Who was the first Portuguese king of Brazil? 3. Who was the last?

1. Rio de Janeiro was, in 1808, the seat of the Portuguese government, the only instance in history where a colonial city has sustained such relation to its mother country. With Napoleon's invasion of Portugal, Don Joao VI., then Prince Regent, accompanied by the Queen, court and royal family, took refuge in Brazil, and, from Rio Janeiro, sought to govern his dominions in Portugal. 2. In 1815, he conferred upon Brazil the title of Kingdom, and in 1816, upon the death of the Queen, became its first King after it had been so dignified, being crowned monarch of the united kingdom of Portugal, Brazil and Algarres. As a colony, however, Brazil had long known allegiance to Portuguese princes. Her first Portuguese monarch, ruling her independently of Portugal was Dom Pedro I., who abdicated. 3. Dom Pedro II., who was exiled. He died in Paris, 1891.

Reader, Montclair, N. J. 1. What is the numerical strength (estimated) of the heathen population of the world to-day? 2. What countries are still unevangelized? 3. I have seen somewhere a computation which declared that if the entire human race, from Adam's time till now, had lived, the surface of the earth would not be large enough to hold them. Is this true?

1. Between 800,000,000 and 900,000,000. 2. Parts of Tibet, Afghanistan, Belochistan, Central Africa, and probably remote parts of the inhabited polar regions. 3. According to a calculation recently made by a Chicago statistician, the entire human race from the Creation (assuming it to have been 6,000 years ago) till now, if alive and each generation averaging forty years, could find standing room on an island the size of Papua, Borneo or Madagascar. The present living population of 1,450,000,000 could all stand together within a circle a little over fifteen miles in diameter.

Student, Morristown, N. J. What is the "golden rule" of Confucius, and how did he express it?

It occurs in his Conversation book 15, chapter 22, and is expressed briefly in eight simple words, viz:

Ki su pok uk uk sic v ing.
Self what not wish, not do to man.

E.M.H., Appleton, N.Y. What will become of our bodies if, at the resurrection there is, according to II. Cor. 5: 1, a body prepared for us which is eternal?

It is not clear from the epistles whether Paul expected that the actual bodies of the dead would be glorified at the resurrection; or whether a new body would be conferred. He evidently thought (I. Cor. 15: 52) that those who were alive at the time would retain their bodies, but that those bodies would undergo a change. In I. Thess. 4: 14 he represents Christ as bringing with him those who sleep in him, which indicates a condition of conscious life apart from the body. It really does not signify to the believer whether he hopes for a new body or for a transformation of his present body.

Mary L., Washburn, Minn. What does it mean to be a "King's Daughter?"

We presume you refer to the Order of the King's Daughters and Sons. The Order was founded in 1886. The President is Mrs. Margaret Bottome. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, editor of the official organ of the Order, The Silver Cross, has written several leaflets defining the object of the Order, and they may be had by applying to the International Order of The King's Daughters and Sons, 156 Fifth avenue, New York.

F. E. F., Seaboard, N. C. 1. Please explain how the quantity of rainfall is measured. 2. Of how many stars is the Southern Cross composed?

1. Rainfall is measured by means of an instrument called the rain-gauge, usually "a cylindrical vessel of not less than six inches in diameter, having a sharp upper rim and a vertical interior surface beneath which the gathered fall is protected from evaporation." This rainfall is measured by various devices, the instrument being in most instances self-recording. Average for given territory is made up from rain-gauges stationed at different points within its radius. 2. Seven; the four largest being Alpha (of the first magnitude), Beta, Gamma, Delta.

A clerical reader in Carrington, N. Dak., sends this interesting suggestion:

As a minister who has been a farmer, I enclose the following question: Would it not be wise for many weak churches to provide with a parsonage a glebe of from forty to sixty acres? For from this might not their pastor, by putting in nearly half of his time, realize about $200 help every year both to himself and the church?

Mrs. G. H. H., Burlington, Colo. 1. We desire to form a mothers' circle of some kind and would like instructions as to the mode of procedure and the special lines of work to be taken up and as to any helps that we might be able to secure from the Mother's Congress. 2. We feel the need of a Young Men's Christian Association, also of a Young Women's Christian Association and of reading rooms under such auspices. We would like a copy of the by-laws and constitution and of any other helps along this line. Also information as to the starting of a library.

1. Mrs. E. R. Weeks, Corresponding Secretary of the National Congress of Mothers, 3408 Harrison St., Kansas City, Mo., will take pleasure in giving all the information you want. 2. Write to the Secretary of your State Y. M. C. A., Mr. W. M. Danner, Kittredge Building, Denver, Colo.

Mrs. Q. A. W., Townsend, Mass. A man is justified in employing such safeguards as will prevent thieves from stealing his property on Sunday or any other day. ...POOR JACK'S GOSPEL PILOT

THE STORY OF CAPT. NICKERSON'S LIFE-WORK AMONG THE SAILORS OF BOSTON : : : :

THE Seaman's Friend Society, at Boston, has had a long and honorable history, and has witnessed the conversion of hundreds of sailors, who have come to regard it as almost a "home for soul and body." The rooms are large and cheery, well lighted at night, and there is always a genial welcome for the sailor. This society grew out of one formed in 1812, "to distribute religious literature among seamen, and to aid them in holding divine services on vessels out of port." In 1818, in a sail loft, on Central Wharf, the first sailors' meeting was held in this country, as far as is known. Rev. William Jenks, D.D., who conducted services, was perhaps the first minister to preach regularly to sailors on shore. He was a great friend to seamen. By his acknowledged earnestness, he earned the friendly distinction among the tars of being called "The Sky Pilot Preacher." As a result, in part of his toil, the Boston Seaman's Home was organized December, 1827, at a meeting in Dr. Lyman Beecher's church. Two years afterwards, a chapel was built; later, a sailor's home was added on Purchase street; and after several migrations the work was finally located in its present pleasing and ample quarters. Chapel and reading-rooms are opened daily to welcome as many as call of the 150,000 sailors landing annually in the port of Boston.

The report of the Life Saving Service shows the Second District, which comprises the coast of Massachusetts, to be the most exposed and perilous of the twelve into which the coast and lake region of the United States is divided. It has far more than its share of disasters. Considering the mighty influence of sailors for good or ill; that commerce depends on their courage, fidelity and skill; considering, too, their exposure to dangers at sea, and to temptation on land, it is particularly incumbent upon Christian men and women to consider well the temporal comfort and eternal salvation of poor Jack. Rev. S. S. Nickerson, Chaplain of the Boston Seaman's Friend Society, has an interesting congregation Sunday mornings and evenings, gathered from the shores of all lands. I recently attended one of these meetings. The sermon was on "Peter's Hooks and Lines," and I was impressed with the speaker's way of driving home the truth with metaphor, simile and anecdote connected with the sea until an old sailor feels that he is "harpooned for fair." He said: "The North End is good fishing ground. We who are fishers of men like to work in a locality like this. When you once catch a sailor you generally land him for good. I have been working for sailors for about twenty-three years, and am glad God has let me do as much for them as he has." The Chaplain's bronzed face tells of a long sea-faring life. He was born in Chatham, Cape Cod; his father, Solomon Nickerson, was a sea captain and a church member; his mother, a godly woman, made long voyages with her husband, and was a good sailor, too. The Chaplain grew up among sea-faring men, who earned their living on the sea, battling with its dangers and enduring many hardships and privations. He says: "Our home was near the sea. Before the village the Atlantic stretched out 3,000 miles, and the sea, which is never at rest, beat a tattoo on the sands 365 days in the year. Stormy nights, 'Hardy's Store' was the place where the men gathered and spun 'yarns.' They came with oil skins, rubbers and sou'westers, ready for any emergency. At the sound of gun, or the flash of torch or rocket, these men would rush out into the darkness, launch the life-boats—and away they would go through the breakers to the relief of ship-wrecked mariners.

The Chaplain recognizes the social needs of the sailor's nature, and does everything to make "Sailors' Dinners" and "Social Hours" at the Home big and bright events. Three hundred tars seated around a turkey dinner is a sight worth a trip to see. Sailors' suppers are frequently given by some church, or by some Y. P. S. C. E. Seamen are hungry folk, with appetites whetted by wind, and a supper requires about eighty pounds of meat, sixteen quarts of beans, two hundred rolls, twenty gallons of coffee, ten pounds sugar, a box of oranges, a bushel of apples and twenty cakes. It takes about twenty young ladies to wait on the tars, and altogether the feast is a most happy picture. After supper, a musical and literary entertainment is usually given.

Mr. Fred P. Greenwood, the Chaplain's assistant, visits every ship that comes into port, and has carried the Gospel aboard six hundred ocean steamers. He produced some interesting figures, showing that 47,000 visits have been made to sailors' rooms; 45,000 invitations have been distributed; 12,660 sailors have been in attendance at religious services, and 8,000 at temperance meetings; 512 have asked for prayers; 300 have signed the pledge; 160 meals have been given shipwrecked men; 1,800 sailors have been entertained at the "Sailors' Suppers," given by different churches. $12,681.44 was spent by the society last year for the seamen. Many conversions are reported.

A feature of the work is the "Floating" Y. P. S. C. E., which numbers among its members men of our regular navy, as well as ordinary seamen. Meetings are held every week. The Chapel has, among other consecrated workers, Miss Perry, Miss Frink, Mrs. Downing, Miss Covill, Miss Klous. The Chaplain's wife, Mrs. Nickerson, the daughter of a sea captain, is her husband's helpmeet and coadjutor. Rev. A. McKenzie, D.D., is the president of the society; C. F. Stratton, its secretary, and George Gould, its treasurer.

EVANGELIST SANKEY'S TOUR

Singing to Great Audiences in the English and Irish Cities

IRA D. SANKEY, for many years the associate of the late evangelist, D.L. Moody, in his Gospel work, has recently been singing the message of salvation to vast audiences in the leading cities of England and Ireland. In Cork, he was enthusiastically greeted by a large gathering at the Assembly Rooms, where he gave a "Service of Song." He made a brief address referring to his former visit to the Irish cities with Mr. Moody twenty-seven years ago. Relating the story of the origin of some of our best Gospel hymns, he told the following: He had been in the habit of taking Fanny Crosby from New York to the Northfield Conference, so that she would hear such expositions of the Scriptures as would enable her to write hymns that would live. One night, after speaking very beautifully, she wound up with the lines:

Some day the silver chord will break,
And I no more as now shall sing,
But, oh, the joy when I shall wake
Within the palace of the King;
And I shall see him face to face,
And tell the story saved by grace.

She thrilled the audience with her new hymn. As he led her back to her seat, for she had been blind from childhood, he said, "Where did you get those beautiful words?" "O, Mr. Sankey, I put them away for private use," she replied. He said, "Keep them there; you ought to have something private after giving the world over four thousand hymns." Six weeks later, he was astonished to see the hymn reproduced. He cut it out at once, and said to his friend, Mr. Stebbens, "Wed this to a good tune right away," and the history of the hymn from that day on was that it was one of the most useful and popular of the sacred songs.

In London Mr. Sankey had a welcome which amounted to a popular demonstration, at his first meeting at Exeter Hall, where the throng not only crowded the building, but rendered the street impassable. He sang the Gospel hymns with all the old-time fervor, and his reminiscences of his life-long associate, Mr. Moody, were listened to with interest.

Martyrs at Pao-Ting-Fu

As reports of Chinese barbarities during the fateful month of July continue to come in, horrors multiply, and names well-known in social, scholastic and missionary circles are daily added to the list of Americans who have paid the penalty of their lives for their faith. Among other victims of the merciless Boxers, Dr. Cortlandt VanRensselaer Hodge, son of the Secretary of the Educational Board of Foreign Missions, and his wife, who was Miss Elsie Campbell Sinclair, are mentioned, both members of prominent Philadelphia families. They gave up social pleasures to devote themselves to missionary work.

A year ago Dr. VanRensselaer surrendered opportunities here, and he and his bride went to Pao-Ting-Fu, where, with other servants of God, they were butchered by the Boxers between June 30 and July 1. Dr. G. Yardley Taylor, who was in charge of the hospital at Pao-Ting-Fu, Rev. F. E. Simcox, his wife and three children, Miss Mary S. Morrill, Miss Annie A. Gould, Rev. Horace J. Pitkin and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Bagnall and children appear in the list of Pao-Ting-Fu martyrs. A special dispatch from Shanghai states that 20,000 native Christians were massacred in the northern provinces, women being subjected to unspeakable barbarities. Another from Yokohoma reports the slaying of two Japanese and several hundred Chinese and Korean Christians on the Korean border by Chinese.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT.

THE RADIANT CHRIST

Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Rom. 8: 9: . . . Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

THERE is nothing more desirable than a pleasant disposition. Without it we cannot be happy ourselves, or make others happy. When we have lost our temper or become impatient under some light cross, we suddenly awaken to new appreciation of proper equipoise of nature. We wish we had been born with self-balance. We envy those people who bear themselves through life without any perturbation, and we flatter ourselves that however little self-control we may now have, the time will come, under the process of years, when we will be mellowed and softened, and the wrong things which are in us now will then be all right, forgetful of the fact that an evil habit in our nature will grow into larger proportions, and that an iniquity not corrected will become the grandfather of a whole generation of iniquities. So that people without the grace of God in the struggle and amid the annoyances and exasperations of life are apt to become worse instead of better.

Now, the trouble is that we have a theory abroad in the world that a man's disposition cannot be changed. A man says, "I am irascible in temper, and I can't help it." Another man says, "I am revengeful naturally, and I can't help it." A man says, "I am impulsive, and I can't help it." And he tells the truth. No man can correct his disposition. I never knew a man by force of resolution to change his temperament, but by his grace God can take away that which is wrong and put in that which is right; and I know and you know people who, since their conversion, are just the opposite of what they used to be. In other words, we may, by the Spirit of God, have the disposition of Jesus Christ implanted in our disposition, and we must have it done or we will never see heaven. "If any man have not the disposition of Jesus Christ, he is none of his."

In the first place,

The Spirit of Christ

was a spirit of gentleness. Sometimes he made wrathful utterance against Pharisees and hypocrites, but the most of his words were kind and gentle and loving and inoffensive and attractive. When we consider the fact that he was omnipotent, and could have torn to pieces his assailants, the wonder is greater. We often bear the persecution and abuse of the world because we cannot help it. Christ endured it when he could have helped it. Little children who always shy off at a rough man, rushed into his presence and clambered on him, until the people begged the mothers to take them away. Invalids so sore with wounds that they could not bear to have anyone come near them, begged Christ just to put his hand upon the wound and soothe it. The mother with the sickest child was willing to put the little one in Christ's arms. Self-righteous people rushed into his presence with a woman of debased character, and said, "Now, annihilate her, blast her, kill her." Jesus looked at her, and saw she was sorry and repentant; and he looked at them, and he saw they were proud and arrogant and malignant, and he said, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone at her." A blind man sat by the wayside making a great ado about his lack of vision. They told him to hush up and not bother the Master. Christ stooped to him and said, "What wilt thou that I do unto thee?" Gentleness of voice, gentleness of manner, gentleness of life.

We all admire it, whether we have any of it or not. Just as the rough mountain bluff and the scarred crag love to look down into the calm lake at their feet and as the stormiest winter loves to merge into the sunshiny spring, so the most precipitate and impulsive and irascible nature loves to think of the gentleness of Christ. How little we have of it! How little patience in treating with enemies! We have so little of the gentleness of Christ we are not fit for Christian work half the time. We do not know how to comfort the bereft or to encourage the disheartened or to take care of the poor. Even our voice of sympathy is on the wrong pitch.

My sister had her arm put out of joint, and we were in the country and the neighbors came in and they were all sympathetic and they laid hold of the arm and pulled, and pulled mightily until the anguish was intolerable; but the arm did not go to its place. Then the old country doctor was sent for, and he came in and with one touch it was all right. He knew just where to put his finger and just how to touch the bone. We go out to our Christian work with too rough a hand and too unsympathetic a manner and we fail in our work, while some Christian, in the gentleness of Christ, comes along, puts his hand of sympathy on the sore spot—the torn ligaments are healed and the disturbed bones are rejoined. Oh, for this

Gentleness of Christ

The dew of one summer night will accomplish more good than fifty Caribbean whirlwinds. How important it is that in going forth to serve Christ we have something of his gentleness! Is that the way we bear ourselves when we are assaulted? The rule is an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, retort for retort, sarcasm for sarcasm. Give him as much as he sends! After a while you look up into the face of Christ and you see his gentleness and you say: "Well, now, I must do differently." Then your proud heart says: "Now you have your enemy in a corner, you will never get him in a corner again; chastise him, and then let him go." So we postpone the gentleness of Christ. Did you ever know any difficulty to be healed by acerbity or hypercriticism?

Did you ever know a drunkard reclaimed by mimicry of his staggering steps, his thick tongue or his hiccough? No. You only madden his brain. But you go to him and let him know you appreciate what an awful struggle he has with the evil habit and you let him know that you have been acquainted with people who were down in the same depths who, by the grace of God, have been rescued. He hears your voice, he responds to that sympathy, and he is saved. You cannot scold the world into anything better. You may attract it into something better. The stormiest wind comes out from its hiding-place and says: "I will arouse this sea," and it blows upon the sea. Half of the sea is aroused, or a fourth of the sea is aroused, yet not the entire Atlantic. But after a while the moon comes out, calm and placid. It shines upon the sea, and the ocean begins to lift. It embraces all the highlands, the beach is all covered. The heart-throb of one world beating against the heart-throb of another world. The storm could not rouse the whole Atlantic; the moon lifted it. "And I," said Christ, "if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me."

A Spirit of Self-Sacrifice

Christ's disposition was also one of self-sacrifice. No young man ever started out with so bright a prospect as Christ started out with, if he had been willing to follow a worldly ambition. In the time that he gave to the sick he might have gathered the vastest fortune of his time. With his power to popularize himself and magnetize the people he could have gained any official position. No orator ever won such plaudits as he might have won from Sanhedrin and synagogue and vast audiences by the seaside. No physician ever got such a reputation for healing power as he might have obtained if he had performed his wonderful cures before the Roman aristocracy. I say these things to let you know what Paul meant when he said, "He pleased not himself," and to show something of the wonders of his self-sacrifice. All human power together could not have thrown Christ into the manger if he had not chosen to go there. All Satanic strength could not have lifted Christ upon the cross if he had not elected himself to the torture. To save our race from sin and death and hell he faced all the sorrows of this world and the sorrows of eternity. How much of that self-sacrifice have we?

What is self-sacrifice? It is my walking a long journey to save you from fatigue. It is my lifting a great number of pounds to save you from

The Awful Strain

It is some subtraction from my comfort and prosperity so that there may be an addition to your comfort and prosperity. How much of that have we? Might not I rather say, "How little have we!" Two children—brother and sister—were passing down the road. They were both very destitute. The lad had hardly any garments at all. His sister had a coat that she had outgrown. It was a very cold day. She said, "Johnie, come under this coat." "Oh," he said, "no, the coat isn't large enough," "Oh," she said, "it will stretch." He comes under the coat, but the coat would not stretch. So she took off the coat and put it on him. Self-sacrifice pure and simple. Christ taking off his robe to clothe our nakedness. Self-sacrifice. I have not any of it, nor have you, compared with that. The sacrifice of the Son of God.

Christ walked to Emmaus, Christ walked from Capernaum to Bethany, Christ walked from Jerusalem to Golgotha. How far have you and I walked for Christ? His head ached, his heart ached, his back ached. How much have we ached for Christ?

The disposition of Jesus was also a disposition of humility. The Lord of earth and heaven in the garb of a rustic. He who poured all the waters of the earth out of his right hand—the Amazon and the Euphrates and the Oregon and the Ohio and the Mississippi—bending over a well to ask a Samaritan woman for a drink. He who spread the canopy of the heavens and set the earth for a footstool, admitting that he had not where to lay his head. He whose chariots the clouds are, walking with sore feet. Hushing the tempest on Gennesaret and wiping the spray of the storm from his beard, then sitting down in the cabin beside his disciples, as though he had done no more than wipe the sweat from his brow in Joseph's carpenter shop. Taking the foot of death off the heart of Lazarus and breaking the chain of the grave against the marble of the tomb, and then walking out with Mary and Martha without any more pretension than a plain citizen going out in the suburban village to spend the evening. Jostled as though he were a nobody. Pursued as though he were an outlaw. Nicknamed. Seated with publicans and with sinners. King of heaven and earth trailing

His Robes in the Dust

How much of that humility have we? If we get a few more dollars than other people, or gain a little higher position, oh, how we strut! We go around wanting everybody to know their place, and say, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the honor of my kingdom and by the might of my strength?" Who has anything of the humility of Christ?

The disposition of Christ was also the spirit of prayer. Prayer on the mountains, prayer on the sea, prayer among the sick, prayer everywhere. Prayer for little children: "Father, I thank thee that thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes." Prayer for his friends: "Father, I will that they be with me where I am." Prayer for his enemies: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." Prayer for all nations: "Thy kingdom come." How little of that spirit you and I have. How soon our knees get tired. Where is the vial full of odors which are the prayers of all the saints? Which of us can keep our mind ten minutes on a prayer without wandering? Not you, not I. Oh, that we might have the spirit of prayer which was the Spirit of Christ. We want more prayer in the family, more prayer in the Church, more prayer in the legislative hall, more prayer among the sick, more prayer among the aged, more prayer among the young. The great advancement of the Church is to be in that direction yet.

While the Council of Nuremburg was signing the edict that gave the Church its freedom, Martin Luther was away off in a room by himself praying for that accomplishment. Though there was no line of communication between the place where the Council was assembled and the room where Martin Luther was praying, Martin Luther suddenly rose from his knees and said, "It is accomplished, the Church is free. Victory, victory!" Oh, for this direct line of communication with the throne of God, so that it may be said of us as it was said of Luther, "He got what he asked for!" We want, like Daniel, to pray with our face toward the holy city. We want, like Stephen, to pray gazing into heaven. We want, like the publican, to pray smiting on the heart of conviction. We want, like Christ, to pray, the Christ who emptied his heart of all its life blood and then filled it with the sorrows, the woes, the agonies of all nations.

> Cold mountains and the midnight air
> Witnessed the fervor of his prayer.

The Spirit of Christ, I remark lastly, was a spirit of hard work. Not one lazy moment in all his life. Whether he was talking to the fishermen on the beach or preaching to the sailors on the dock or administering to the rustics amid the mountains or spending an evening in Bethany,

Always Busy for Others

With hands, heart, head busy for others. Hewing in the Nazareth carpenter shop, teaching the lame how to walk without crutches, curing the child's fits, providing rations for the hungry host. From the moment he went out of the caravansary of Bethlehem to the moment when the cross plunged into the socket on the bloody mount, busy for others. Does that remind you of yourself? It does not remind me of myself. If we lift a burden it must be light. If we do work it must be popular. If we sit in the pew it must be soft. If we move in a sphere of usefulness it must be brilliant. If we have to take hold of a load, give us the light end of the log. In this way to heaven fan us, rock us, sing us to sleep. Lift us up toward heaven on the tips of your fingers, under a silken sunshade. Stand out of the way all you martyrs who breasted the fire; stand out of the way and let this colony of tender-footed modern Christians come up and get their crowns.

What has your Lord done to you, O Christian, that you should betray him? Who gave you so much riches that you can afford to despise the awards of the faithful? At this moment, when all the armies of heaven and earth and hell are plunging into the conflict, how can you desert the standard? O, backslidden Christian, is it not anew for God and anew for heaven?

Now, I have shown you that the disposition of Christ was a spirit of gentleness, a spirit of self-sacrifice, a spirit of humility, a spirit of prayer, a spirit of hard work—five points. Will you remember them? Are you ready now for the tremendous announcement of the text? "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Are you ready for that statement? Can we stand up and say, "Yes, we have the Spirit of Christ?" Not one of us can make that answer to the full question, yet I am to declare to you there is no discouragement in this subject for Christian people. You have the seeds of this character planted in your soul. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." You might as well blame an acorn for not being an oak of a thousand years as to blame yourself because you are not equal to Christ. You have the implantation within you which will enlarge and develop into the grandest Christian character, and there is no discouragement in this text for you to try and love and serve the Lord. Aim high. Sheathe not your sword until you have gained the last victory. Climb higher and higher until you reach the celestial hills. Crowns bright and radiant are prepared there for all the victors, but death surely awaits every deserter.

CROWN-PRINCESS STEPHANIE

THE PARLIAMENT HOUSES AT BUDAPEST

THE LATE EMPRESS ELIZABETH IN HUNGARIAN COSTUME

DR. TALMAGE IN AUSTRIA'S BRILLIANT CAPITAL

Editorial Correspondence of "The Christian Herald"

VIENNA on fire with patriotic illumination. The figures "1830" and "1900" blazing on Parliament buildings and palaces, and suspended across streets, and decorating towers and arches. Emperor Francis Joseph is seventy years old, and for that reason 1830 and 1900 are put side by side. The night is in regalia of fire. For three nights fire has reigned in Vienna and all Austrian cities, and it has been a peaceful reign. It means congratulation and victory over the wear and tear of seventy years.

The Emperor is a unique personality, and but for the people's love for him, the empire would long ago have been divided. Hungary is as anxious now to be independent as in the days when Louis Kossuth struck for freedom, and his son now stands in the Hungarian Parliament with an influence that halts legislation concerning the empire whenever he will. But Emperor Francis Joseph is so kind, so charitable, so sympathetic, so helpful, that while he lives Austria will remain intact. Every one knows some story of his compassion and generosity. One of his officers who had become blind had said that his only comfort now was music, the Emperor gives the poor man a seat for life in the opera house. By such deeds he has won all hearts. His agonizing bereavements have intensified the affection of the people for their ruler. The suicide or murder of his only son (and it still remains a mystery how he was done to death), and the assassination of the Empress two years ago, have called forth a loyal love seldom seen in other nations. Having no son to succeed him he is educating his nephew for the throne—a splendid lad of thirteen or fourteen years. Otto, the father of the lad, would have been the next Emperor, but he does not want the throne, and no one in the empire wants him to take it. He is one-half bad and one-half imbecile. He keeps the air full of scandalization. He goes into a restaurant, orders all other persons to depart, and having taken full possession of the place, he and the group of wild fellows with him drink themselves drunk, and then smash the crockery, and the decanters, and the tables, and the windowglass, and no one dare protest, for he belongs to the imperial family. But the next day, the bill for this roystering destructiveness is sent to the Emperor, and he pays it.

EMPEROR FRANZ JOSEF

Otto is the terror of the neighborhoods when he is inflamed of strong drink. Riding on horseback through the country districts, he met a funeral procession of peasants. As is the custom, they were carrying the coffin on their shoulders. Otto made them stop, and put the coffin on the ground, and then he with his horse leaped over the coffin this way and that until the drunken delirum was satisfied. Hearing of this, or some equal offensiveness, the Emperor called this erratic specimen of royalty into his presence and severely reprimanded him. Otto was soon after seated at his own table with some rollicking companions, and, when the Emperor's name was mentioned, Otto said: "I will show you my opinion of the Emperor." Then the outrageous eccentric lifted from the table a bowl of greens and took it to a statue or bust of the Emperor standing in the room, and poured the greens over it, thus obliterating all the attractiveness of that work of art. The Emperor heard of this, and commanded the recreant man into his presence and told him that he knew of the insult offered him on that occasion, and in the presence of the imperial family and their guests, he boxed Otto's ears.

This royal nuisance is a peculiar equestrian, and has one of his horses so trained that he can without dismounting ride up the front steps of restaurants and hotels, and into the doorway, and through the hall, and into the barroom, and the horse puts his forefeet on the counter and waits for a drink, and the cup is put to the horse's mouth, either by Otto or the landlord, and the animal is compelled to drink, without having any choice as to the style of liquor he may prefer. The old Emperor is tired of paying the bills for these reckless adventures, but he finds that the sooner such bills are paid the less disagreeable publicity. The royal outlaw is incorrigible and will never be allowed to mount the throne of Austria. His son does not take after him, but after his mother, who is a most excellent woman.

The three most interesting churches, to me, in Vienna, are "the Votive Church," "The Capuchin Church" and "The Augustine Church." The Votive Church was built by Maximilian of unhappy Mexican experiences. He and his brother, the present Emperor, while young men, were taking a walk in what were then the fields and an assassin sprang at the young Emperor and cut and stabbed him until through loss of blood, he seemed dying. Then Maximilian standing there made a vow that if God would spare his brother's life he would build on that spot a magnificent temple to the praise of God. Francis Joseph recovered, and through the efforts of Maximilian the promised church was built in commemoration. Alas! that the builder of so great a cathedral in commemoration of a life spared, should have been shot as a usurper, far away from home, and in a strange land.

But the body of the unfortunate Maximilian rests in illustrious company. It sleeps in the Capuchin Church, another building of absorbing interest in Vienna. For near three hundred years it has stood, the mausoleum of the imperial family. Maria Theresa is there. Marie Louise, Empress of the French, is there. Charles VI. is there. Joseph I. is there. Elizabeth, the last Empress, the wife of Francis Joseph, is there. The obsequies two years ago differed in one respect from all the other interments.

The mausoleums are in the basement of the church. The sad and solemn procession having reached the iron gate, the nearest relative knocks on the gate, and the robed ecclesiastic within asks, "Who is there, and why do you come?" and the leader of the procession replies, "I am Maria Theresa, Empress of Austria. I come wishing my soul conducted to the realms of the blessed and my body put in sepulchre!" Then the gate is opened, and, with chanting, the body is welcomed and entombed. Of course, the right name of the ruler buried is mentioned. But Empress Elizabeth was taken to the tomb in this church with a different utterance. The service for the dead being concluded, the Emperor, with trembling hand knocked at the iron gate of the mausoleum, and the priest within asked: "Who is there, and why do you come?" And the answer given was this: "I, Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, come with Elizabeth, Empress of Austria, asking that her soul be conducted to the realm of the blessed, and that her body be put in sepulchre!" Then she who had been the most beautiful woman in Europe and who had ridden with the Emperor into battle with the hosts of Austria and who had been the dashing equestrienne on as spirited a horse as was ever bitted or saddled, easily controlling the whirlwind with her riding-whip, now lies down haggard and broken-hearted over the behavior and tragic death of a foolish son, who was "the heaviness of his mother."

This Augustine Church is the place of marriage for the imperial family, and the story of bridal processions in the aisles of this cathedral would, if well told, thrill nations. You must visit the treasury of the place to get a competent idea of what diamonds and emeralds and rubies have glowed and flashed on the foreheads and necks of royalty moving to the altar in this St. Augustine Church at Vienna. But I do not suppose that this radiance of wedding attire and the pomp of entrance and departure of this St. Augustine Church assured any more happiness to those there united in wedlock, than is assured by the grasp of backwoodsman's hand taking the hand of the mountain lassie in the presence of the country parson, and without so much as a ring placed on the third finger of the left hand, the wedding trip neither to Berlin, nor Newport nor Niagara, but to the door of the next farmhouse. It is not the jewels on the forehead or the jewels on the hand that make a happy marriage, but the jewels of the heart. These are the rubies

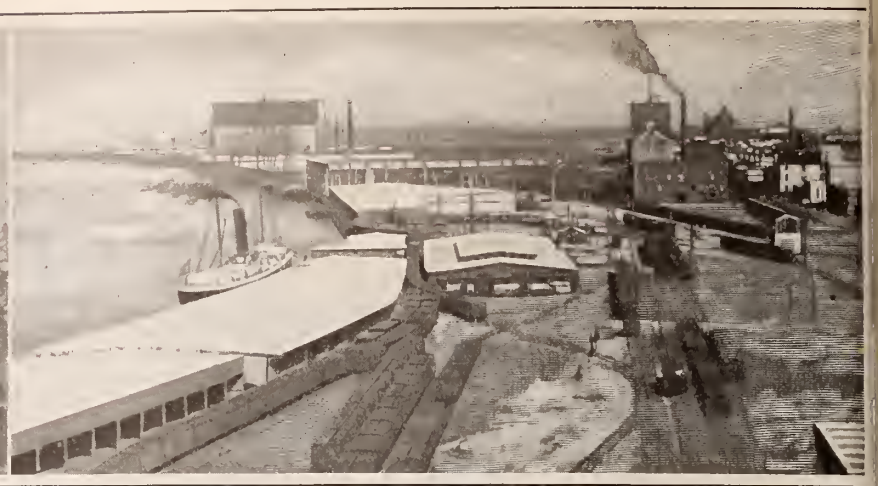
THE HARBOR OF GALVESTON AS IT WAS BEFORE THE CYCLONE



THE · WHOLE · NATION · HELPING · STRICKEN · GALVESTON

SIDE by side with the record of disaster and suffering, during the great Galveston flood, must be placed the splendid heroism and self-sacrifice that were displayed in a thousand different instances during that terrible night's experience. Men and women who had lived quiet and uneventful lives, coming suddenly under the tremendous strain and nerved by love for their dear ones, performed deeds of the highest courage and bravery, risking the peril of death by flood and crashing buildings for the sake of others.

One of these heroes, George McIlheany, had an extraordinary experience. As the water rose in his dwelling, he and his wife and family sought refuge on the roof. He strapped his children together, except his little son, Haven, whom he took in his arms. A heavy timber, borne swiftly along on the flood, struck Haven, killing him instantly. The father caught up another little son, Rice, and clung to the roof, which was now sliding away. He was twice washed off, and little Rice was drowned. The roof, now fairly afloat, broke in two, the wife being on one half, and the husband on the other. He never saw her again. He was ultimately rescued with the remaining little ones.

Charles Wollam, after saving a number of helpless women, was seen to sink in the flood. Three brave policemen, unaided, rescued many persons and worked without food or rest until they literally dropped from exhaustion. A sixteen-year-old boy swam two miles with his little brother on his back. The child was dead, though his brave rescuer did not know it. He buried him in the sand. James Black, a merchant, rescued nine persons from drowning, including several women. The Sisters of the Ursuline Schools took in and sheltered nearly a thousand storm victims, saving many lives.

Galveston is slowly recovering from the shock of the disaster, and her citizens are taking courage. The city is being thoroughly cleaned and disinfected; the dead are now receiving proper burial, and though the temporary hospitals are filled with sufferers, the prospects are daily brightening. There has been a great exodus from the city, and many are still leaving. Thousands of families have been absolutely ruined, and must begin life over again. There are hundreds of orphans, who have apparently not a relative left to care for them. Martial law has dealt summarily with the disorderly element. As the troops, under orders, shot many robbers of the dead, there has been no renewal of such disgraceful practices. The wreckage is being cleared away, and there is now less danger from typhoid. The whole city will be rebuilt, and the streets and harbor front will be raised considerably above sea level.

Great quantities of food, medicines, and other necessaries are now pouring in and all danger of famine is for the time at least averted. The country has responded nobly to Texas' appeal for help. Relief trains from various points have brought generous supplies. In the relief movement the New York Herald, Journal and World, the Chicago American and San Francisco Examiner have done most substantial service and have shown great energy and enterprise in relieving the suffering. Skilled physicians and trained nurses who volunteered for service are now in charge of the medical work.

Memorial Services in New York

The United Memorial Services for Galveston's dead, held at Carnegie Hall, Sunday, Sept. 16, under auspices of the Salvation Army, was an impressive tribute to those who perished in the terrible storm and a timely and practical expression of sympathy for their bereaved kindred. Justice Charles F. MacLean of the Supreme Court presided, being introduced by Commander Booth-Tucker. In his opening address, Justice MacLean gave deserved commendation to the Salvation Army, which had so promptly hurried nurses, tents, food and clothing to the afflicted city. Among other speakers were Edmond W. Booth, Associate Secretary Y. M. C. A.; Rev. Thomas J. Ducey, of St. Leo's Roman Catholic Church; Rev. Dr. D. A. Blum, for sixteen years a rabbi in Galveston, and who had raised the first thousand dollars that went towards building the Protestant Orphan Asylum there, and Rev. S. P. Cadman, D.D. Resolutions of sympathy, "representing the various churches and synagogues of Greater New York, with the Young Men's Christian Association and the Salvation Army," were passed. A message from the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was read, contributing $100 to the work.

Commander Booth-Tucker referred eloquently to the sympathy and help which the whole civilized world is extending to the stricken city, and of the deep desire of the army to do its part by sending "flesh and blood and loving hearts and hands of the Gospel" along with all the money it could give to the help of Galveston.

SAMANTHA IN GREECE

FROM Naples we went to Athens, Dorothy wantin' to see Greece while she was so nigh to it, and Robert Strong wantin' just what she did every time. And Miss Meechim sayin' that it would be a pity to go home and not be able to say that we had been to what wuz once the most learned and genteel place in the hull world.

"Yes," sez Josiah, "I'd love to tell Elder Minkley and the bretheren I'd been there."

And Miss Meechim went on to say that she wanted to see the Acropolis and the Hall of the Nymphs and the Muses.

And Josiah told me that "they wuz nobody he had ever neighbored with and didn't know as he wanted to."

I guess Miss Meechim didn't hear him for she went on and said, "Athens wuz named from Athena, the goddess Minerva."

And Josiah whispered to me "to know if it wuz Minerva Slimpsey, Simon's oldest sister."

And I sez, "No, this Minerva, from what I've hearn of her, knew more than the hull Slimpsey family," sez I. "She wuz noted for her wisdom and knowledge, and I spoze," sez I, "that she wuz the daughter of Jupiter."

Josiah said Jupiter wus nobody he ever see, though he wuz familiar with his name. And I'd hearn on him too when Josiah smashed his finger or slipped up on the ice or anything, not that I wanted to in that tone. Arvilly thought mebby she could canvas the royal family or some on 'em, and Tommy wuz willin' to go to any new place and I spoze Carabi wuz too. And I said I wanted to stand on Mars' Hill where Paul preached to the people about idolatry and their worship of the Unknown God. As we sailed along the shores Dorothy spoke of Sapho. Poor creeter! I wuz always sorry for her. You know she wuz disappinted and bein' love-sick and discouraged she writ some poetry and drownded herself some time ago.

The Old Greek Worthies

And Robert Strong talked a good deal to Dorothy about Plato and Homer and Xenophon and Euripides, Sophocles, Phidias, and Socrates—and lots more of them old worthies; folks, Josiah remarked to me, that had never lived anywhere round Jonesville way, he knew by the names. And Dorothy quoted some poetry begining:

"The isles of Greece, the isles of Greece."

And Robert quoted some poetry. I know two lines of it run:

"Maid of Athens, ere we part,
Give, O, give me back my heart."

But his eyes wuzn't on Athens at all. They wuz on Dorothy and her face flushed up as rosy a pink as ever Miss Sapho's did when she wuz keepin' company.

After we left the boat we rode over a level plain with green trees by the wayside till we reached Athens and put up at a good tarven. Athens, "The eye of Greece," mother of arts and eloquence, wuz built in the first place round the Acropolis, a hill about three hundred feet high, and is a place that has seen twice as many ups and downs as Jonesville. But then it's older, three or four thousand years older, I spoze, and has had a dretful time on't since Mr. Theseus's day, take it with its archons or rulers, kings and generals, and Turks, Goths and Franks, etc.

But it become the fountainhead of learning and civilization, culture and education of the mind and the body. In that age of health and beauty, study and exercise, the wimmen didn't wear any cossets, consequently they could breathe deep breaths and enjoy good health, and had healthy little boy babies that they brought up first-rate as fur as the enjoyment of good health goes, and Arvilly said she knew they didn't drink to excess from the looks of their statutes.

Athens also claims to be one of the birthplaces of Homer, that good old blind poet. Robert Strong talked quite a good deal about his poems, the Iliad and the Odyssy or the return of Ulysses Odysses to his native land.

Josiah paid great attention to it, and afterwards he confided to me that he thought of writin' a Jodyssy or the return of Josiah to Jonesville. He said when he recounted all his wanderin's and tribulations on the road and at tarvens with starvation and tight clothes and all the other various hampers he'd been hampered with he said that it would beat that old Odyssy to nothin' and nobody would ever look at it agin. "Why," sez he, "jest think how old that is, most a thousand years B. C. It is time another wuz writ, and I'm the one to write it."

But I shall try to talk him out of it. He said he shouldn't begin it till our return to Jonesville, so Ury could help him in measurin' the lines with a stick. And when I am once mistress of my own cookstove and buttery I have one of the most powerful weepons in the world to control my pardner with.

I hain't no great case to carry round relics, but I told Josiah that I would give a dollar bill quick if I could git holt of that old lantern that Diogenes used to carry round here in the streets in broad daylight to find Truth with. How I'd love to seen Mr. Diogenes and asked him if he ever found her.

Josiah on Diogenes

Josiah said he would ruther own his wash-tub that he used to travel round in. And which he wuz settin' in when Alexander the Great asked him what costly gift he could bestow on him. And all that contented, independent creeter asked for wuz to have the king not git between him and the sun.

He snubbed Plato, too; didn't want anything, only his tub and his lantern and hunt round for a honest man, though I don't see how he got round in it. But Josiah sez that the tub wuz on castors, and he had a idee of havin' our old wash-tub fixed up and go to Washington, D. C. in it with our old tin lantern jest to be uneek and hunt round there for an honest man.

Sez I middlin' dry, "You may have to go further, Josiah." But I shan't encourage him in it. And our wash-tub wouldn't hold him up anyway; the hoops had sprung loose before I left home.

At the southwest of Athens is the Mount Hymettus. I'd hearn a sight about its honey. Josiah thought he would love to buy a swarm of bees there, but I asked him how could he carry 'em to Jonesville. He said that if he could learn 'em to fly ahead on us he could do it. But he can't.

The road west wuz Eulusas, the Sacred Way. And to the north wuz the Academy of Plato, and that of Aristotle wuz not fur away. One day I see there on an old altar, "Sacred to either a god or goddess." They believed in the rights of wimmen, them old Pagans did, which shows there is good in everything.

And how smart Socrates wuz; I always sot store by him, he wuz a good talker and likely in a good many ways, though I spoze he and his wife didn't live agreeable, and there might have been blame on both sides and probable wuz. How calm he wuz when on trial for his life, and when he had drunk the hemlock, sayin' to his accusers:

"I go to death and you to life; but which of the twain is better is known only to Divinity."

And Mr. Plato; don't it seem as if that old Pagan's words wuz prophetic of Christ when he spoke of an inspired teacher:

"This just person must be poor, void of all qualifications save virtue. A wicked world will not bear his instructions and reproofs. And therefore within three or four years after he begun to preach he should be persecuted, imprisoned, scourged, and at last put to death."

Hundreds of years after, Paul preaching the religion of Christ Jesus, met the Epicurians and Stoics representing Pleasure and Pride. Strong foes that religion has to contend with now. Then he addressed the multitude from the Areopagus, Mars' Hill.

"THE TABLE WUZ LAID IN A VINE-COVERED PAVILION, CLOSE TO THE SEA"

Where Paul Once Stood

What feelin's I felt; how real and nigh to my heart his incomparable sermon that he preached in that place seemed to be as I stood there. I thought of how the cultured, beauty-loving nature of Paul must have been affected by his surroundings as he stood there in the midst of statutes and altars to Apollo, Venus, Bacchus. The colossial golden figure of Minerva, holdin' in her outstretched right hand a statute of victory, four cubits high. So big and glorious-lookin' Minerva wuz that her glitterin' helmet and shield could be seen fur out to sea. The statute of Neptune on horseback hurling his tridant; the temple to Ceres and all the gods and goddesses they knew on and to the Unknown God. Here Paul stood surrounded by all these temples so magnificent that jest the gateway to 'em cost what would be ten million dollars in our money.

Here in the face of all this glory he stood up and declared that the true God, "Lord of heaven and earth dwelt not in temples made with hands." And he went on to preach the truth in Christ Jesus: repentance, remission of sin, the resurrection of the dead. Some mocked and some put him off by saying they would hear him again of this matter. They felt so proud, their glory and magnificence seemed so sure and enduring, their learning, art and accomplishments seemed so fur above this obscure teacher of a new religion.

But there I stood on the crumbling ruins of all this grandeur and art. And the God of Paul that they had scorned to "feel after if haply they might find him," wuz dominating the hull world, bringing it to the knowledge of Christ Jesus: "The gold and silver and stone wrought by many hands" had crumbled away while the invisible wuz the real, the truth wuz sure and would abide forever. How real it all seemed to me as I stood there and my soul listened and believed like Dionysos and Damarus!

The market-place wuz just below Mars' Hill and I spoze they talked it over whilst they wuz buyin' and sellin' there, about a strange man who had come preachin' a new doctrine and who had asked to speak to the people. It sez, "His heart was stirred within him and he taught them about the true God" in the synagogue and market-place. As we stood there in that hallowed spot. Miss Meechim said:

"Oh, that I had been there at that time and hearn that convincin' sermon. how gladly would I have left all and followed him like Dionysos and Damarus."

"Well, I d'no." sez Arvilly. "as folks are any more willin' now to let their old idols of selfishness and mammon go and renounce the false and worship the truth than they wuz then."

Miss Meechim scorfed at the idee, but I pondered it in my own mind and wondered how many there really wuz from Jonesville to Chicago, from Maine to Florida, ready to believe in Him and work for the millennium.

But to resoom: The Patessia is a beautiful avenue. The royal family drive there every day and the nobility and fashionable people. The Greek ladies wear very bright clothing in driving or walking. The road looks sometimes like a bed of moving blossoms.

As in most every place where we traveled, Robert Strong met someone he knew. Here was a gentlemen he had entertained in California, and he gave a barbecue or picnic for us at Phalareum. A special train took the guests to it. There wuz about thirty guests from Athens. The table wuz laid in a pavilion close to the seashore, covered with vines, evergreens and flowers. Four lambs wuz roasted hull and coffee was made in a boiler; choice fruits and foods wuz served, and wines for them that wanted 'em.

It is needless to say that I didn't partake on't, and Josiah, I am proud to say, under my watchful eyes refused to look on it when it wuz red, and Arvilly and Robert Strong and Dorothy turned down their glasses on the servant's approach bearin' the bottles.

Everything wuz put on the table to once, and a large piece of bread to each plate. No knives or forks are used at a barbecue. We had sweet-meats, roseleaf glyco, oranges and all kinds of fruits. The way they roast a lamb at a barbecue, two large lambs are placed about four feet apart, the lamb pierced lengthwise by a long, pointed stick, is hung over the bed of live coals. They turn and baste it with olive oil and salt and it is truly delicious.

One pleasant day we visited the King's country place. The dining-room wuz a pavilion in a shady spot under orange trees full of fruit and blossoms, surrounded with a dense hedge of evergreens, vines and blossoms. There wuz walks in every direction, bordered with lovely flowers. The Queen's private settin'-room is a pretty room, the furniture covered with pink and white cretonne, no better than my lounge is covered with to home in the spare room. And in a little corner hid by a screen of photographs wuz her books and writing-desk. The maids of honor had rooms in a little vine-covered cottage near by.

We of course went to see the ruins of the Parthenon, built by Pericles and ornamented with the marbles of Phidias. It wuz finished about four hundred and thirty years B. C., and cost about four millions of our money. A great bishop once said:

"This was the finest edifice on the finest site in the world, hallowed by the noblest recollections that can stimulate the human heart."

It stands on the highest point of the Acropolis and wuz decorated by the greatest sculptor the world ever saw. It stands on the site of an older temple to Minerva. They thought a sight of that woman. It made me feel well to see one of my sect so highly thought on, though I did not approve of their worshipin' her, and I would never give my consent to be worshiped on a monument, not for the world I wouldn't —no indeed!

Robert Strong wanted to go to see the ruins of the enormous temple of Jupiter, where chariot races wuz run and the Olympic games wuz fought that Paul speaks of so many times in his letters to the churches.

But time wuz passin' fast away and we thought best to not linger there any longer and we went directly from there to Vienna, a longer journey than we had took lately, but Robert thought that we had better not stop on the way.

PRESIDENT JOHN MITCHELL

ENERAL regret is felt on all hands that the efforts to avert a strike in the anthracite coal regions of Pennylvania have failed. It is estimaed that the strike has thrown out f work more than 100,000 men, nd some assert 140,000. The neotiations have been conducted by ne officers of the United Mine Vorkers of America, a union emracing all classes of miners roughout the country. The Presient of the Union is John Mitchell, man of considerable executive bility, now about thirty years of ge. He has himself been a workg miner, and at thirteen years of ge was earning his own living in ne mines. The statement he has ssued to the public describing the auses of the strike, is an able paer showing moderation and a relization of the serious nature of ne conflict thus begun. Accordg to this statement, the miners re seeking an increase of wages nd the removal of certain grievnces which have proved irksome them. The wages now being aid, Mr. Mitchell says, do not verage more than $250 a year, and n advance of twenty per cent. is sked. The grievances cited are mportant. One is that, although nder the laws of Pennsylvania, a on of anthracite coal shall consist f 2,400 pounds, the companies inist on the miners producing in ome instances 2,700 pounds to the on and in others still more and ome as much as 4,000 pounds to he ton. Another is that the miners re required to buy their powder from heir employers at $2.75 per keg, though hey could buy the same powder elsewhere t $1.50 per keg, or wholesale for one dollar. Besides these complaints, the miners alege that they cannot retain their posiions unless they deal at stores supported by their employers and significantly called 'Pluck-me stores." Also that they must pay one dollar a month to the companies or a doctor, whether they need him or not, and must have the doctor the companies select. They allege that when representatives of the miners have sought to get these grievances remedied, the representatives have been discharged, and when clergymen and business men have appealed to the owners on behalf of the miners, their interference has been in every instance resented. The owners on their side, contend that their profits are not so large as represented and declare that the men would not have been dissatisfied if it had not been that the United Mine Workers, for reasons of their own, wished to precipitate a conflict. It is inevitable that the strike, even if successful, will involve severe suffering to the miners and their families and on that account must be deplored. At the outset the miners appear to have the sympathy of the clergymen and disinterested persons in the neighborhoods affected and their readiness to submit their case to arbitration has impressed the public in their favor. It may be hoped that they will not alienate that sympathy by the lawless acts which too often accompany a strike. If they are patient and their cause is really as just as it appears, there is hope that public opinion will compel the owners to make concessions, or at least consent to submit the questions in dispute to disinterested persons in whom both parties have confidence. They, too, must lose by a continuance of the struggle; therefore both sides may well heed the apostle's warning:

If ye bite and devour one another take heed that ye be not consumed one of another (Gal. 5:15).

Costly Barricades

The mails bring interesting details of the siege of the British Legation in Pekin, to which Mr. Conger and the Ministers of the European powers went for refuge when the Boxers attacked them. The cable had already brought the welcome news of their relief, but it gave no particulars of the struggle to keep out the Boxer hordes who surrounded the grounds. It was never expected, of course, that the building would ever have to serve the purpose of a citadel, so it was but ill-provided with means of defense. The ingenuity of the little garrison was constantly exercised to eke out the arsenal. A gun was made out of a fire-extinguisher; every scrap of metal, including candlesticks and ornaments, was converted into ammunition. It was necessary to provide some kind of barricade to protect the building in which the women and the children and the sick were housed. Nothing is so serviceable for this purpose as bags of sand, as the shells enter them harmlessly, and there is no splintering as with wood and stone. Ten thousand of these bags were made and filled with sand to form a wall. Material for the bags became a prime necessity. Eventually every coarse fibre was used, but more bags were needed. It was no time to hesitate, so, as nothing else could be procured, a piece of gold and silk brocade, which had cost fifty thousand dollars, was cut up, and bags were made from it and filled with sand. Probably this was the costliest barricade ever constructed, but when their lives are at stake, people do not stay to consider the money value of the sacrifice that may save them. It is much to be wished that there was the same readiness to make sacrifices when the soul is at stake.

There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt (Eccles. 5:13).

Return of the "Baltimore"

A warm welcome was given to the U. S. Battleship Baltimore on her arrival at New York from the Philippines. She has been on duty there since the battle of Manila Bay. On her way home she received a series of national greetings. She had an ovation from the Japanese at Tokio, from the French at Havre, from the Scotch at Glasgow, from the English at Gravesend and from the Irish at Belfast. But these were small compared with her welcome at New York. The good ship bears the scars of the conflict. The hole was pointed out where the five-inch shell went through her bulwarks and exploded the case of ammunition. Only two of the officers now on board were on her in the fight, but about thirty of the crew were there. The other officers and men have been transferred to other ships and many of them had already reached home. Before making another voyage, the Baltimore will be fitted with new batteries and boilers and modern steering-gear and electric-lighting plant. The ship's experience is, in some respects, not unlike that of the church. It, too, bears the scars of conflict; it needs to be equipped with modern methods of warfare, and it also has lost some who in former conflicts were conspicuous on its quarter-deck, but have gone on before to their reward.

Lift up thine eyes round about and see: all they gather themselves together; they come to thee; thy sons shall come from far and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side (Isa. 60:4).

Funeral Orders

A journalist who has been traveling in eastern Pennsylvania sends to the New York Sun a description of a peculiar custom prevailing among some of the rural inhabitants. Nearly every aged person has some directions written for burial. Not a few go so far as to name the preacher they want, the text, the hymns, the burial place the pall-bearers, describe the shroud, dwell on the funeral meats, name the number of carriages and wagons, describe the grave and materials to be used, the casket and lining, plate and trimmings, and inscription on the lid. In fact nothing is left unmentioned, even to the kind of stockings and slippers Said one old lady who has written out all her desires: "I have omitted nothing. Everything I want done is written down. I know how I want it; they don't. If I write it all down they will do as I say, and then I am sure. There is no danger that they won't obey. The written requests and orders of people who die are regarded as sacred. What is ordered about burying the dead must be carried out, even to the inscription on the gravestones." The old lady concluded by saying: "I, like many others, have grave clothes already made, but we find out that it is necessary to provide written instructions for funeral details, as well as making a will to bequeath our property." As they give their attention to details so minute, we may hope that they do not overlook the most important of all matters which death involves.

These all died in faith not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, were persuaded of them and embraced them (Heb. 11:13).

A Discriminating Jury

A jury in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn pronounced a decision recently which showed how much doubt there had been in the minds of the jurymen. The question in dispute had been whether a certain man was insane. Evidence had been brought to show how he had wasted his property and how many foolish things he had done. On the other hand there was testimony to his being intelligent and able to understand questions of some profundity. After the evidence was all in and the judge had summed up, the jury retired to consider their verdict. On their return the foreman announced that the jury had decided that the man was "incompetent." The judge said that he could not accept such a verdict. The jury must say whether he was sane or insane. Another interval for consideration was taken and then the jury declared the man sane, but recommended that some one should be appointed to take care of his property. The jury still believed him to be sane but incompetent. There are many people who appear, from the standpoint of a Christian, to belong to the same category. They cannot be called insane because they show intelligence and manage their worldly affairs with wisdom and skill; yet in neglecting their eternal interests they display such folly as to cause doubt of their complete sanity.

So is he that layeth up treasure for himself and is not rich toward God (Luke 12:21).

MINE-WORKERS ON THE BREAKERS IN THE ANTHRACITE COAL DISTRICT

BRIEF NOTES

Rev. Arthur Crane, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Charleston, S. C., has been holding evangelistic meetings at Denmark, S. C. The community has been deeply moved and many additions have been made to the churches.

Mr. John R. Mott has prepared a work comprising his observations during his eighteen-months' tour around the world. It is entitled, "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation." It has been published, price one dollar, by the Student Volunteer Movement, 3 West 29th St., New York.

The Home Mission of the Free Evangelical Church of France presents a very happy report for the year. There are now twenty-one stations, with over thirty paid agents. There are also forty annexes or sub-stations, where regular services are held, and one hundred and fifty other places where occasional services are conducted.

Rear Admiral Serada of the Japanese navy is dead. He was an active, earnest Christian. He was converted while attending the Japanese Naval School, and when he came to Annapolis to continue his studies he took a decided stand for Christ. He taught a Bible class in the Tokio Y. M. C. A. every Sunday afternoon when his naval duties permitted, and supported out of his own pocket a preaching service in one of the suburbs of the city.

Mr. Leonard Weaver, who is conducting tent meetings in London, writes: "The wonderful work of God proceeding in the nine great tents erected in the suburban districts of London may well stir the Lord's people to praise. Twenty thousand persons listen to the Word of Life every Sunday; thousands every night of the week; and, best of all, some 3,000 names have been taken of those who have professed faith in Christ."

The New York State Sunday School Association has arranged with Madam Mountford, the well-known Oriental lecturer, to give a series of lectures on "Bible Lands and Bible Customs," for the benefit of Sunday School teachers. The object of the lectures is to describe the habits and customs of the people in such a way as to make the Bible allusions clear to the minds of the hearers. During October the lectures will be delivered in Brooklyn; during November, in New York. Afterwards Madam Mountford will make a tour of the State.

THE LORD'S DAY FOR UNSELFISH MINISTRY

JESUS DINING WITH A PHARISEE

BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International S. S. Lesson for Oct. 7: Luke 14: 1-14

Golden Text, Luke 14: 11: Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

THE Lord's Supper, the Lord's Day, the Lord's Year. Three monuments of Christ as our Lord and King stand near together at this time. Only three months away looms "the year of our Lord, 1901," the mile-stone of a new century, reminding us that Jesus Christ is "Lord" of our time as well as of eternity. He is now the accepted Lord of more human lives than he was at the portals of any former century. In this last quarter of nineteen Christian centuries let every one of us show loyalty to him by obedience to his every law. One of his laws calls his disciples to the Lord's Supper celebrated to-day in nearly all the churches. "Do this," he said, "in remembrance of me." It is another monument of the Lordship of Christ. We are to remember him not alone as our Saviour, for the name, "Lord's Supper," points us above his wounded feet and hands and side and brow to the words over his head: "This is the King," to which also points the word "Sacrament," which is derived from the Latin sacramentum, meaning a soldier's oath of loyalty to his king. A third monument of our Lord, more frequently and universally seen than the other two is the "Lord's Day," in which Christians show a selfish world the reality of their faith in an invisible Lord by a twenty-four hour's halt at his command in their pursuit of business and politics and pleasure. Surely there is nothing that proves more clearly that Christ is one of the real Powers of the world than the fact that in every country some workmen and merchants—in our country the great majority—salute the Lord's Day as the flag of Christ by laying aside their tools and toil and giving the day to rest and worship.

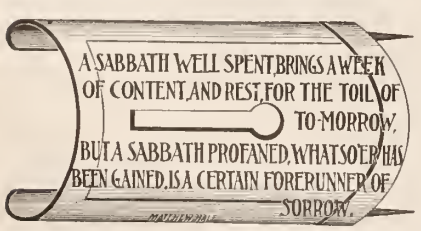
Bird's-Eye View of All Bible Sabbaths Was Adam a Jew? If not, then the Sabbath is not a Jewish institution. It "was made for man." So Jesus said, and so Moses taught in connecting the Sabbath with creation (Gen. 2: 3). It used to be argued by some that this passage meant that "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it" twenty-five hundred years afterwards. All scholars have abandoned that strained theory since the discovery of Accadian tablets inscribed by the immediate descendants of Noah, in which a weekly rest day and the very name "Sabbath" are found. To the Jews the Sabbath was and is the monument of creation. They had a saying: "He who breaks the Sabbath denies the creation." To "remember the Sabbath day" was to "remember now thy Creator." On the Sabbath God led the Israelites out of bondage, and so another inscription went on the monument as a memorial of redemption, which was to have a deeper meaning when the Lamb of God, by the crucifixion and resurrection, should become the Redeemer of souls enslaved by sin.

There came a change of day from the seventh to the first, but no change of the Decalogue. There is no Saturday in the fourth commandment. "The seventh day" is not the seventh day of the week, but the seventh day after six days of work by the very letter of the Ten Commandments, which are the ten articles of the world's constitution, dealing with large matters of universal application. It is possible in every clime and age for every nation to keep one day after each six of work, but to keep a particular twenty-four hours in unbroken succession from creation is impossible without an inspired almanac. The Sabbath is not like Saturday, the name of a day of the week, but like Christmas, the name of a movable feast. Sabbath means rest, and holy Sabbath means a holy rest, a blending of rest and worship. But Jesus gave the day a new purpose even before he gave it a new place in the week and the new name of



A SABBATH WELL SPENT BRINGS A WEEK

"Lord's Day." Not doing nothing, but doing good is Christlike Sabbath-keeping.

THE SABBATH FOR UNSELFISH MINISTRY:

1. For the practice of it, verses 1-6.
2. For the teaching of it, verses 7-14.

That is the framework of our lesson story to-day.

He went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the Sabbath day. This is but one of many intimations that the strictest guardianship of the rest of the Sabbath need not take it out of the list of feasts, and transfer it to the fasts. The Pharisees were overstrict in forbidding work on that day, but their Sabbath dinners were nevertheless the best of the week. On that day they used fruits largely, and such cooked foods as could be prepared the day before. No servant's needless toil on the rest day embittered their viands. In our colder climate we are not called to omit fires, whether in grate or range, but the principle remains, that we should study to make our Sabbath table tasty with the least possible restriction of the rest and worship of those who serve tables.

But the surprising thing is to find Jesus at this feast. Jesus had accepted an invitation to a dinner party on the Sabbath. Why then should leading pastors of New York and Washington say that one of the greatest perils of the Sabbath and the Church is the increasing custom among the rich church members of giving Sunday dinner parties? If our acts and words are like those of Jesus in this lesson, we, too, may accept all such invitations. Jesus never seems to have refused any invitation, not even those that came from enemies for evil purposes; but what a use he made of his social opportunities! No shallow hypocrisies of empty compliment; no idle gossip about the weather; no suggestive stories that make a jest of the Bible and purity; but manly, fearless talk on great themes, "the feast of reason and the flow of soul."

The straightforward frankness of Jesus in social functions was exemplified by Mr. D. L. Moody, on his first visit to Great Britain, when the Archbishop of Canterbury had presided at one of his meetings, and at the close he was called on to "move a vote of thanks to the presiding officer." With a startling frankness, he declared that he saw little occasion for such a vote. He had no doubt that the Archbishop was quite as thankful for the opportunity to render such a Christian service as the audience were for his co-operation. He quoted an equally unconventional story of Abraham Lincoln, who, on being thanked with fulsome formality for presiding at some philanthropic meeting, replied that there was no more occasion for them to thank him than for him to thank them, as it had been a mutual duty and privilege. "I guess we are about even," said Lincoln, and so said Moody. Not alone on the Sabbath, but on every day, let us make our social life, especially our conversation, more manfully Christlike. It would be almost equal to the invention of James Watt, by which the steam that had wasted itself in the air became the power that should draw the world forward, if some one could teach us how to utilize the two hours talk per day at the table for intellectual and spiritual, moral and humane uses. In a life time, wisely directed table talk would be equal to a college course in intellectual profit. Spiritually it might equal in power, as it excels in time, the regular meetings of the Church.

In the table talk of this lesson the chief theme was unselfish ministry on the Sabbath and every other day, especially at our tables, which should be not displays of selfishness and pride, but instruments of generous helpfulness to those less favored.

The Best Sabbath Observance Unselfish Helpfulness Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day? The Pharisees in their heartless elaboration of the idea of rest made it the synonym of idleness, even forbidding works of mercy and healing, whereas the deepest rest for persons in health is change of thought and action. As the week must be spent, even by good people, largely in selfish work for gain—I use selfish in the best sense of a right self-love and care for our families—the most complete rest is an absorbing interest on the Sabbath in unselfish work for others.

To teach this positive side of Sabbath-keeping Jesus, on different Sabbaths and in different places, healed the sick on the Sabbath, in one case in great numbers. Let me introduce some of these beneficiaries of Christ's Sabbath work in a series of personations, as it is the intention of the International Lesson Committee that this whole group of miracles should be considered together to-day.

I am a man whom Jesus met one Sabbath day in a synagogue. My right hand hung down uselessly by my side; I could not so much as lift it, for there was no strength in it. The muscles were all dried up, and the flesh as well. When I went out of that synagogue my right arm was as strong and well as the other. Can you tell what Jesus did to help me? (Matt. 13: 9-13).

"IS IT LAWFUL TO HEAL ON THE SABBATH?"

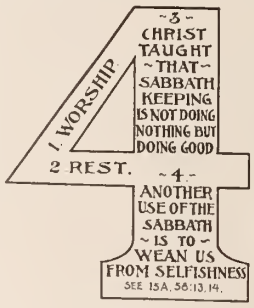
I am a man who lay near a large pool, with other sick people, one Sabbath day. We had been brought there by our friends with the hope of being cured by the waters of the spring. I had been carried there on my bed. I had been bedridden for thirty-eight years. Jesus came to the spring. I went away myself, carrying my bed. How did Jesus make me well? (John 5: 1-14).

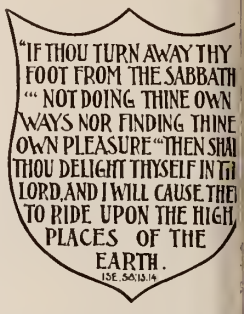
I am a woman living in the home of my married daughter, in the city of Capernaum. I was taken ill with the fever, and it was expected that I would die. But one Sabbath day Jesus came home with my son-in-law to dine. He was told how sick I was. Marvelous to tell, I rose from my bed and prepared the dinner. What did Jesus do to make me well so quickly? (Mark 1: 29-31).



I am one who was brought to Peter's home on Sabbath evening. I could not walk there, because I was paralyzed, but I went away leaping and praising God, for Jesus had cured me by his gentle touch. Were there any others beside myself made well? (Mark 1: 32-34).

I am a woman who had a disease of the spine. For eighteen years I had not been able to stand upright. My back was bent like a bow. It was with great difficulty that I dragged myself to the synagogue on Sabbath day. But one day when I had walked in, all be over as usual, I came out, walking as straig as any one. I had met Jesus in the synagog and he had helped me. How did he do i (Luke 13: 11-17).

I am a man who had an evil-speaking tongu Satan himself made his home in my hea He even sent me to church on the Sabba day to torment and trouble the people who had gone there to pray. One day Jesus came to the synagogue and saw me and heard my evil speaking. But it was the last time I ever spoke in that way. Why? (Mark 1: 23-26).



I am a man who was born blind. I used to sit by the wayside on the street that led to the temple at Jerusalem. One Sabbath da as Jesus was going to the temple he saw m It was surprising that he did, because the was a great throng of people as it was th time of the Feast of Tabernacles. I hear him say: "I am the Light of the world;" ar then felt him putting clay on my eyes. Ho gentle was his touch! Then he told me to g and wash in the pool of Siloam. I had to fe my way there with my cane, but I came bac seeing. My friends could hardly believe was the same man. I did not see Jesus for h had gone. Can you tell me when I did se him? (John 9: 1-41).

I am a man who was swelled and bloate with a disease called dropsy. I had ofte wished that I could meet Jesus that I migl ask him to make me well. One Sabbath da I heard he was going to dinner with a Pharise and although I was not invited, I determine to go and stand just outside the door, with th hope of being healed by Jesus as he came ou The Pharisee who gave the feast and h friends were rather glad to see me, becaus they wanted to see if Jesus would heal on th Sabbath day. What did Jesus say and d when he saw me? (Luke 14: 1-6).

"It is lawful," aye, it is the law of Chris "to do good"—not to do nothing—"on th Sabbath day." A little girl came home fror Sabbath School, saying her teacher had give her some beautiful "Sunday gloves," and s she repeated, touching finger after finger, a she said the ten words of Jesus'; "It is lawfu to do good on the Sabbath days."

Many have misapplied Jesus' words as t the Sabbath. They say, "The Sabbath wa made for man," when they mean it was "mad for money." Or they use the words as if, "man was only "a stomach with appendages." Th Sabbath was not made for man to destroy nor was it made to destroy man.

In this lesson the words of Jesus about sav ing an ass or ox from a pit, are often abused When a shopkeeper who regularly opened hi general store on the Sabbath, said in excuse that Christ said a man might rescue his as from a pit on that day, he was reminded tha if the ass had been in the habit of regularly falling into that pit every Sabbath, the owne would have had sense enough to "fill up the pit or kill the ass."

Selfishness and Pride should Give Place to Generosity and Humility on All Days When thou makest a feast, call the poor Jesus having shown what sort of words and deeds were be coming to the Sabbath, rebuked the pride of the guests that sought the most honorable seats, and urged, in place of such selfish pride, humility and generosity. The best feast for the Sabbath or any other day, he taught, is a feast for the poor. He would have us put off our tables and out of our houses selfishness and pride, and set our tables with that most beautiful ware, humility and generosity. Weigh them as they seem in the eyes of God and in the words of Christ; and especially as they stand the test of history. Even men despise the man who thinks of himself more highly than he ought to think. But the man who forgets himself in humble zeal to do good is the very one the world will not forget. The pride of Haman ends with the scaffold. The modest courage of Mordecai is what history delights to honor. The rich men who live unselfishly, counting wealth but noblesse oblige, opportunity for service, are the ones who win the real prizes of wealth in public esteem.

Ah me! why may not life and love be one?
Why walk we thus alone when at our side
Love, like a visible God, might be our guide?
How would the marts grow noble, and the street,
Worn like a dungeon floor with weary feet,
Seem then a golden pathway of the sun?

Paul Not Obsolete

A missionary who has labored several years in China says that before going there he had the idea that Paul's injunction to women to keep silence in the churches had become obsolete. In China, however, he found the women so given to gossip and babble among themselves at the church meetings that he found it necessary to remind them of Paul's command, and this not once but many times.

He adds that if Corinth was like China in this matter he is not surprised at Paul's injunction.

∴ FIFTEEN DOLLARS A YEAR WILL FEED, CLOTHE AND EDUCATE AN ORPHAN CHILD ∴

AN interesting account of a journey through the famine districts of Gujerat in north-west India, appears in a Bombay journal just received. Mr. Thomas A. Bailey, the writer, had just returned from his tour and gives encouraging reports of the changed conditions. The trees, which had been apparently dead, were clothed in living green and the brown, seared fields were again covered with growing grain. "Reaching Sunth Road," he says, "we immediately proceeded to the dharmsala of a large village about two miles away, where a free dole of grain is given daily to about 354 Bhils from three villages around; many of these are greatly emaciated, and none of them fit to work; a roll is kept of the names registered from each village, and they are given twenty ounces for men, fourteen ounces for women and ten ounces for children. The advantage of this form of relief is that the people are kept in their villages and the family life (which is a great feature with Bhils) is preserved. The corn distributed was that sent out by the people of America in the steamship Quito, and on inquiry we learned that the receivers appreciate it very much. We had the pleasure of seeing some of the ill-clad people receive cotton blankets, also supplied by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund. This relief work is under the superintendence of Rev. G. W. Blair, of the Irish Presbyterian Mission. Before the distribution of grain the native man in charge gave a Gospel address to those assembled." In other places, also, Mr. Bailey found the poor, emaciated creatures now looking hopefully forward to a harvest, subsisting on the grain sent out in the Quito by our readers. In others where the dole of grain was exhausted, the missionaries were feeding the people with food purchased with money from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund.

The Indian Witness, of Calcutta, has this editorial paragraph, which shows how the gifts of our readers are understood and appreciated in India: "This old world of ours has never witnessed such a spectacle as that which has been presented this year in the magnificent display of practical sympathy which this grievous famine has evoked. India assuredly can never forget the splendid generosity of America in its time of sore need. The contributions sent to India by the United States, it should be remembered, were not made up of the princely gifts of shipping companies, commercial corporations, banks and mercantile firms, which derive large wealth from India and have large financial interests in this country; but were the gifts of thousands and tens of thousands of the rank and file of the people, moved solely by Christian charity to come to the help of a people in whom they have no interest save that of benevolent desire to relieve distress. Grateful mention must be made of the noble assistance rendered by many missionary societies and the religious press generally, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD being most conspicuous."

Rev. W. A. Wilson, of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission at Neemuch, writes: "It will interest you to know how the four hundred bags of corn which were allotted to Neemuch from your relief fund are being distributed. On receiving information of the allotment, I consulted with the chief official in this district of the native State of Gwalior, in which most of our work is carried on and secured his cooperation. He procured for me the names of all the poorest inhabitants in the village within a radius of sixteen miles or so, and sent me the lists showing the numbers of adults and children in each household. The people of a certain number of villages according to appointment were instructed to appear at one of our orphanages to receive a supply proportioned to the numbers in each family. Before the arrival of the corn, the poor villagers came to my bungalow in great numbers for it, the good news having spread rapidly. When at last it was announced that it was on hand for distribution, on the first morning there were several hundreds on the spot, and on the second day over a thousand. We first distributed according to the lists furnished and afterwards gave a small quantity to each person in the vast multitude numbering from eight hundred to a thousand whose names were not on the lists, that gathered from all round about in the hope of getting a dole. In this way a portion has been given daily for the past two weeks and a half to about two thousand persons in the various villages round about. So numerous have been the applications that rarely have we been able to give a second supply to any village. The supply of corn is rapidly being exhausted and will be all gone long before the need for it has ceased.

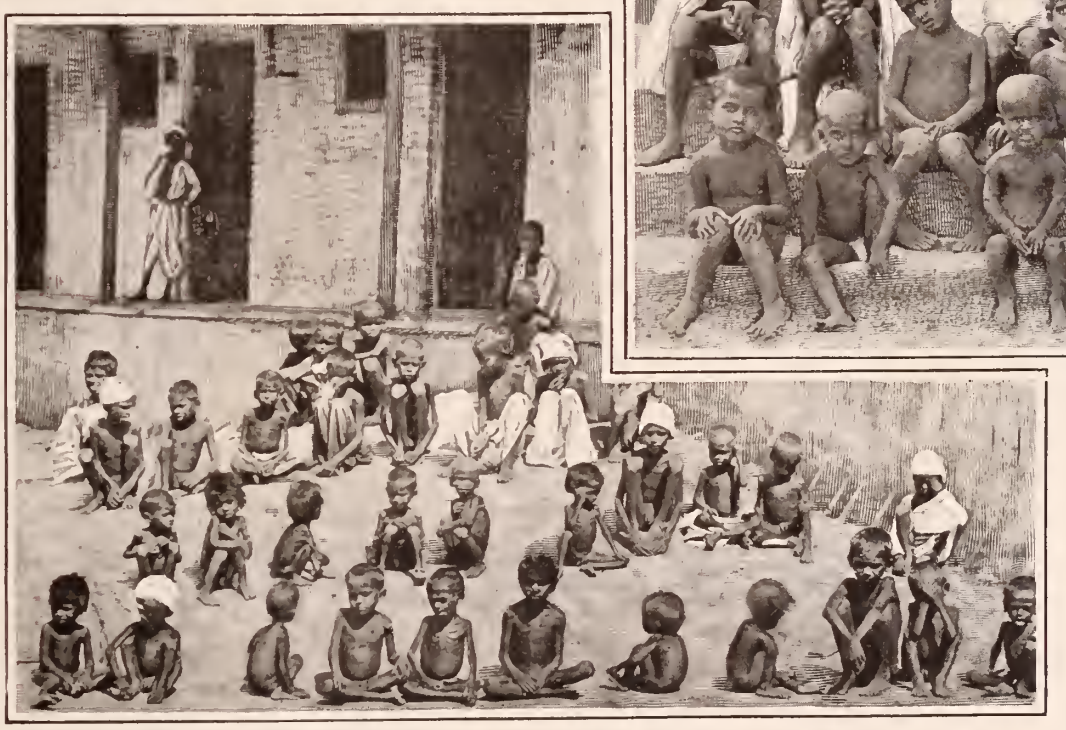
"The people are deeply grateful to you for the timely help. If you could only see the crowds that gather for the little dole of dry grain and the intense eagerness with which they receive it, gathering up every single grain which may have dropped on the ground as it was being poured into their lap, you would feel a glow of deep satisfaction in being permitted to give help to these poor hungry people many of whom begin to crunch and eat of the hard corn as they carry it away. In their ignorant way they are calling down blessings on the heads of those in the far-away country who have sent to help them. I, too, join them in praying that the blessing of the giver may be yours."

Mingled, however, with these thankful words for the help of our readers, one anxious note sounds in the letters of the missionaries. "What must we do with the little orphans whom we have received?" The question presses very heavily. Inquiries made in a limited section, at the request of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, show by actual count 8,094 boys and 5,854 girls, a total of 13,948 children now in the missionary stations. The promises of support so far received by these missionaries covers the cost of maintaining only 1,488 of these. Thus, the problem even in this small area affects the lives of more than twelve thousand children. No wonder that the missionaries are anxious, and that the same concern is felt in other sections where the numbers are still larger.

The Baptists in the Telugu country in southeastern India are evincing wonderful faith, which has already met with encouragement. They determined to build two orphanages, one for boys, and the other for girls. It seemed to be rash to make the attempt, but no sooner was their resolve made known than they received the gift of a valuable site for the boys' orphanage and shortly afterwards the offer, at a nominal price, of a piece of land suitable for the girls' orphanage. At the same time gifts of seventeen hundred rupees and a thousand rupees, aggregating $900, were sent for the building fund, and the work has been commenced. The work will be under the charge of Mr. H. Huizinga, aided by an advisory council, of which Dr. J. E. Clough, Rev. W. B. Boggs, Mr. G. E. Eddy and Rev. J. M. Baker are members. These names are well known among our Baptist friends and will be an assurance that the work will be wisely and economically conducted. We sincerely hope that our Baptist readers will authorize us to encourage these devoted brethren with the promise of support for a large number of their orphans.

Rev. E. S. Hume tells the story of one orphan whose love and self-sacrifice show how beautiful is the character of some of these children for whose support we appeal. He says:

"One day recently, two of our Christians found a pretty girl, about twelve years old, sitting under a tree, and trying to sell a basket full of leaves, which she had gathered. When questioned, she replied that her parents and all her relatives had died, except one sister, who was very weak and ill. She said that she daily gathered leaves, and used what she could earn to support that sister and herself. She was asked by the Christians if she would go with them, and was promised food and clothing, but she declined the offer, saying that it was her duty and her pleasure to care for the sister who was so ill. Two days later, she was again found, and the offer made on the previous occasion was repeated. This time she consented to go with the strangers, provided her sister were also cared for, and she herself were given plenty of work. Both conditions were readily agreed to, and the two sisters were soon safely accommodated at the mission house near by. For a week that industrious little twelve-year-old girl cooked, cared for and mothered thirty orphan children, several of whom, including her sister, were seriously ill from starvation. Soon after this, the whole company was taken to Bombay, and placed in the American Mission School.



LITTLE FAMINE WAIFS ADMITTED TO AN AMERICAN MISSIONARY'S STATION

AFTER A FEW WEEKS' CARE

"It was most interesting to notice with what pleasure this thoughtful child saw the flowers, trees and gardens of Bombay. In the district, whence she had just come, no green thing, except the leaves of trees, which had not yet been stripped, was visible, and every drop of water was cherished as a very precious thing, but here in the city the sight of so many beautiful things, and so much water quite overwhelmed her. It was a new thing also to come all at once among so many loving friends, and to hear of an invisible but ever present Friend, to whom she was taught to pray with closed eyes, and in whose name all that she was now receiving, was given to her. It is not strange that she, and many others like her, who are thus brought out of want and trouble and idolatry into what must seem to them heavenly surroundings, should soon learn to love with all their hearts the mighty Saviour, who, they are taught, sends them every gift."

Such children are worth saving. Growing up under Christian influences, they will be the best kind of missionaries carrying the truths of the Bible into the homes of their native land and embodying Christian principles in their lives. The missionaries long to help and train them. Will not the church at home give them the desire of their hearts? The Roll of Honor we have been publishing during the past few weeks is growing rapidly, and this week we have not space for all the pledges received. Much more, however, is needed. The missionaries must know how many orphans they may retain, and alas! how many must be turned away. This is a magnificent opportunity for self-denial in the cause of Christ. For fifteen dollars a year, an orphan can be maintained and educated. Every Christian who can by any means spare that amount should seek a share in the work.

CHINESE GIRLS : : : ON THEIR WAY TO WORK

WE associate the idea of bound feet with the Chinese and fancy that all the women have the wee, deformed feet on which they totter clumsily about, and which make walking almost an impossibility beyond their doors. But the Chinese working woman has feet of the natural size and is thus much to be envied by the lady whom a senseless and cruel fashion condemns to inaction all her life. The young girls in the picture are going to their work in a factory, sitting in a very jolly way in a wheelbarrow which is pushed along by a man who charges one cent a mile for his labor. One of the workers is a married woman with a baby, whom she has taken with her to her day's work. The homely scene brings the women of China very near to us. Because they are intensely ignorant, the Chinese are intensely conservative. The bound feet of their richer women symbolize only too well the bondage of their minds, cramped by ages of superstition and illumined by no new ideas. Probably when the war cloud lifts from the far East, and a dawning better day breaks through the gloom, they may show that their dread of foreigners, their immense self-conceit and their absymal darkness have been due to lack of faith and knowledge. Upon them too, shall the Light shine which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

THE ODD CARRYALL USED BY CHINESE WORKING GIRLS

In Japan

Our Western code of manners must seem very crude and barbarous to a polite Oriental. For instance, you are invited to dinner in Japan. You arrive. Your host meets and greets you, bowing to the ground, "I beg your pardon for my rudeness on the last occasion."

If you are an American you are nonplussed and tongue-tied. If you are a Japanese you know what to say.

"How can you say such a thing when it was I who failed to show you due courtesy?"

"Far from it. I received a lesson in good manners from you."

"How can you condescend to come to such a poor house as this?"

"How can you, indeed, be so kind as to receive such an unimportant person as myself under your distinguished roof?"

All this sounds very droll to us. But it means drill and discipline and taking time. Half of us have no time to be really courteous. We lack repose, and we lack charm. We are not demonstrative. The weak point in the armor of Japanese politeness such as the above, is its obvious insincerity. Compliment with us need not be flavored by deceit.

A Present Duty

Wherever and whenever any one of us sees an act of cruelty to a child, a dog, a cat, a horse, or any dumb animal, or to an old man or woman, the obligation is to rebuke it at once. Cowardice sometimes prompts us to pass by the offence in silence, with the excuse that the matter is none of our business. This is a weak subterfuge. It is everybody's business to set a wrong right, and the brutal person who wantonly strikes a child, or abuses a horse, or kicks a dog, should be brought up with a round turn, admonished of his meanness and shamed into better behavior. If he will not stop his wicked conduct at our word, our duty then goes a step farther, and he should be reported to the police.

Curious Marriage Customs

In Yorkshire, England, it was formerly considered only right for the parson to be the first person after the ceremony to kiss the bride. On one occasion a clergyman who, as a stranger, did not understand the local custom, was puzzled after marrying a couple in a Yorkshire village, to see the whole company keep together in an attitude of anticipation. "What are you waiting for?" he asked. "Please, sir," answered the bridegroom, "ye've no kissed Mollie, and I must n't do it until ye have." In Nottingham, in the parish of Wellow, there is a pretty custom dating from time immemorial, when the banns of marriage are read out, for a person previously selected to rise in the midst of the congregation and say aloud, "God speed them well!" whereupon the clerk and congregation respond with fervor, "Amen!" In Cheshire the bride's path to church is strewn, not with loose flowers but is carpeted with beautiful wreaths and garlands, made by kindred and friends and laid down in the dewy dusk of the previous evening, friends vieing together in decorating the doorstep with the finest wreath. The bridegroom's path is strewn with flowers, too, but of a different kind. If he be a carpenter his acquaintances strew the way with a great profusion of curly shavings; if a tailor with odds and ends of cloth; if a harnessmaker or a cobbler with bits of leather, and there is a tradition that an agreeable young butcher once found his pathway decorated with bones.

Disobedience to Parents

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, calling attention to a very sad sign of our period, says: "It has been my lot during the past sixteen years to stay in very many Christian homes. The strength and beauty of some of them abide as a perpetual fragrance. Others have left the most painful impressions. Children self-willed, and consequently bringing themselves into perpetual unhappiness, and inflicting discomfort on all who came in contact with them, have prophesied evil things for the days to come."

Not long ago I saw a young father and mother in company with their only child, a sturdy and noble-looking little fellow of three years. The child was extremely wilful, and if thwarted threw himself into a paroxysm of rage, screaming and shrieking until it was most uncomfortable to be in his neighborhood. Instead of controlling this temperamental confusion, his parents bent to the storm. They gave Ruben everything in sight if he would but consent to stop crying. When he disobeyed them, they laughed; when he struck another child and seized its toys, they called proud attention to its energy and determination. What the outcome of this absurdly weak regime of theirs may be, time will tell, but I fear the worst for a little one brought up to disobey and dishonor its parents. No one has a right or an excuse for so treating a little child of God.

Chums

"Grandpapa and I are chums!" said little Eleanor. And indeed they were. Gold-haired maiden and silver-haired gentleman, they went hand in hand along the beach, they gathered shells and seaweed, they sat upon the sand and told each other stories. Somehow they were very close together, both having the sweetness of the child-heart, and both accepting with joy and gratitude whatever gift the dear Father sent them from above. Happy chums, grandsire and granddaughter.

—CONSTANT READER. You would study music under insuperable difficulties and with great peril to your eyes if you attempted to master its intricacies at night after a busy day. Twenty-six is not too advanced an age if you had your days to devote to the task, but even then you would be handicapped. As music is now studied, it requires the devotion of a lifetime.

ONLY A SCHOOLGIRL

GOING to school in childhood.
Life in its fulness has just begun,
Swinging her books in careless glee.
The difficult lesson—the puzzling sum—
Vanish, and leave no trace she can see—
No time for worry when lessons are done.
Coming from school in childhood.

Going to school to the world.
Her lessons have harder grown.
She has learned to laugh while her life looks sad,
She smiles while with grief her heart is prone:
But her eyes must look merry, her face must look glad,
Though her soul's bitter anguish can hardly be borne.
Going to school to the world.

Going to school to God.
There are tempests she still must meet;
And still come the battles, the trials, the fears:
But Jesus makes bitterness turn into sweet,
As, bring each grief, each sorrow, each tear,
She lays them rejoicing at Christ's wounded feet.
She has learned her lesson of God.

"God Bless Papa!"

"God bless papa, mama, grandpa, grandma," the little ones utter the sweet prayer night after night. But sometimes they are not devout and hurry through the petition as if it were a rigmarole. Teach them to pray reverently to the great God.

Scrofula
What is commonly inherited is not scrofula but the scrofulous disposition.
This is generally and chiefly indicated by cutaneous eruptions; sometimes by paleness, nervousness, and more or less general debility.
The disease afflicted Mrs. K. T. Snyder, Union St., Troy, Ohio, when she was eighteen years old, manifesting itself by a bunch in her neck, which caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore.
It afflicted the daughter of Mrs. J. H. Jones, Parker City, Ind., when she was thirteen years old, and developed so rapidly that when she was eighteen she had eleven running sores on her neck and about her ears.
These sufferers were not benefited by professional treatment, but according to their own unsolicited statement, were quickly relieved by
Hood's Sarsaparilla
That positively corrects the scrofulous disposition and radically and permanently eliminates the disease.

...IN A FRONTIER SUNDAY SCHOOL

A Type of Many that have been Established in Neglected Communities

A MISSIONARY of the American Sunday School Union in Minnesota, of many years' experience, founded not long ago a Sunday School in one of the neglected communities there. He gathered in the boys and girls, and even some older persons who had never before been in a Sunday School. This neighborhood had been regarded as somewhat rough, but the missionary found that the people appreciated what had been done for them. The boys are becoming tractable where before they were wild. They have a godly young man for superintendent and some very earnest young women for teachers, and good library books, Sunday School papers and cheerful songs of praise are already turning the neighborhood towards general Sunday observance, and toning up the entire population in morals and character.

There is a scarcity of good reading matter in many of these neglected places away from the towns and villages. The coming of the Sunday School missionary, with his wagon filled with Bibles, picture papers for the little ones, good books, always helps a sparsely settled community to better things.

A Sunday School missionary in North Dakota writes this interesting letter to those who helped him establish such a school as that already described:

"The school established through your kindness and liberality extend to you greetings. They wrote me a few days ago expressing their appreciation of your kindness in supplying them with books and literature. Perhaps, in order to understand how acceptable your gift was to this Sunday School, it would be well to tell you something about the people here, their home life, privileges and occupations. Ours is a little town, built up in less than a year, with a population of two or three hundred, situated in the southeast corner of a county in North Dakota, on a bleak and barren prairie, with no timber, no groves, no beautiful houses, nothing but the rolling prairie stretching out like an ocean in all directions as far as the eye can reach. Farmers have come in from various states and foreign countries, and have built little shanties in which they live, eat and sleep, a family all in one room. Some of the Russians keep their horses, sheep and cattle in the other half of the shanty. These shanties are usually one story in height, and perhaps 12 x 16 or 16 x 20 feet in length and breadth, built of rough timber, and, for the winter, covered on the outside with sod. This summer was spent mostly in breaking up the wild prairie and sowing part of it to flax or wheat; but the drought set in, and so they will raise no wheat, no potatoes and very little flax, consequently there will be much suffering this winter, unless the new settlers are cared for. Aid has already been asked from the State, and on investigation one hundred and seventy individuals were found in great need; two had already died from starvation. This destitution is mostly among the Russians, who came here without resources; but their need is being looked after, and their wants supplied as fast as possible. About half of the people in the vicinity are Russians. Most of them are quite religious, and they include Baptists, Evangelicals and Lutherans. They speak the German language, and a German Sunday School had been opened up here just before we established our Union School, so that now all classes can be accommodated. It was our privilege to hold the first English service. A goodly number assembled, and the outcome was the new school. By establishing these Union Schools, we get the people united."

Anyone desiring information or to aid this frontier religious work may address Rev. E. P. Bancroft, Secretary, 158 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Rich Toward God*

The Difference Between the Riches of the World and the Riches of the Soul

IDEAS of wisdom vary with the individual. A man with a hobby is sure to have a neighbor who thinks him foolish to spend his time in his favorite pursuit. The man who collects postage stamps or butterflies or pictures or books, is depised by those who do not have the same tastes. There are not so many who think a man foolish for spending his years in the acquisition of wealth, but if he does it in a certain way and allows the pursuit to monopolize his thoughts, then the Highest of all Authorities pronounces him a fool. There does not seem at first sight anything particularly foolish about the man Christ described. He reaped the fruits of his fields, and when those fruits accumulated he naturally considered the problem of storage. If a firm's business increases, one of the most likely courses for them to take is to rebuild or move into larger premises. So this man decided to pull down his barns and build greater ones. There was nothing wrong in the project. It was in what he said to himself that his folly is seen. He appears to think that this accumulation of goods is all that his soul needs. Why, it needed life as the very first thing, and, in forgetting that, he showed folly. The many years on which he counted were not his. Even if he had enjoyed them, the stores of goods would have been poor sustenance for the soul, but he forgot that, too, which also was a proof of his folly.

There is a great deal of the same kind of folly in the world. There are some business men whose lives are a benefaction, who delight in helping a friend in a difficulty, in making plans for the betterment of other lives, building institutes like Cooper Union in New York, in endowing free libraries and hospitals; but not all are of that kind. There are many who are miserly, or who spend their gains on themselves, and never or seldom do any one a good turn. What are they working for? Some do not ask themselves the question, but go on laboring and accumulating to the end. Others—and these are the large majority—have before them a picture of a time when they will cease to work and begin to enjoy life. The story is told of a millionaire merchant in New York who had a host of enterprises all bringing gain into his treasury, that he asked a friend who envied him, what remuneration he would consider a sufficient compensation for managing the various branches. His friend hesitated and the merchant asked: "Would you do it for your food and clothes?" "Certainly not," said the friend. "Well," said the merchant, "that is all I get." Some of these retired business men live to realize the impossibility of enjoyment. Mr. Smiles says he knew one man who had spent his years in making candles. He had always looked forward to the goodtime he would have when he had made his fortune. At last the fortune was made and he sold his business and went to live in a beautiful house. But in six months he went to his successor, and, saying he was miserable, asked permission to come and "help, on melting days."

It might have occurred to this man of Christ's story that there were some people around him on whom he could bestow his surplus, some whose lives might be blessed and brightened by it. But he does not think of that. His miserable, narrow soul sees no other solution of the problem than that of storing the surplus up for himself. That very fact shows the poverty of his soul. It had lost its best instincts and capacities. It had been so starved that its clearest perceptions and best impulses were withered. It had become so closely identified with the body as to lose the natural divinity that belongs to the soul. The man is conscious of the fact, though not of the significance of the fact. So he says to his soul, "Soul, take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry." As if these goods were all that the soul required for its happiness. It was as if a youth returning home from college, whither he had been sent to acquire an education, came with medals and cups won in athletic contests, but without any of the knowledge and capacity he had been sent to gain. If the father of such a youth had intended that his boy should be a lawyer or a physician, how disappointed he would be to find his mind destitute of the knowledge required for his profession! His mind is impoverished instead of being rich in knowledge. So the soul which has been imprisoned in a sordid life, is not rich in the qualities that God expects it to develop. They have not been exercised, and so have deteriorated and become paralyzed, and God characterizes such a man as a fool.

MINISTER'S FOOD

Its Value Discovered during Absence of Family.

Rev. J. B. Ley, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South Tampa, Fla., had an interesting experience when his family were compelled to leave on account of the yellow fever. He says: "Last September, when we were visited by a yellow fever scare, my family left for an indefinite stay in the interior.

"I had, for about two years, been under considerable physical and mental strain, and my nervous system seemed to utterly give way. I had some excellent physicians, but their remedial agencies failed to reach the case,—at best affording only temporary relief.

"At the time the family left, my attention was called to Grape-Nuts food. Several things had led me to believe that my troubles were largely due to improper nutrition. The absence of the family gave me a good opportunity to try the new food, for it is perfectly cooked and therefore required no work on my part.

"So I began to make two meals a day, supper and breakfast, on Grape-Nuts and cream of milk, and had nothing else. I confined myself to the proper allowance, not overeating. The improvement was marked, almost from the first, my digestion was better, sleep became regular and restful, and I began to gain flesh. I could soon do work with less fatigue and more satisfaction.

"My nervous system has been wonderfully improved, and today I weigh more than I have ever weighed, and find my strength equal to all the responsibility. This is not all; on the return of the family Grape-Nuts became a regular article of food at the morning hour. The children ate it and improved.

"My wife, who was nursing an infant, discovered that after she began using Grape-Nuts regularly, for the first time in many years, Nature's food supply for the baby was adequate, without resorting to artificial subterfuges. Grape-Nuts food not only carried us through the sickly season, but has been a Godsend to our entire family."

. . . MISS ARABELLA'S SUNDAY SCHOOL BOYS

.. By MARY B. WINGATE ..

HOW came I to take a class of boys? No one else was willing to teach them and though I had no experience and but little idea of the responsibility involved, I consented to do so. How have I acquired my present influence over them? Well, that is quite a story, but if you wish to hear I shall be glad to tell it.

They were from eight to twelve years of age, and I soon found if I expected them to be present, I must be there too, rain or shine. I found, too, I must be thoroughly posted on the lesson or they were soon to find it out, even if they had not studied it.

Presently I began to think I'd visit my boys. Like people in story books, I bought a bundle of tracts (which I did not take time to read) and set forth on my rounds. My first call was at an elegant house. My pupil's mother told me patronizingly, that she attended Grace Church herself but let her son go where he pleased. I was embarrassed and soon rose to leave, handing her the first tract which came to hand. It proved to be "Pay Your Debts." This she declined; which perhaps was not strange as the family was said to have a failing which made advice peculiarly applicable.

Resolved to be more careful in future, I started forth again and soon overtook one of my boys whom I had seen playing on the streets on Sunday. I kindly reproved him, when he said, "I'd much ruther have a bike and take a spin on Sunday, same's you do." The impudent boy! As if my taking a quiet ride for my health was at all like his Sabbath-breaking. I gave him a tract on "Rudeness" which he said "would be handy to light a cigarette with." A little further on I met another of my boys and asked "Where he'd been the last two Sundays," "Been berryin'!" "That was very wrong," said I. "Well, you bought 'em on Monday mornin'," he retorted, "and didn't pay all they was wuth, nuther!" I gave him a tract on "Sabbath Breaking," and resolved to be careful when, and of whom I bought my next berries.

I then called on two pupils living in a tenement house. The mother said she could not send them regularly to Sunday School as there was so much sewing to be done and she had four other children to sew for. I wanted to offer to help but I had so much fancy-work on hand that I didn't see how I could; so I left a tract on the "Golden Rule" and hastened away. My next stop was at a little tumble-down house, the abode of Freddy, my youngest pupil. His mother said he cried to go but had no shoes. I wanted to buy him some but I knew if I did I could not get that "real" lace collar I wanted so much. I was just going to leave a tract on "Selfishness" but had sense enough left to feel that it was hardly appropriate.

On my way home I encountered a pair of my lads with birds' nests full of eggs in their hands. I told them what I thought of nest-robbers and gave each a tract on "Cruelty." One youth, glancing slyly at my hat, said: "Them's purty feathers. Where'd you git 'em from, Miss? I hearn as how bird's wings is cut off'n live birds to dress ladies' hats—and how agrets is took from birds settin' on their nests and their young ones left to die."

"My uncle out in Californy," said the other, "tells how they hire men to hold ostridges and pulls out their feathers—leavin' them all covered with blood—jest for the wimmen to wear on their heads." Alas! all three of the offending articles were perched upon my hat at that very moment. Covered with confusion, I beat a hasty retreat. That bundle of tracts I tossed surreptitiously over a fence and was tempted to fling my hat after them; but had just grace enough left to wear it home where I went directly to my room which I did not leave again that night, and there gave myself up to bitter reflection.

I decided I should need quite a salary if I continued to make such calls. I had soiled my light silk, stained my lavender kids, wasted my time, offended the mothers, roused the antagonism of the boys, and saw clearly I must lay by my new and expensive hat, and be very careful how I used my beloved bicycle on Sunday. I had indeed returned a sadder and wiser woman. Now, what should I do to undo as far as possible the mischief done to my class. It was plain that my boys were educating me whether I was teaching them anything or not.

Those words, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not," came forcibly to my mind. Down on my knees in deep humiliation I sought forgiveness for my past, and asked that I might be able to win my class for Jesus; then I laid me down and slept.

A sweet dream or vision came to me that night and I have never lost the impression I then received. A Sabbath School teacher entered heaven and was greeted by her class—all there before her. Oh, how white their robes were! and oh, the music! but beyond all, the smile on the Saviour's face—the beauty, the tenderness of that smile—can I ever forget it!

Oh! what would a lifetime of service here be compared with the rapture of that hour. Would it not pay to dress more plainly here if by so doing one might wear such robes there? I had devoted much time to my music here, but would not the singing of one saved soul make sweeter music to me there than all the oratorios of earth?

I had used little tact in calling on my boys, but I could "entertain charmingly" as I had been told many times. I resolved to invite them to visit me. I studied the Sunday School lesson as never before; and my class was more interested and more interesting than I had ever known it. Monday, I mailed notes of invitation to all the boys for Friday evening; and I also sent Freddy a pair of shoes; Tuesday I sewed for the pair in the tenement house. After that I was busy with my preparations. Father warned me I should have a terrible time "house-cleaning after the boys" and that they would probably break all my "jimcracks," as he calls my bric-a-brac, but I did not mind his teasing. I arranged a nice lunch and some merry games.

The boys all came, bringing friends with them. I never saw lads behave in a more gentlemanly manner. I showed my rarest curios and played my sweetest music for their entertainment and they declared in leaving that they had had "a jolly time." The next day, I received some queer little notes over which I laughed and cried. Joe, my biggest boy, said he'd "thrash any boy who called me an 'old maid' after this." I told my boys to invite their friends into our class, and by the way, the class has been growing ever since. I think they must each have had a goodly number of friends. Some of the boys offended on that unfortunate tract-distributing day, have apologized for their rudeness. I know now that I love all of my boys and I believe they love me. Best of all, they are beginning to love my Saviour and I hope some day to see my Lord's face wearing for them and me the same smile of welcome it wore in my dream.

Mr. Moody's Last Testimony

On the 22d of October last, just two months before he was called home, Mr. Moody gave the following striking testimony while preaching in Brooklyn: "I know that if I should be asked to be a witness in a court, my testimony would be taken, and I want you to take my testimony as to what it is to be filled with the Spirit. There are two epochs in my life which stand out clear. One is when I was between eighteen and nineteen years old, when I was born of the Spirit. There never can come a greater blessing to a man on this earth than to be born again—born from above; to have the God-nature planted in him. God has been good to me. He has showered blessing after blessing upon me; but the greatest blessing, next to being born again, came sixteen years after, when I was filled with the Spirit, and it has never left me."

No higher praise can be offered nor better references given concerning the virtues of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People than the many voluntary testimonials from ministers of the gospel which have come from all parts of the country, and which have more than supported all the claims made for this excellent medicine.

The most recent indorsement is that coming from Rev. Enoch Hill, pastor of the M. E. church of Grand Junction, Iowa, who says:

"I am a firm believer in the efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, the remedy having been used in my family with highly gratifying results. For three or four years I was a sufferer from general debility. I seemed to be lacking in vitality, was tired out most of the time, and sleep gave me no rest or refreshment. I was troubled with headache much of the time, and although I was not confined to my bed, my illness incapacitated me for energetic work in my pastorate.

"A sister-in-law living in Nebraska, who has suffered very much, and who has used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with good results, recommended them to me, and I decided to try them. I had taken but two or three doses of the pills when I found that they were helping me, and further use of the remedy brought such relief that I am glad to offer this public recommendation of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People in the interest of suffering humanity.

"My wife was troubled much as I was, although her case was aggravated by insomnia. The pills also proved of the greatest benefit in her case.

"I have recommended the pills to many whom I have met in my work, and am always pleased to endorse the medicine, the excellence of which has been established within my own observation."

Gospel Progress in Cuba

Pushing the Work at Aguacate— A Mission Projected at Trinidad

DIRECTOR Arthur W. Dowe, of the El Faro Christiano (Christian Light-house) Mission at Aguacate, Cuba, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, giving cheering news of the progress of evangelical work here. He says:

The Cuban country towns and villages, of which there are hundreds, have as yet been unouched by the Gospel, with the exception of his place, Aguacate, where our mission is ocated, and a branch at Jaruco, fourteen miles istant, which we have just opened. The peole are kind and hospitable, though very poor, ot having yet recovered from the effects of he war; but already the fields in many places re under cultivation, and in a few years more e hope to see Cuba again happy and proserous under a free government and, what is ven better, a free religion. The climate is etter as a whole than in many parts of the Jnited States. The land is rolling and in ome parts quite mountainous and picturesque, otted with groups of cocoanut and royal alm trees, and covered with green fields of ananas, sugar cane and the tobacco plant. 'ruit and vegetables are plentiful, but meat nd chickens and eggs are quite expensive. Ve pay thirty cents per pound, Cuban money, or our meat.

Yellow fever is the most feared, but it is onfined mostly to the large cities and towns n the coast. Aguacate is free from it. It ttacks foreigners principally, but if one bstains from stimulants, peppers and most f the native fruits, he stands a good chance o pull through all right.

As soon as the rains are over, I shall visit a umber of other towns and extend the Gospel s rapidly as possible. And if God wills, it is ur desire to open up the quaint old city of 'rinidad, on the South coast, a place of about 5,000 people, and one of the healthiest, leanest and highest cities on the island. It ill be a good location for a Bible school and raining home for Christian workers, both or natives and for foreigners who are learning he language. We already have a comfortble home for any brother or sister whom the ord may send to aid in the work. We have o salaries, but all our wants are supplied from ay to day. We can use large numbers of panish Bibles and New Testaments, especilly the latter. I shall be glad to correspond ith any who feel called into this field of labor, nd who may address me at Aguacate, Cuba.

Syrian Gifts to India

REV. W. L. NELSON, Tripoli, Syria, who, during a tour of visitation of Syrian churches, has been interesting the people in the sufferings of India's eople, sends us the following letter, accomanied by the articles described therein:

The response everywhere showed a keen ense of Christian obligation to extend a helpng hand. At one village, the Protestant ommunity has been greatly depleted by migration to America; scarcely any one reains but the women and old men. Money s scarce among them, and yet when the story f suffering was told there was an instantaeous outburst of sympathy and pity. One an at once handed me a silver dollar, anther did the same, a third said, "Put down ny name." A poor widow said, "Please put own five cents for me," and so all wished to o what they could.

A young lad whispered to his mother and hen went out, upon which the mother said hat he wanted to send some of his own earnngs to those poor children in India. The next norning he brought the missionary two small oins worth about four cents, saying he wanted hat sent to the poor orphans in India.

As I sat alone in the room preparing for a ublic service, a poor widow entered with a imple shirt in her hand. She said if she ould sell it she would do so, but as no one ared to buy she would ask me to sell it for whatever it would bring, and send the proceeds to India. It is a raw silk undershirt, uch as goes into every bridal outfit, and had been among the treasures of this poor woman. t had never been worn, had been long in her possession, and, as a matter of sentiment, parting with it meant no slight sacrifice.

Later, as I was just about to leave, another mall coin worth about one cent was handed me. It came from a poor woman who makes er living by carrying jars of water on her houlder from the fountain to the houses, and epresented a good part of her day's income. She wished me to be sure and send this little ite to help some helpless one in India.

The full market value of these pathetic offerngs has been added to the Syrian fund for Inia, but it occurred to me that some readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD might be glad to edeem the gifts for larger sums for the Relief 'und, and so multiply the good done. The oins and shirt are sent to your office at the Bible House, where inquiries may be made.

The Wing Piano

The usual way to buy a piano is from a retail dealer or agent. We do not sell our pianos in this way. We supply our pianos direct from our factory to retail purchasers. We do not employ a single salesman or agent, and we have no salesroom except our factory. We transact all of our business and ship all of our pianos direct from our factory. As our expenses are small, a very small profit pays us.

No matter how far away you live, our improved system of doing business makes it actually more convenient and more satisfactory to buy a piano from us than to buy one from a local dealer in your own town or city.

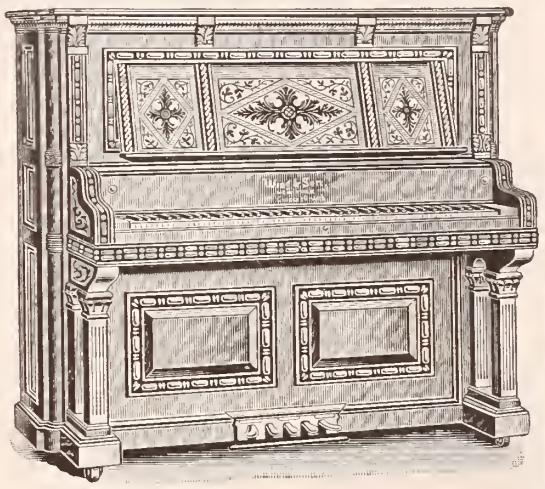
Over 30,000 Wing Pianos have been manufactured and sold in 32 years (since 1868).

Every Wing Piano is guaranteed for twelve (12) years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material.

Everyone who intends to purchase a piano should have our complete catalogue. We send it free on request.

STYLE 29. CONCERT GRAND UPRIGHT

No other Piano made equals this in style and design of case



I should like to say a few words about your pianos and manner of doing business. No one is doing themselves justice in not availing themselves of your most liberal terms. The tone, touch and durability of your pianos cannot be questioned. The instrumental attachment pleases every one who hears it and allows a combination of effects which cannot be equalled.
ALBERT DRAEGERT,
Thornbury, Iowa.

The piano I bought of you in December is giving us the very best of satisfaction. In tone, touch and workmanship it is certainly extra fine. The strangest part of it seems to be that you can sell such an instrument for such a low price.
F. D. GREEN,
Perry, Lake County, Ohio.

SENT ON TRIAL FREIGHT PREPAID. We will send this piano or your choice of 23 other Wing Pianos on trial, to any part of the United States, all freights paid by us. We will allow ample time for a thorough examination and trial in the home, and if the piano is not entirely satisfactory in every respect we will take it back at our own expense. There is no risk or expense to the person ordering the piano. No money is sent to us in advance, we pay all freights.

THE INSTRUMENTAL ATTACHMENT

imitates perfectly the tones of the Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither and Banjo. Music written for these instruments, with and without piano accompaniment, can be played just as perfectly by a single player on the piano as though rendered by a parlor orchestra. The original instrumental attachment has been patented by us and it cannot be had in any other piano, although there are several imitations of it.

A Remarkable Remedy for

Rheumatism

Mr. J. F. Brookfield writes from Salisbury, N. C.: "While in Knoxville, Tenn., last December, I met an elderly gentleman, a professor of music, who had been troubled for several years with rheumatism. I told him I would send down, before I left town, a bottle of Tartarlithine, which I believed would help him if it didn't entirely relieve him. While in Montgomery, this trip, his son told me it did his father so much benefit that they had written to you to send their father half a dozen bottles. The benefit given to the old gentleman is very remarkable, after exhausting all the physician's skill, and the legion of remedies advertised for his complaint had been used."

Tartarlithine is supplied in bottles containing 50 doses at $1.00, and can be obtained of all druggists or post-free by mail. Pamphlets with Testimonials sent free.

Coffee Topers as Bad as Others.

"A friend of our family who lived with us a short time was a great coffee drinker and a continual sufferer with dyspepsia. He admitted that coffee disagreed with him, but you know how the coffee drinker will hold onto his coffee, even if he knows it causes dyspepsia.

"One day he said to me that Postum Food Coffee had been recommended and suggested that he would like very much to try it. I secured a package and made it strictly according to directions. He was delighted with the new beverage, as was every one of our family. He became very fond of it and in a short time his dyspepsia disappeared. He continued using the Postum and in about three months gained twelve pounds.

"My husband is a practising physician, and regards Postum as the healthiest of all beverages. He never drinks coffee, but is very fond of Postum. In fact, all of our family are, and we never think of drinking coffee any more." Mrs. Mary E. Brown, Waterford, Va.

SOME "LITTLE MOTHERS" AND THEIR CHARGES WHO WENT TO MONT-LAWN

LITTLE MOTHERS AT MONT-LAWN

A GREAT COMPANY OF LITTLE PARENTS AND THEIR CHARGES HAVE A HAPPY TIME AT OUR FRESH-AIR HOME ON THE HUDSON

NEARLY two hundred "little mothers," and their charges are Mont-Lawn's most recent visitors. Eighty-eight of the company came from the Little Mothers' Aid Association; others from the Gospel Settlement; and a number who are under the wing of no benign organization, came, on their own account, from this, that and the other gloomy section of the overcrowded East Side.

A touching picture was presented when this long line of little girls, each conducting one, two or more smaller children, filed into the Chrystenah for the sail up the Hudson. Some carried babies in their arms. In many instances, there was slight difference in size between the careworn "little parents" and their charges. It was odd to hear a tiny girl of eight say of a big boy of five: "That's my brother—he's my baby—please let him walk with me." Odd too, to hear these small parents talking like little old women of their trials in raising children.

"I couldn't go to school for a year after he was born," said Matilda of two-year-old Frank. I brought him through the whooping cough, and Annie brought him through the measles." Annie, ten years old, divides responsibility with Matilda in looking after Frank, Esther, Fred and Joseph. "I go to school one day, and Matilda goes to school one day," explained Annie. "Our mama goes out washing every day, and brings washing home at night." Elvie, thirteen, carried two-year-old Annie, while Martin and Emma clung to her skirts. John, aged twenty months and small for ten—a little wailing thing—clung all the time to poor, pallid Sarah, the faithfulest, gentlest "little mother" in the world. Six months ago John's mama died of consumption. Sarah, only twelve, has been "little mother" to four children since, doing the cooking, washing and ironing as best she can. Her father is a laborer, away from home all day. The teachers at Mont-Lawn have made friends with that baby; they bathe him and rub him with oil and feed him properly, and the poor little skeleton promises to become a real rosy, plump baby. Both of Rosy's parents drink. There are nine in the family. With her younger brother and sister, she is having a peaceful, happy time at Mont-Lawn.

Many of these little mothers had declined all opportunities for outings this summer, because they could not take their babies with them. Others, being thirteen or fourteen years old, and therefore beyond our age-limit, which is from six to twelve, had not preferred request for outings. Great was the joy in the tenements when Dr. Klopsch's invitation was passed around inviting the little mothers to come and bring their families.

No class of people in this world are more in need of help or more deserve it than these children of the poor, who devote themselves to the care of younger brothers and sisters; in truth, meriting the title of "little mothers," which missionaries and the press long ago conferred upon them. Our readers will be glad to know that self-forgetting members of this band, who have been denying themselves all diversions for the sake of their charges, are having a long, happy, carefree outing at Mont-Lawn. How radiantly they smile to see their babies drinking all the sweet, rich milk they want! With what a pleased air they behold little brothers and sisters invested with clean, good garments! And what a lovely time it is in the dormitories when the little parents put their babies to bed in clean, nice cots! The soft, happy murmur: "Our Father," when "teacher" leads them all in prayer is music that angels might love to hear. We feel that the prayers of this little company must bring down blessings upon those who help us in this work for Christ's little ones.

Escape From the Boxers

Writing from Ts'ang Chow, in China, a lady missionary thus describes her escape from the Boxers: "On Monday a party of men came to see Mr. Murray, a deputation from the magistrate, advising us to make no delay as there were thousands of Boxers not very far from us and that they were collecting from the south every day. They said they had a plan for our escape, but did not tell us much then as it would not be wise to publish our plans. On Tuesday afternoon they and the magistrate's head man came and said they would send us four carts and an escort of soldiers at twelve o'clock that night. We spent all Tuesday busily packing away things and a bag to take with us, as we were told we could not take baggage. There was, however, a possibility of our sending away some boxes to Yen-sau for safety, but what we left in the house we had little or no hope of ever seeing again, so you can imagine it was difficult to pack. The women in our h[illegible] were crying, terribly frightened, and the servants were scared out of their wits. A group of men had been watching us all day on Tuesday from a mound outside the compound, but we were not afraid, and even walked about the compound.

"Twelve o'clock arrived and no carts! Time went on, and it was an anxious time, I can tell you. At twenty minutes to two a soldier rushed in, made us put on Chinese clothes, would not let us speak, and hurried us off to the compound gate. He absolutely refused to let us take anything in the way of baggage. I could not get more than my sun helmet. The compound was crowded with people—soldiers and (we learned after) Boxers. Five hundred soldiers took us to the Yamen, or rather the camp, where the magistrate took our names. The Boxers tried to prevent us crossing the ferry, and we saw lots of them armed in the houses as we came through the city. The five hundred soldiers simply took us through the city; only sixteen went with us. We rode 160 li (i.e., about sixty miles), arriving at Chi-Kow about 6 P.M. It is a Chinese port on the coast.

"We had hoped to get off next day in fishing boats to Taku, but the wind didn't suit, so we had to wait. Men were unwilling to go to Taku, so we sent a message for a tug to fetch us. The British Admiral sent one, and, after several delays, we were able to get off at four o'clock on Saturday morning, to H.M.S. Orlando, lying outside Taku."

Babies' Clothes Will Now Fit Dollie

"Life-Size Doll"—"That's advertised" that the baby's clothes will fit. No clothes to make. If mamma can donate one of baby's outgrown changes, that her little daughter can put on and off, button and unbutton to her heart's desire, the life-size doll will live in that child's memory long after childhood's days have passed away.

Every little girl loves a doll, more so a big doll; imagine how proud and delighted she would be if you gave her a real "life size doll," 2 1-2 feet high, that can wear real clothes, whose head won't break, eyes fall in, or suffer any of the mishaps that dollie is apt to encounter.

This doll is an exact reproduction of a hand-painted French creation, done on extra heavy Sateen, that will not tear. In oil-colors that will not crock. The workmanship is perfect, the color effects the very finest.

The doll is intended to be stuffed with cotton or other suitable material. It is this Century's model of the old-fashioned "Rag Doll" that Grandma used to make, and would make Grandma open her eyes in wonder.

Dolly has Golden Hair, Rosy Cheeks, Brown Eyes, Kid Color Body, Red Stockings and Black Shoes, and in following the directions in making up it a piece of heavy cardboard is inserted in the soles, a perfect shoe is formed, enabling the doll to stand erect.

To the many mothers who have written, "Why don't you make a smaller doll for baby?" We have this same doll 20 inches high for the smaller children, which retails at 25 cents, while the "Lite-Size Doll" sells at 50 cents.

If you are unable to procure these Dolls at your Retailers, the manufacturers will, upon receipt of price, send post-paid, to any address in United States, Canada or Mexico. ART FABRIC MILLS, 40 White St., New York.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Lost Lamb*

IT was curious to watch Ralph Culver when he thought he was not watched.

He nearly always seemed to be listening for something or to be searching the horizon for some cloud or form. He would suddenly turn round and scan every bush with keen expectancy, and I had no idea why.

"J——," he would say in a minor tone, "you have seen many people?"

"Yes, Mr. Culver."

"Did you ever see two young hazel eyes with dreams in them?"

"Like your own, Mr. Culver?"

"No, no; mine are not young eyes. I mean a young girl's eyes."

"I don't think so."

"I want you to look for them. You cannot mistake the eyes I mean."

"Where am I to look, Mr. Culver?"

"You are to look everywhere and always till you find them."

"Oh!"

"Yes. When the shepherd you preach about went after the one sheep he had lost, the people seemed to say, 'When will you be back?' And he said, 'Not until I find it.' Never come back without the sheep, dead or alive. If you do see those eyes with dreams in them in one of the streets of Linstead you might say, 'Kitty,' as if you were speaking to yourself, and then watch if you see anything; and if you do see anything just say, 'Her father's waiting,' and then tell me."

"When?"

"Just come up at once and bring her, whoever she is, and tell her that the front door is always open if her name is Kitty. You understand?"

One winter evening Ralph Culver called on me as I was sitting in my snug little study in Linstead, and I think I never saw quite such a figure as the red fire shone upon him and the single candle lighted parts of his rugged face. If he had claimed to be John the Baptist or some wilderness-bred Elijah, I could hardly have doubted his identity.

"Mr. Culver! I'm glad to see you, but how do you happen to be here?"

"I just stepped down" (so he described a five-mile walk over snowy roads) "to get a few candles, as I always keep a light in the window."

"All night?"

"Have you forgotten already? She may come back at any time."

"Of course," said I; "yes, of course."

"And Kitty would know the meaning of the candle, and it would warm her heart."

"Of course," said I, mechanically; "of course."

"Even her mother could not set the candle just as I set it. I'm used to it."

The Criterion Library

Seventeen Thousand pages of the best writings of the world.

A work of 48 volumes of interest to all at a price within the means of every one —small monthly payments.

Desiring to publish this fall a set of books that would meet the approval of every one interested in reading, I have made a systematic inquiry in order to ascertain just what kind of a work would be most appreciated.

The result of the inquiries clearly indicates that the one set of books for which there is the greatest demand is a well selected library that would cover the more important and interesting branches of reading; consequently, I have published a library composed of the very best writings from the pens of authors of reputation.

Serious attention has been given to the selection of this library; it embraces history, biography, adventure, fiction, natural history, poetry and travel, and each volume is an authority upon the field it covers and is written in an entertaining style. With this library in your house no one need pass a dull evening, for all can find something here to interest and instruct them.

The library includes the works of such famous authors as Lockhart, Southey, Williams, Bush, James, Bell, Memes, Mrs, Jamison, Thatcher, Russell, Paulding, Rennie, Irving, Head, Fenelon, Segur. Stone, Bacon, Sargent, Florian, Halleck, Scott, Bryant, Barrows, Galt and Croly,

The set consists of forty-eight volumes, well printed from clear type upon special book paper, attractively bound in red cloth of special weave, with appropriate design upon the cover in two colors. It is a well made book in every respect, and one that will give entire satisfaction, yet I am enabled to offer this work at a price far below what any subscription work has heretofore been sold for.

Upon request the complete library of forty-eight volumes will be forwarded for your inspection and consideration.

If you decide to retain the work you are to remit only 37½ cents a volume; this amount, if you desire, can be paid at the rate of $1.50 per month for one year.

I will prepay delivery charges upon the library to your home, and if you should not desire to keep the books after you have seen them, you are to return at my expense. The list of authors and books will convey an idea of the value and interest of the library.

I have had especially bound, after the style of limited de luxe editions, a few sets of the Library. These have leather back and corners with gold veined marbeled sides, litho end sheets, gilt tops, silk head bands, with back stamped in gold lettering, with fillet top and bottom. The Library in this binding presents a richness rarely equaled, and the price for the few sets I have had bound is but 75 cents a volume. They can be paid for, if desired, at the rate of $3.00 a month for one year. The present price is offered to those who take advantage of this offer now. I reserve the right to increase the price at any time without notice.

Questions of the Week

1. What course should be adopted by the powers representing Christian civilization toward China's Dowager Empress, assuming that she is chiefly responsible for the rebellion and the subsequent riots and massacres of Christians in that country?

The powers having been involved in the affairs of China on account of the endangered life and liberty of their subjects, should first of all establish law and order. The Empress Dowager abetting the recent Boxer outbreak, is a criminal, and because of the power of her position is a very great offender. She should be held to the strictest account for all the crime for which she is thus responsible. The first necessary measure in demanding such account will be the restoration of the rightful emperor, Kuang Hsu, to the throne. Following the restoration, should be the apprehension and legal trial by China's government of the Empress Dowager. The powers, having entered into the neighborly interest in China's affairs should not feel that they have accomplished the ends of safety for their subjects till thus much of law and its supremacy has been secured. These things should not be done, however, because many of the victims were Christians, nor yet for revenge for the atrocity of the wrong, but simply as a measure of law and the guarantee of safety for foreigners in future. Lawful penalty is the warrant of lawful regard in future. C. P. ATKINSON.

2. What token is used in the Bible to express love, reverence, submission and deceit, and what are the passages in which it is so used respectively?

A kiss is the token referred to. 1. The kiss of love, Gen. 29: 11, "And Jacob kissed Rachel", also Luke 15: 20, "And his father ran and fell on his neck and kissed him"; also Luke 37: 38, where the sinful woman kissed Christ's feet. 2. The kiss of reverence, Exodus 18: 7, "And Moses met his father-in-law, and did obeisance, and kissed him." 3. The kiss of submission, 1. Samuel 10: 1, "And Samuel poured the oil on Saul's head and kissed him"; also Psalms 2: 12, "Kiss the Son lest he be angry." 4. The kiss of deceit, II. Samuel 20: 9, "And Joab took Amasa by the beard by his right hand to kiss him"; also Matt. 26: 49, "And Judas said, Hail, Master! and kissed him." HELEN EWING.

3. When and how did the custom of a wife taking her husband's name originate?

The custom originated among the Romans during the time of the republic. When a woman was married, she became a member of her husband's family and the relationship was expressed by the formula which the bride repeated on entering her husband's home: "Where thou art Gaius, I am Gaia." When, therefore, Cornelia was married to Cæsar, she was called Cornelia Cæsaris; that is, Cornelia of Cæsar. The custom in vogue to-day is practically the same, with this difference that the possessive form is omitted.

G. A. HAURY.

4. What were the marks of the Lord Jesus to which Paul referred (Gal. 6: 17)?

The Greek word translated "marks" means literally the "scars of the wounds made upon the body of a slave by the branding-iron, by which he was marked as belonging to his master." St. Paul's meaning is, "I (whatever others may do), I at least bear in my body the true marks which show that I belong to Christ; the scars, not of circumcision, but of wounds suffered for his sake." This is the explanation given by Conybeare and Howson, Life and Epistles of St. Paul.

G. E. KRAUTH.

Correct answers have been received also from J. K. Wilson, Joseph Hamilton, J. G. Osborne, P. Van Pelts, J. R. McDonald, Edith C. Robinson, J. H. Sherrard, C. P. Atkinson, G. A. Haury, C. P. Atkinson, and Hiram King.

5. To what extent, if any, is a worker who labors hard six days a week morally justified in seeking recreation on Sunday?

He certainly is justified in taking so much recreation as he finds is necessary to restore his exhausted strength and vitality and to enable him to perform properly and satisfactorily the duties of the coming week. One needs, however, to define recreation. It is not merely amusement, and in every case should be suited to the calling and condition of the worker. The physically-tired worker on his feet from dawn to dark all the week, and whose sinews and muscles have been exhausted with hard bodily toil, finds no true recreation in long Sunday excursions on a wheel or tramping great distances on foot. To him the quiet and rest which come from genial and pleasant home surroundings, from the perusal of an instructive and entertaining book is recreation, but where this, as is unfortunately too often the case, cannot be found in the home of the worker, or where a man's occupation is sedentary and his labor mental, he may properly find recreation for his tired brain in some outdoor occupation. Undoubtedly, some portion of each Sunday should be devoted to worship. Many a man and a woman find in church attendance beneficial recreation, but all cannot do this, and, in its last analysis, the question is one to be settled by the individual conscience taking into account the character of the man, the nature of the work, and of the recreation and all the circumstances of each case.

H. C. UNDERHILL.

Circumstances alter cases. A good rule for a worker is to attend one religious service on Sunday, whereby he may gain soul refreshment that will cheer and strengthen him all the week. Aside from this service, let him get all the rest that he can. In summer let him go into the suburbs or country when possible. This rest, however, does not mean Sunday excursions, prolonged bicycle riding, reading Sunday papers, arduous pleasure seeking, nor unseemly amusements. E. E. STOW.

6. Where there are two stores in the same line of business, one conducted by a Christian and the other by an unbeliever, ought the Christians of the community to deal with the Christian if his prices are higher than those of his competitor?

The Christian is not bound in such cases, but he should certainly prefer to deal with his brother, unless he finds that the brother is imposing upon him. It is possible that the non-Christian may be able to sell his goods lower than the Christian because he adopts harsh and cruel methods in procuring them. He may be able to sell garments at a lower rate because he pays his sewing women a beggarly remuneration for their work. Or he may keep his expenses down by not properly paying his clerks. Or he may be a hard man at a bargain, and by taking advantage of the necessities of the person from whom he buys, may procure his goods at less than their proper value. The Christian merchant, being debarred from such wicked methods by his principles, ought not to suffer the loss of customers, especially Christian customers, by his upright conduct. He has a right to expect of his brother Christians that they will show their abhorrence of his competitor's methods by refusing to patronize him. They should not become partners in cruelty by sharing in the proceeds of that cruelty. The Christian merchant, however, should not be greedy, and should not take advantage of Christian sympathy to get more profit than is his just due. If he does that, his brethren are justified in dealing elsewhere. HENRY WRIGHT.

7. Has there ever been a case of a clergyman officiating at his own marriage, and, if so, when and where did it occur?

According to newspaper reports, a dispatch from Harrisburg, Ill., states that Rev. Herbert W. Reynolds, of Kaleen, Ill., a short time ago married himself to Miss Fannie Ozment. Mr. Reynolds first consulted a number of attorneys and Circuit Clerk Lee as to whether a marriage without a license would be legal in Illinois. On being informed that it would not, he procured the license. Then the question was asked of County Clerk Pearce if he, Reynolds, being a minister, could perform his own ceremony. Pearce looked up the law and found that any minister, justice of the peace, judge of the court, etc., could perform a marriage ceremony, and the would-be bridegroom departed and arranged a surprise for the assembled guests. At the appointed hour the two walked into the room, faced each other, joined hands, and the usual questions were asked the bride by the bridegroom, after which the bridegroom repeated the ceremony himself as a pledge. MARGARET K. RAILEY.

8. What is the best way of dealing with a sulky boy or man? Is it better to let him alone to recover of his own accord or to argue and expostulate with him?

People are usually sulky because they imagine they have been wronged or imposed upon. Hence it is better to leave them alone thus giving them an opportunity to calmly consider the matter, after which they usually feel better. If argued with their argumentative faculties are aroused, but not being in good condition for calm reasoning, they fail to be convinced and are made more sulky and irritable. The best plan is to leave them alone on the question at issue, thus giving them chance for reflection. On other subjects treat them kindly and courteously. Then if the position you have taken in the matter is a just one they will surely come to your terms at last. CAROLINE SCHNEIDER.

9. Under normal conditions, which is the greater—the power of will or the power of the imagination?

Just as in an abnormal or diseased condition of the mind the imagination runs riot and controls the mind to such an extent that it sometimes works out the destruction of mind and body, so, under normal conditions, does the will hold the sceptre of power, guided by reason, but guiding and governing in turn every other faculty of the mind. The Scriptures throughout recognize the will as the highest, the holiest, and the most potent of the soul's powers. It is the will that determines life's activities and that works out man's destiny.

10. In assigning the seats in a new church, should the best seats be rented to those who will pay the highest price, or should the oldest members of the church be allowed first choice, or in what other way should the selection be made?

In an ideal condition of the church, pews will not be rented. The seats will all be free and voluntary contributions will pay all expenses. In some churches this is already practicable and in such cases it should be adopted. This would involve those who are earliest at the service getting the choice of seats. I am not sure that this would work well in every church. A popular preacher or a very efficient choir might attract a crowd who would so fill the seats that the people who built the church and pay all the expenses might not be able to get seats. Besides this there is a comfort in having an accustomed place in a church where the whole family can worship together and there is no way of securing such a seat so easily managed as paying for that particular seat. In allotting seats in a new church, I think the best way would be to allow the members in the order of seniority, not of age, but of membership, to make their choice, providing there are none who are deaf. A deaf person ought to be allowed to occupy the seat from which he can hear best. If there is a difference in the price of seats, which is not essential, the older members in making their choice would naturally take that difference into account. Where two persons with the same record of membership want the same seat, let it be decided by lot.

Another suggestion.

The following plan has stood the test of five years, and is thoroughly satisfactory in our (city) church: At our annual meeting in November a statement of the financial needs of the congregation for the year then beginning is made. Pledge cards are then circulated, and voluntary pledges taken. Slips of paper containing the names of those pledging are placed in a suitable receptacle, and drawn out by some one appointed. Seats are selected by those pledging in the order in which their names are drawn.

Advantages: 1. There is no "poverty corner." 2. An undesirable seat this year may give place to the best in the auditorium next year. 3. Locations changing in the general mix-up each year promote general acquaintance, and rule out the clique-ines encouraged by continued proximity. 4. The plan raises the money needed for expenses. 5. It is absolutely fair to all. J. H. BOMBERGER.

Miscellaneous Questions

A Subscriber, New York. Will you please tell me how many States and Territories there are in the United States, and what Territories have been admitted in the last ten years?

There are forty-five States, five Territories and one District, Columbia. In 1889 Washington was admitted; since then Idaho, Wyoming and Utah.

W. W. L., Decatur, Ala. Is it true that during the later years of his life, Henry Drummond gave utterance to infidel or unscriptural views?

He was a firm believer in evolution, if that is what you mean. But he was one of the most eminent Christians of his day and a most lovable, earnest, sincere soul. You may be quite sure he never uttered a word that he did not believe to be scriptural.

Reader, Pawtucket, R. I. Are the stars called worlds anywhere in the Bible?

Not in terms, though the recognition that they are such would seem to be implied in John 14: 2. The science of astronomy, though one of the most ancient in the world, having its origin in Phœnicia and Babylonia, does not seem, at any period of its history before the Christian era, to have regarded the stars as possible places of human habitation.

L. E. B., Harwinton, Conn. Is it wrong to pray after retiring instead of kneeling down before?

The mere matter of place or posture is not important, provided the heart be fixed upon God when we pray. It is always better, however, to pray before retiring, as sleep is apt to overcome one who is fatigued with the labors of the day before the prayer is finished. Besides, the attitude of reverence and humility—kneeling before our Heavenly Father—is the one which the true Christian finds best suited to the expression of his spiritual needs.

L. E. S., Brooklyn, N. Y. Are Congregationalists the same as the Independents of the seventeenth century? If so, why have they changed the name to the Congregational Church?

They are practically the same, though the majority of the preachers are less Calvinistic than the preachers of the denomination in the seventeenth century. Many of them have altogether abandoned the Calvinistic doctrines. The name "Congregationalist Churches," (not Congregational Church), better expresses the individuality of the different churches in this country, than the name "Independent," which emphasized the distinction from the State or Established Church, which, receiving help from the State, is under State control.

G. B., Hillsdale, Mich. 1. How did the day come to be divided into twenty-four hours? 2. What gave the names one, two, three up to twelve to the strokes of the clock? 3. Who made the first clock?

1. Subdivision of the day into twenty-four equal parts existed in the remotest ages. Some people regarded it as commencing at midday, as is even now the custom among astronomers; others reckoned from midnight to midnight; ancient Chaldeans and modern Greeks from sunrise to sunrise; Italians and Bohemians from sunset to sunset. The division of the civil night and day into twelve parts each, reckoning from midnight to midday and midday to midnight obtained among the ancient Egyptians, as it does among Europeans and Americans to-day. The Greeks divided the natural day and night into twelve parts each and the hours were of varying lengths. 2. The day being divided into twelve equal parts, it was natural to number these parts one, two, three, in the order of their succession, and to have the clock signify the hour by the corresponding number of strokes. 3. Clocks are said to have been invented in the ninth century by Pacificus, an archdeacon of Verona, but we have no evidence that striking clocks existed earlier than the twelfth.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL TOUR OF 40,000 MILES

... General Secretary International S. S. U.

THE conception was a bold one, and originated in the big heart of B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, our Acting Chairman. Details of arrangements were committed to the writer, as General Secretary of the International Convention, under whose auspices the tour was made. Our plan was to send a company of Sunday School workers into the Northwestern States and British Columbia, to attend their regular annual conventions and such special meetings as could be arranged for. The purpose was to review and strengthen the Sunday School work, especially the State organizations, and to encourage the workers as much as possible. Also to give the denominations represented in the party an opportunity to review their denominational work. With this in view, each of the workers was not only commissioned by the International Convention, but by the denomination to which he belonged, Rev. E. S. Lewis, D.D., of Columbus, Ohio, representing the Methodists; Robt. T. Bonsall, of Cincinnati, Ohio, the Baptists; Rev. Alexander Henry, of Philadelphia, the Presbyterians, and the writer the Congregationalists. Prof. E. O. Excell, of Chicago, the great leader of song, was with the party throughout, and in charge of that important feature of the work. None of the members of the party, except the General Secretary, received any pay for their services. The International Committee simply bore their expenses.

The aggregate travel was nearly 40,000 miles, covering an aggregate of 256 days, though the work was all done in eight weeks, from May 15 to July 15, 1900. Meetings were held in eleven States and one province, two new organizations being effected, viz., Wyoming and British Columbia. 238 addresses were made. All this at a total expenditure of less than $1,000, the money for which was subscribed before the tour began.

Our tour was exceedingly opportune. This great Northwestern country had been asking us for help, and we could not extend it to them because of the distance and expense. The territory covered included Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana, Washington, British Columbia, Oregon, California, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming and Colorado, or about one-third of the territory, geographically, of the United States. In this territory there were, according to the last submitted reports, 7,661 Sunday Schools, with an enrolment of 618,067 members. In other words, this nearly one-third of the territory of the United States contains less than six per cent. of the Sunday Schools and Sunday School enrolment of the United States. Less than ten per cent. of the population of these States is included in the Sunday Schools, while the percentage for the whole country is about sixteen, and that portion of it east of the Mississippi River is about twenty. The needs were very great.

I never have seen such magnificent enthusiasm and sacrifice for Sunday School work in my life. Many of us, in the more densely populated States, would not think of spending the time or money to attend the conventions as many of these delegates did. The president of one of the Associations, after having pledged ten dollars a year for the work in their State, said to me: "I think I can safely promise another ten dollars, although I am a home missionary preacher, and am on my twelfth year in my present field, at a salary of $400 a year." One man in Idaho traveled 400 miles on horseback to attend the convention. His address was full of power. Another man traveled over 600 miles, half of it by stage-coach, and though twenty-two years of age, had never seen a railroad up to that time. One woman traveled over 400 miles, carrying a six-months'-old baby in her arms. She said: "Our school had to be represented and there did not seem to be anybody else to come." In North Dakota, there was one boy delegate twelve years of age, and in Idaho a girl delegate less than twelve years of age, who traveled over 200 miles, a good share of it in a stage-coach. This girl made a very creditable report of her school, the only Protestant school in her county. The conventions were all full of earnestness and spiritual power.

To be sure, the Sunday School work in this frontier country is much of it very primitive. Outside of the cities, there are few if any modern Sunday School buildings, and many of the schools are very small. One woman gave a glowing report of her Sunday School in the country, though it had but five members in it all told. There are many choice testimonies as to the value of the Home Department as being especially adapted to the sparce settlements on the frontier. Perhaps the greatest difficulties to be overcome in the West are in those States where the Mormon population is so large. In Idaho, for instance, of their 110,000 population in the State, fully half are Mormons and Roman Catholics, mostly Mormon. It is more than twice the size of Ohio, with scarcely any north or south railroads, and yet 110 delegates assembled in Pocatello, with the thermometer ranging about ninety and over every day.

We held meetings in Ogden, Salt Lake City, and Provo, Utah. The problems here are very hard to solve. Mormon sentiment is very strong in this, their very centre. In Provo, for instance, seventy-five per cent. of the entire population of the county is Mormon, and yet the workers are not discouraged, though they are laboring against great odds. We studied the Mormon question a little, and find they pay a great deal of attention to their Sunday Schools. Salt Lake City has a Mormon Sunday School in each ward, and every ward has also a bishop and other dignitaries connected with the church. We visited the thirteenth ward Sunday School, and noticed that the bishop and all church dignitaries, eight or ten men in all, of that ward, were upon the platform during the entire Sunday School session. The school was orderly throughout. We visited the classes, and it was plain to be seen that the instruction given was "orthodox" from their standpoint, and the children were being well grounded in the principles of Mormonism. We could but imagine what would be the result of our own church and Sunday School work, if all of our church officers were actually present and actively engaged in the Sunday School sessions as they were there. It would surely solve many of our problems.

In all the places we visited we found a growing conviction of the power of the Sunday School, and we believe this conviction is not only growing in the West, but everywhere, and the Sunday School is becoming more and more a positive force among Christian agencies. There is no question but that the key which is to unlock all our problems, politically, socially and religiously, is found in the training of the children in the Sunday Schools. The church has its hand upon this key. Will it turn it, or allow it to rust in the lock?

In not a single particular did our Western tour fall below our expectations, but, rather, exceeded them. Every meeting was held as announced in the advance circular. Only one train was late in the entire trip, and this did not interfere materially with the meeting. The resolutions passed by the various States were extravagant in their commendation of the Executive Committee for making this tour possible. The pledges taken in the various States for State work were:

Minnesota, $800; South Dakota, $150; North Dakota, $1,100; Montana, $600; Washington, $300; Oregon, $1,500; California, $2,000; Idaho, $265; Utah, $300; Wyoming, $100; Colorado, $1,500.

The record of mileage, addresses and time is given below:

	Miles Traveled.	Days Spent.	Addresses Made.
E. O. Excell	6,967	50	...
R. T. Bonsall	6,450	40	25
Rev. E. S. Lewis, D.D	7,637	51	49
Rev. Alexander Henry	8,641	53	47
Marion Lawrance	8,738	62	117
	38,433	256	238

I may add that the expense of the entire party for the tour was $985.11.

When the tour was concluded the Committee addressed a letter to Mr. Lawrance, expressing their highest appreciation of his services in all the arrangements and congratulating him on the success of the enterprise.

The Committee concluded with these words:

This unprecedented and remarkable tour ought to be reported to the Christian people of the United States. We have been in a position to discern its large significance, its remarkable disclosures and its potent possibilities. We feel that an account of it would greatly encourage the friends of Sunday Schools everywhere.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

Miss L. B. B., Longmont, Colo., writes:

A few days ago, when everything looked dark, I prayed that God would send us some assurance before the week ended that the future would soon be bright for us. The answer came, and I wish to acknowledge it and my heart full of thanks to our heavenly Father in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

F. M. H., Chippewa Bay, writes:

I acknowledge an answer to prayer. We are stricken in means, and I would like an education. I prayed to go to a certain school, and I am going the first of October.

M. H. W., Lowell, Mass., writes:

I have just passed through a painful operation. I promised God that if he would bring me through safely, as he is doing, I would acknowledge his loving kindness in your paper. I now wish so to do, and may all that he has helped do the same.

Subscriber, Michigan, writes:

I promised the Lord that if my prayer was answered I would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It was answered, and in such a way that it left no doubt in my mind that it was a direct answer. I hope that this will help some one as I have been helped.

S. L. B., Mapleville, N. C., writes:

I wish to acknowledge through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the mercy of God in restoring my loved ones to health so many times in answer to prayer. Recently my father was sick. I prayed for his recovery with the promise that I would write this.

A Call for More Workers

Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Rom. 15: 20: . . . Lest I should build upon another man's foundation.

IN laying out the plan of his missionary tour, Paul sought out towns and cities which had not yet been preached to. He goes to Corinth, a city famous for splendor and vice, and Jerusalem, where the priesthood and the Sanhedrin were ready to leap with both feet upon the Christian religion. He feels he has especial work to do, and he means to do it. What was the result? The grandest life of usefulness that a man ever lived. We modern Christian workers are not apt to imitate Paul. We build on other people's foundations. If we erect a church we prefer to have it filled with families all of whom have been pious. Do we gather a Sabbath School class, we want good boys and girls, hair combed, faces washed, manners attractive. So a church in this day is apt to be built out of other churches. Some ministers spend all their time in fishing in other people's ponds, and they throw the line into that church-pond, and jerk out a Methodist, and throw the line into another church-pond and bring out a Presbyterian, or there is a religious row in some neighboring church, and a whole school of fish swim off from that pond, and we take them all in with one sweep of the net. What is gained? Absolutely nothing for the cause of Christ. What strengthens an army is new recruits. While courteous to those coming from other flocks, we should build our churches not out of other churches, but out of the world, lest we build on another man's foundation.

We need as churches to stop bombarding the old ironclad sinners that have been proof against years of Christian assault. Alas for that church which lacks spending on a chandelier enough to light a hundred souls to glory, and in one carved pillar enough to have made a thousand men "pillars in the house of our God forever," and doing less good than many a log cabin meeting-house with tallow candles stuck in wooden sockets, and a minister who has never seen a college and does not know the difference between Greek and Choctaw. We need as churches to get into sympathy with the great outside world, and let them know that none are so broken-hearted or hardly bestead that they will not be welcomed. "No!" says some fastidious Christian, "I don't like to be crowded in church. Don't put any one in my pew." My brother, what will you do in heaven? When a great multitude that no man can number assembles they will put fifty in your pew. What are the select few to-day assembled in the Christian churches compared with the mightier millions outside of them? Many of the churches are like a hospital that should advertise that its patients must have nothing worse than toothache or "run-rounds," but no broken heads, no crushed ankles, no fractured thighs. Give us for treatment moderate sinners, velvet-coated sinners and sinners with a gloss on. It is as though a man had a farm of three thousand acres and put all his work on one acre. He may raise never so large ears of corn, never so big heads of wheat, he would remain poor. The church of God has bestowed its chief care on one acre and has raised splendid men and women in that small enclosure, but the field is the great outside world. It is as though after a great battle there were left fifty thousand wounded and dying on the field, and three surgeons gave all their time to three patients under their charge. The major-general comes in and says to the doctors: "Come out here and look at the nearly fifty thousand dying for lack of surgical attendance!" "No," say the three doctors, standing there fanning their patients, "we have three important cases here, and we are attending to them, and when we are not positively busy with their wounds, it takes all our time to keep the flies off." In this awful battle of sin and sorrow, where millions have fallen on millions, do not let us spend all our time in taking care of a few people, and when the command comes, "Go into the world," say practically: "No, I cannot go; I have here a few choice cases, and I am busy keeping off the flies." There are multitudes to-day who have never had any Christian worker look them in the eye, and with earnestness in the accentuation, say: "Come!" or they would long ago have been in the kingdom. My friends, religion is either a sham or a great reality. If it be a sham, let us disband our churches and Christian associations. If it be a reality, then great populations are on the way to the bar of God unfitted for the ordeal, and what are we doing?

In order to reach the multitude of outsiders we must

out of our religion. When we talk to people about the hypostatic union and French Encyclopedianism and Erastinianism and Complutensianism, we are impolitic and as little understood as if a physician should talk to an ordinary patient about the pericardium and intercostal muscle and scorbutic symptoms. Many of us come out of the theological seminaries so loaded up that we take the first ten years to show our people how much we know, and the next ten years to get our people to know as much as we know, and at the end find that neither of us know anything as we ought to know.

Comparatively little effort as yet has been made to save that large class of persons in our midst called sceptics, and he who goes to work here will not be building upon another man's foundation. There is a large number of them. They are afraid of us and our churches, for the reason we do not know how to treat them. One of this class met Christ; and hear with what tenderness and pathos and beauty and success Christ dealt with him: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it, namely: thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these." And the scribe said to him, "Well, Master, thou hast said the truth, for there is one God, and to love him with all the heart and all the understanding and all the soul and all the strength is more than whole burnt offerings and sacrifices." And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." So in one interview. But few Christians treat the sceptic in that way. Instead of taking hold of him with the gentle hand of love, we are apt to take him with the pincers of ecclesiasticism.

You would not be so rough on that man if you knew how he lost his faith in Christianity. I have known men sceptical from the fact that they grew up in houses where religion was overdone. Sunday was the most awful day in the week. They had religion driven into them with a trip-hammer. They were surfeited with prayer-meetings. They were stuffed and choked with catechisms. They were often told that they were the worst boys the parents ever knew, because they liked to ride down hill better than to read Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. Whenever father and mother talked of religion they drew down the corners of their mouth and rolled up their eyes. If any one thing will send a boy or girl to ruin sooner than another, that is it. If I had such a father and mother I fear I should have been an infidel.

Others were tripped up to scepticism from being grievously wronged by some man who professed to be a Christian. They had a partner in business who turned out to be a first-class scoundrel, though a professed Christian. Many years ago they lost all faith by what happened in an oil company which was formed amid the petroleum excitement. The company owned very little land, but the president of the company was a Presbyterian elder, and the treasurer was an Episcopalian vestryman, and one director was a Methodist class-leader, and the other directors prominent members of Baptist and Congregational churches. Circulars were gotten out, telling what opened before this joint-stock company. Innocent men and women, who had a little money to invest, and that little their all, said: "I do not know anything about this company, but so many good men are at the head of it that it must be excellent, and taking stock in it must be almost as good as joining the church." So they bought the stock, and, perhaps received one dividend so as to keep them still, but after a while they found that the company had reorganized, and had a different president and different treasurer and different directors. Other engagements or ill-health had caused the former officers of the company, with many regrets, to resign. And all that the subscribers of that stock had to show for their investment was a beautifully ornamented certificate. Sometimes that man, looking over his old papers, comes across that certificate, and it is so suggestive that he vows he wants none of the religion that the president and trustees and directors of that oil company professed.

Of course, their rejection of religion on such grounds was unphilosophical and unwise. I am told that many of the United States army desert every year, and there are many court martials every year. Is that anything against the United States government that swore them in? And if a soldier of Christ deserts, is that anything against the Christianity which he swore to support and defend? How do you judge of the currency of a country? By a counterfeit bill? Now, you must have patience with those who have been swindled by religious pretenders.

Others have gone into scepticism from a natural persistence in asking the reason why. They have been stabbed of

The Fatal Interrogation Point

There are so many things they cannot get explained. They cannot understand how God can be sovereign and yet man a free agent. Neither can I. They say, "I don't understand why a good God should let sin come into the world." Neither do I. You say, "Why was that child started in life with such disadvantages, while others have all physical and mental equipment?" I cannot tell. They go out of church on Easter morning and say, "That doctrine of the resurrection confounded me." So it is to me a mystery beyond unravelment.

There are hundreds of men who would give a thousand worlds, if they possessed them, to get back to the placid faith of their fathers and mothers, and it is our place to help them, and we may help them, never through their heads, but always through their hearts. These sceptics, when brought to Jesus, will be mightily effective, far more so than those who never examined the evidences of Christianity. Thomas Chalmers was once a sceptic, Robert Hall a sceptic, Robert Newton a sceptic, Christmas Evans a sceptic. But when once with strong hand they took hold of the chariot of the Gospel, they rolled it on with what momentum!

If I address such men and women today, I throw out no scoff. I implead them by the memory of the good old days when at their mother's knee they said: "Now I lay me down to sleep," and by those days and nights of scarlet fever in which she watched you, giving you the medicine in just the right time, and turning your pillow when it was hot, and with hands that many years ago turned to dust, soothed your pain, and by that couch where she looked so pale and talked so slowly, catching her breath between the words, and you felt an awful loneliness coming over your soul; by all that, I beg you to come back and take the same religion. It was good enough for her. It is good enough for you. Nay, I have a better plea than that. I plead by all the wounds and tears and blood and groans and agonies and death-throes of the Son of God, who approaches you this moment with torn brow and lacerated hands and whipped back, and saying: "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy-laden, and I will give you rest."

Again, there is a field of usefulness but little touched, occupied by those who are astray in their habits. When a man's habits go wrong the church drops him, the social circle drops him, good influences drop him, we all drop him. Of all the men who get off the track, but few ever get on again. Near my summer residence there is a life-saving station on the beach. There are all the ropes and rockets, the boats, the machinery for getting people off shipwrecks. One summer I saw there fifteen or twenty men who were breakfasting, after having just escaped with their lives and nothing more. Up and down our coasts are built these useful structures, and the mariners know it, and they feel that if they are driven into the breakers there will be apt from shore to come a rescue. The churches of God ought to be so many not trying so much to help those who are in smooth waters, but those who have been shipwrecked. Come, let us run out the life-boats! And who will man them? We do not preach enough to such men; we have not enough faith in their release. Alas, if when they come to hear us, we are laboriously trying to show the difference between Sublapsarianism and Supralapsarianism, while they have a hundred vipers of remorse and despair coiling around and biting their immortal spirits. The church is not chiefly for goodish sort of men, whose proclivities are all right, and who could get to heaven praying and singing in their own homes. It is on the beach to help the drowning. Those bad cases are the cases that God likes to take hold of. Get one hundred such redeemed men in your churches, and nothing could stand before them, for such men are generally warm-hearted and enthusiastic. No formal prayers then. No heartless singing then. No cold conventionalisms then.

Destitute children of the street offer a field of work comparatively unoccupied. The uncared for children are in the majority in most of our cities. When they grow up, if unreformed, they will outvote your children, and they will govern your children. The whisky ring will hatch out other whisky rings, and grog-shops will kill with their horrid stench public sobriety, unless the church of God rises up with outstretched arms and enfolds this dying population in her bosom. Public schools cannot do it. Art galleries cannot do it. Blackwell's Island cannot do it. Almshouses cannot do it. Jails cannot do it.

Church of God, Wake Up to your magnificent mission! You can do it! Get somewhere, somehow to work! The Prussian cavalry mount by putting their right foot into the stirrup, while the American cavalry mount by putting their left foot into the stirrup. I do not care how you mount your war charger, if you only get into this battle for God and get there soon, right stirrup or left stirrup or no stirrup at all. The unoccupied fields are all around us, and why should we build on another man's foundation? I have heard of what was called the "thundering legion." It was in 179, a part of the Roman army to which some Christians belonged, and their prayers, it was said, were answered by thunder and lightning, and hail and tempest, which overthrew an invading army and saved the empire. And I would to God that our churches might be so mighty in prayer and work that they would become a thundering legion, before which the forces of sin might be routed, and the gates of hell might tremble. Launch the Gospel ship for another voyage. Heave away now, lads! Shake out the reefs in the foretopsail! Come, oh, heavenly wind, and fill the canvas! Jesus aboard will assure our safety. Jesus on the sea will beckon us forward. Jesus on the shore will welcome us into harbor.

Bible Study by the Camp Fire

The Y. M. C. A. Boys' State Camp at Lake Chautauqua

THE Boys' State Camp of Western New York, whose fourth season at Cheney's Point, Lake Chautauqua, was such a happy success this summer, affords striking illustration of the value of this plan of combining healthy recreation and good oral and spiritual influences in such ise as to make both most acceptable to oy nature. The camping party consted of eighty men and boys of the oung Men's Christian Associations of uffalo, Jamestown, Westfield, Lockport nd Hornellsville, N. Y., Erie and Warn, Pa.

The arrival of the different delegations as usually attended with much enthusism on the part of new-comers and those ho had preceded them, responsive calls choing back and forth between steamer nd shore. Management of the camp lay holly in the hands of Y. M. C. A. men, cting in legislative, executive and judiary capacities, with one ranking senior upreme in authority at all times and laces. Commissary, athletics, general ostmastership, direction of row-boats, harge of camp-fires, arrangement and rderly keeping of camps and grounds, ere the various governmental departents divided among these leaders: hence "leaders' conference" was a daily feare of camp-life.

Sunday School and a church service, eside the regular morning and evening rayers, were held every Sabbath. Helpl reading occupied much of the time, nd the day was reverently and carefully bserved. On visitor's day, when parents nd friends of campers were expected, xtra provision was made for dinner, for hich each guest was charged the round im of twenty-five cents. During the ourse of the afternoon the field-day ports took place, consisting of ot-races and other games.

Week-day life at the camp was horoughly enjoyable, besides eing spiritually profitable. All he campers rose at 5 A.M.; then he morning dip, followed by breakfast, fixing tents and recreation till Bible study time, the principal event of the day. Then writing home letters, strolling and gymnastics until dinner. The afternoon passed in field sports, singing patriotic songs. Supper, at 5.30, was followed by the enjoyable gathering around the evening camp-fire, concluding with prayer-meeting, which was always fully attended. Then the boys retired to their tents, where each offered his own humble individual petition, and was soon fast asleep.

Closing the Tent Campaign

The Gospel Tent "Glad Tidings," in New York City, closed its services for the season, Sunday, Sept. 23, with a sermon by Rev. J. F. Carson, D.D., of Brooklyn. It is estimated that, despite the heat, the average weekly attendance has been 2,200. At nearly all the services inquirers have been conversed with, and multitudes of Christians have been edified and inspired, and will return to their church work more efficient than ever before. From many quarters testimony comes showing the helpfulness of the work. Rev. S. Hartwell Pratt, superintendent, will now enter upon evangelistic work with the churches, wherever the door is open.

Galveston Recovering

Relief Work Progressing—Foreign Sympathy—Terrible Need of Rural Districts

THE Salvation Army detachment, whose expedition carrying nurses, tents and medicines to Galveston, has already received notice in these columns, is doing good work in and around the stricken city, acting in common with other helpful agencies under direction of the established authorities. Local Salvationists had already relieved 5,000 people when the New York division arrived. Relief trains have poured in supplies from every quarter of the Union, and if ever an affliction knit sections together in closer bonds of brotherhood, it seems to be this awful disaster, out of which only the providence of God and love of man to man could bring any good. European nations have not been laggards in expressing sympathy with America in her sorrow and bereavement. Among telegrams received at Washington were two lengthy ones from the Queens of England and Spain. Minister Wu's note of sympathy to Gov. Sayres contained a check for $100. New York's contributions from all sources is some $400,000, and a telegram "in the name of the citizens of Galveston from the mayor to the poor orphan children" has been received, thanking this city for aid. The Mexican Government appropriated $30.000 for Galveston relief.

Meanwhile, excellent progress is being made in the rehabilitation of Galveston. The restoration of the water works system and of the Galveston Bay bridge have been completed; good sanitary regulations are being enforced; martial law has been abolished, and Governor Sayers reports the situation in all parts of the stricken district to be improving. The postmaster of Live Oak, Texas, "a friend of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD," writes us:

"The farmers and gardeners of the rural section along the Gulf coast from Galveston to Rockport have suffered fearfully, and I do not know what is to become of them. I have traveled many miles of the distance, including a number of towns and hamlets, and assure you that there is not one building in three standing. People who were almost ruined by the flood of last year are now left without a roof to shield them from sun or rain. Many have lost their teams and all their household goods. My own house was blown thirty feet; it is badly warped, doors useless, porches gone; but it is a shelter and we are sharing it with others. People must have means to rebuild and start their farms again or they will be compelled to seek the cities for work and subsistence."

Dr. Talmage's Preaching Tour

After visiting nearly all the European capitals and preaching in many of the cities, Dr. Talmage is now nearing the end of his tour. He writes from Paris, under date, Sept. 15: "I preached here to a vast throng last Sunday. On Sept. 20 I will preach at the Isle of Wight; Sept. 23, will preach, at Swansea, Wales, the anniversary sermon at the Countess of Huntingdon's church; Sept. 30, preach at John Wesley's City Road Chapel, London; Oct. 7, at Belfast; Oct. 14, Dublin; Oct. 18, sail from Queenstown for New York, arriving there (D.V.) on Oct. 24."

In many of the continental cities Dr. Talmage has addressed large gatherings, and his reception has everywhere been most cordial and enthusiastic.

Christian Work in Kentucky

A READER in Cynthiana, Ky., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD concerning the various spiritual agencies now operating in different parts of that state. He says:

Berea College is located in Madison county, Ky., which is known as one of the richest Blue Grass counties in the state. At the commencement of 1885, I heard Gen. Cassius M. Clay, the great anti-slavery leader of ante bellum days, say that he had given the land for Berea College in his native county, but at the foot hills of the Cumberland range, because it was nearer to the mountains than the other colleges of Kentucky, and there could be found an undying love of liberty. It is situated in a border county, and the village seemingly a New England settlement, having no likeness to the other towns of the adjoining counties. Moreover, the number of mountain students at Berea shows that it has taken small hold on the people of that section, in comparison with the schools that were really founded for the mountain people. From the last report of the institution, we find that only 223 students come to Berea all the year round from the mountain counties of Kentucky, while the balance come from Berea itself, from the other counties of Kentucky, and from the other states of the Union. In the private academies, normal schools and colleges located by friends of the mountaineers in the mountain counties themselves, there were, in 1897, 10,284 students.

These private institutions have been founded by the various denominations of believing Christians for the purpose of facilitating their missionary work among the people of the mountains, and the number of students given does not include the large number from the mountains attending the State College at Lexington, Central University at Richmond, Center College at Danville, and Georgetown College, in Scott county. These schools are located in more than thirty different counties ranked as mountain counties, and are conducted by representatives of the Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians and Disciples, while some of them are not church enterprises, though controlled by Christian people. The Baptists have a flourishing college at Williamsburg, and the Southern Presbyterians have an institution at Jackson, in Breathitt county, which draws its entire patronage from the mountains, gives the girls training in domestic work and the boys manual training, and this in addition to a full collegiate course of study.

Men and women from the Blue Grass region of Kentucky are in the mountains teaching every day, and carrying the Gospel to those people so ready to hear it; cultivated people from New York and Eastern states are devoting their lives to saving the souls of the inhabitants of those retired places. The Society of Soul Winners, which has its home in the Blue Grass has done much to evangelize the mountains of Kentucky in the last three years, while only a few people have heard anything about this unique aid to church work.

"COME TO THE FEAST OF LOVE"

PARABLE OF THE GREAT SUPPER

BY DR AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

International Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 14: Luke 14: 15-24.

Golden Text, Luke 14: 17: Come: for all things are now ready.

A BOY may think the pleasure of a party chiefly due to the food; but let him eat the same food alone and he will quickly discover that a social feast brings delight not alone to the palate by its tasty dishes, but also to the brain by its bright sayings, and to the heart by its kindly fellowships. A Christian life is like a feast because it brings benefit and delight to body, mind and heart. "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." This opening word of to-day's lesson was spoken at the Pharisee's feast described in the last lesson, and prompted Jesus to utter the parable of his great feast of universal brotherhood, which the Jews had refused to share (the Cross was only three months away), and which was now to be offered to the Gentiles. In the parable of the marriage feast (Matt. 22: 1-10), which the Lesson Committee wish us to consider as a part of this lesson, and in the feast of the returning prodigal, Jesus again and again pictures the stubborn folly of the Jews in refusing the honor and joy and benefits to which he invited them in his new kingdom, in which they had the first opportunity to be blessed and a blessing to others. We need not linger on the ancient history of their rejection, but rather let us consider:

First, the feast to which Christ invites.

Second, those who reject his invitation to-day.

Third, the universal invitation that we should both accept and convey.

A certain man made a great supper. The host, in this supper of the parable, is none other than Christ, the Son of God. And he is himself the best of the feast, the heavenly bread, the water of life. At many a feast, even of those given by human friends, the wit of the host is the choicest spice; his wisdom, more invigorating than the meat; his loving fellowship, sweeter than the honey. By mightier tides, Christ comes into our lives like an influence. As the food we eat turns into bone and muscle and flesh, so Christ's words and deeds and spirit, as we feed upon them, turn into faith and hope and love for God and man. No matter how poor a man may be and how plain his fare, he has "a great supper" every day if he has learned to read great books, and so feast with and upon the great minds of the world.

A traveler, caught upon the mountains in a snowstorm, turned for refuge to a dilapidated and seemingly deserted cottage, but on entering he saw an old man reading in a protected corner. He exclaimed: "What are you doing here?" To which the old man, looking up from his Bible reading, said with a smile: "I am sitting under his shadow with great delight, and his food is sweet to my taste."

Churchgoers, but Christ-rejectors

They all with one consent began to make excuse. Those Christ first invited to his feast of love were members of the Jewish Church, who had been prepared for his coming by generations of training; but they nevertheless rejected him, seeing that to follow him would require them to give up many a selfish pleasure, many a trick of trade. The corresponding class, the first invited, the most prepared to-day, are the unsaved members of churchgoing families; the unsaved husband, whose wife has long prayed for him; the son, who has been prepared at a mother's knee for a Christian life. You, who are a Christian already, are the "servant" through whom these are to be invited. Many of these churchgoing rejectors are repeating the awful sin to which John alludes when he says: "He came unto his own and his own received him not." They are like the Jews in sinning against great light, and after all these years are using substantially the same old excuses.

The first excuse in the parable was that of the man who had bought land and must go and see it. This is the supreme case of being "land poor." Many a man has bought land for speculation, and, on falling prices, has had to keep it and pay taxes until, though owning vast acreage, he could scarcely buy the necessities of life. The man who allows the cares of so-called "real estate" to keep him from Christ is more pitifully "land poor." His very soul had been buried in his land, and so he has become morally unable to receive the chief necessity of life, of eternal life—the love of Christ.

The second excuse of the parable was that of a man too absorbingly interested in his stock—live stock in this case—to give attention to religion. Many a man is starving the angel part of his nature through absorbing interest in the animal part, in physical comfort and physical pleasures, either the lower ones of appetite and lust, or the higher ones of ease or athletics.

The third excuse is that of the man who had married a wife, who was absorbed in family pleasures and cares. Devotion to wife or husband or child is about the noblest form of selfishness, but it must not keep us from the duty and love we owe to our Father in heaven, "of whom every home in heaven and earth is named." The very word "home" is of Puritan origin, and what we mean by it has no existence outside of Christian lands. "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty." We are in danger of losing this "Paradise Regained," the Christian home, through the increase in the number of fathers and sons that excuse themselves from family worship, if not from a Christian life altogether. Most of these persons count it a great sin that the Jews rejected and crucified Christ. But they occupy the same guilty place to-day, and "crucify the Lord afresh."

God, who is said to have been "angry" at the excuses (which were not reasons), given of old is no less indignant at the way in which those who have been brought up in the Church are to-day rejecting his invitations to the nobler life that makes the most of both worlds. He is indignant at the ingratitude and at the wilful folly of such rejections. We cannot conceive of men answering a human king's cordial invitation to a feast with such trivial "regrets." Nor can we conceive of any friend depriving us of such benefits as we ourselves reject. Selfishness is its own worst enemy. In the words of Dr. Henry Van Dyke:

Self is the only prison that can ever bind the soul;
Love is the only angel who can bid the gates unroll;
And when He comes to call thee, arise and follow fast: [light at last.
His way may lie through darkness, but it leads to

City Missions

Go out quickly into the streets. Some would say because there are unconverted people in our church congregations that we should let evangelistic work for the morally halt and blind of the city streets wait till all our congregations are saved. Christ says, "Nay, but every soul is entitled to hear the divine invitation. Those of the church congregations have heard it, and you shall continue to pour it into their ears. But the 'heathen at home,' the depressed masses of your cities who have not so often and so clearly heard the message, to them you must carry the music of 'Come unto me.'" This city missionary work cannot be altogether put on hired substitutes. Nothing will do so much to create real brotherhood among rich and poor as for the doubly rich to go themselves as Christ's messengers to the doubly poor.

One Christmas day in New York City, a millionaire was driving down Fifth avenue in his sleigh, when his high-spirited horse ran away. The sleigh was overturned, and the rich man and his coachman rolled in the snow together. As they struggled to their feet and turned to follow the runaway horse, they saw the sleigh strike a poor pedler and knock him into a heap, both runners passing over his body. The millionaire uttered a cry of dismay when he saw the ragged pedler fall in the street, and leaving his valuable trotter to vanish in the distance, he cast himself on his knees by the injured man and lifted his blood-stained head tenderly in his arms. He got help as soon as possible, and himself assisted in carrying the poor fellow into a fashionable hotel near-by, and sent for a doctor. Later, he got him a comfortable room in a hospital, and ordered that every possible attention should be given him. When the pedler was seen by the reporter at the hospital, and told that the man whose horse had run over him was a millionaire, he replied: "A millionaire, is he? Well, all I can say is that he's the whitest man I ever seen in me life, an' I'll never say another word agin millionaires. I tell yer wot, that man is a wonder. Why, he—he—went down on his marrow-bones in the snow alongsider me an' took my head on his knee, same as if I was his brother—an' it all bleeding, too." It is a profounder picture of brotherhood when the Christian millionaire in a city mission kneels beside a soul stained with the blood not of accident, but of crime. Many of our churches need to adopt the motto "Social to save." In c representative eastern city I found that t churches occupied three pages in the c directory, while the brotherhoods and societ filled twenty-two, and the saloons would ha filled still larger space if entered in the sa way. A reformed man, who had fallen aga was asked why he went into the saloon wh he knew it was dangerous. He replied: "J the people who are willing to talk with me a there. I must go where my friends are." I us begin in the Sunday School to teach a n code of church manners, less cold and form and more friendly.

Foreign Missions

Go out into the highways. As ci missions are not to wait till all in o church congregations are saved, foreign missions are not to wait till all t wicked of our cities have accepted Christ's vitation. God is saying to us in the new ventions of our time: "Go ye quickly into the world that every city and village m speedily receive my invitation to the feast love and brotherhood." Steam and electrici have made the world a neighborhood. Lo to God and man must now make it a realiz brotherhood. Of such brotherhood the Bib feasts are prophecies. And in the large painting in the world, an artist prophet, Pao Veronese, when nations were almost co tinually at war, represented this yet unrealiz brotherhood by bringing together about Chri in an idealized picture of the Marriage Fea at Cana, the monarchs and great men of a nations. That picture might well be tran ferred from the Louvre to the palace at Bru sels, where representatives of sixteen natio have twice gathered to protect Central Afric against the sale of intoxicants, or to the palac at The Hague where a yet larger co course of nations inaugurated last yea m the rough, what shall come to t the Supreme Court of Nations, to tak the place of war. In the membershi of the Christian Church all races s together at the Lord's table as friend and brothers. Huxley gives us a ne classification of men in five races: Au traloid, Negroid, Mongoloid, Xantho chroic, Melanochroic; and turning t the Bible Society's list of its foreig Bibles, we find that the love of God a expressed in John 3: 16, has bee given in a measure to every one o these races. Father Endeavor Clarl has above his door the word "Wel come" in seventeen languages; and a Clifton Springs, thirty-nine missionarie sang "Come to Jesus," in almost a many languages; but the welcome tha God puts above his feast of love, i already expressed in Bibles of mor than three hundred languages an dialects.

Modern science is developing wealth out of waste. The once wasted frag ments of leather now furnish leathe board. Thrown away ores more thor oughly smelted, become sources of wealth. A company has been organ ized with fifty million dollars of capital to put in operation a new invention which makes it possible to manufac ture car-wheels, basins, barrels, and other vessels now made of iron, wood, or paper, and also board and other building materials, from the pith of cornstalks. This pith, which is called cellulose, is also to be prepared for use in the construction of warships, for filling in between the inside and outside armor of ironclads. So Christianity is developing noblest manhood out of the castoffs of society.

In the Chautauquas this year many an audience has been thrilled by the music of a Basuto boy, nine years of age, who was picked up three years ago in South Africa, homeless, nameless, naked, famished, filthy; but, under a faithful Christian teacher, now sings the "Holy City" with a sweetness and strength of tone, and a perfection of English enunciation equalled by few prima donnas. All about the missionary table are such wonders of grace; men and women and children, who in two or three years of Christian fellowship have developed the sweet graces of Christ to a degree that shames those who have always had opportunities, but have neglected them.

We are not merely to invite men, at home and abroad, to the feast of love; we are to "compel them to come in," a word not warranting the actual force of Mohammedan and Roman Catholic propagandas, but implying that we should persistently constrain the unsaved to come, not turned aside by one refusal.

Not fellowship with Christ alone, but also universal brotherhood in him, is the meaning of the feast. In the words of Lewis Morris:

There shall come out of this noise of strife and
A broader and a juster brotherhood, [groaning
A deep equality of aim, postponing
All selfish seeking to the general good.
There shall come a time when each shall to another [brother.
Be as Christ would have him—brother unto

A Broad Mind

The late Lord Chief-Justice Russell of England, was once asked how he, a Roman Catholic, could contribute to the support of a Primitive Methodist mission in Clapton. He replied: "I regard Christian charity as too sacred a thing to be made the servant of sectarian prejudices or partisan ends."

CHAPTER XLIV.

SAMANTHA IN VIENNA

VIENNA is a beautiful city. I d'no as I would go so fur as the Viennesse myself and say it is the most beautiful in the world, but it stands up high amongst 'em.

The beautiful blue Danube makes a curve round it as if it iz real choice of it and loved to hold it its arms. I say blue Danube, but its ters are no more blue than our Jones- lle creek is pink. But mebby if I iz goin' to sing about the creek I might ll it blue or pink for poetical purposes. We had rooms nigh to the river, the nks of which wuz terraced down to the ter, and laid out in little parks, public rdens full of flowers and trees and wering shrubs.

There are two massive stun bridges in is part of the city, and very handsome veliin' houses, churches, and the Swartz- nburg palace. The buildings are very ndsome here, more lofty and grand king even than they are in Paris, and u know you would imagine that wuz the wer of the universe, and I needn't ention the fact that I had to gin into it at it goes fur beyend Jonesville.

The street called the Ring Strasse, I oze because it curves round some like ring, is three milds long, and most two ndred feet wide. And along this broad autiful avenue there are six rows of rge chestnut trees. A track for horse- ck riders on one side, a broad carriage iveway, two fine promenades, besides e walk.

Sights of Austria's Capital

Splendid buildin's rise up on each side this grand street, and parks and gar- ns abound. At intervals there are rge roomy lawns, covered with velvety ass, where easy seats under the trees vite you to rest and admire the beauty ound you, and the happy, gayly-dressed rong passing and repassing in car- ages, on horseback or walkin' afoot, ousands and thousands on 'em, and eryone, I spoze, a pursuin' their own les, whatever they may be.

The first place we went to see wuz St. tephen's Church. This is on a street uch narrower than the Ring Strasse. he sidewalks wuz very narrer here, so hen you met folks you had to squeeze p pretty nigh the curbstun or step out to the carriage way; but no matter how ose the quarters wuz you would meet ith no rough talk or impoliteness. They uz as polite as the Japans, with more in- lligence added.

St. Stephen's Cathedral is a magnifi- nt Gothic structure, three hundred and fty-four feet long and two hundred and irty broad, and is full of magnificent onuments, altars, statutes, carving, etc., c. The monument to the Emperor rederic III. has over two hundred fig- res on it.

Here is the tomb of the King of Rome, apoleon's only son and his ma, Maria ouise. I had queer feelin's as I stood y them tombs and meditated how much mbition and heart burnin' wuz buried ere in the tomb of that young King of ome. I thought of how his pa divorced ie woman he loved, breakin' her heart, nd his own mebby, for the ambitious de- re to have a son connected with the yalty of Europe, to carry on his power nd glory, and make it more permanent. nd how the new wife turned away from m in his trouble, and the boy died, and e carried his broken heart into exile. nd the descendant of the constant- earted woman he put away, set down on ie throne of France, and then he too, and his boy, had to pass away like leaves whirled about in the devastatin' wind of war and change. What ups and downs! I had a variety of emotions as I stood there, and I guess Josiah did, though I don't know. But I judged from his liniment: he looked real demute.

The catacombs under this meetin'-house are a sight to see I spoze, but we didn't pay a visit to 'em. Josiah had a idee that they wuz built to bury cats in, and he said he didn't want to go to any cat buryin'-ground. He said there wuzn't a cat in Europe so likely as ourn, but he wouldn't think of givin' it funeral honors.

But he didn't git it right. It wuz a place where they buried human bein's, but I didn't care anything about seein' it.

Robert got a big carriage, and we all driv over to the Prater, a most beautiful park on an island in the Danube. The broad, flower-bordered avenues wuz crowded with elegant carriages and beautiful forms and faces wuz constantly passing hither and yon, to and fro, and the scene all round us wuz enchantin'ly beautiful. We had a delightful drive, and when we got back to the tarven we found quite a lot of letters that had been forwarded here. Josiah and I had letters from Jonesville, welcome as the voice of the first bird in spring, all well and hopeful of our speedy meetin'; but Miss Meechim had one tellin' of dretful doin's in her old home.

We'd heard that there had been a great labor strike out in California, but little did we know how severe it had struck. Rev. Mr. Weakdew had writ to Miss Meechim how some of the rebellious workmen had riz up against his son in his absence. He told how wickedly they wuz actin' and how impossible it wuz in his opinion to make them act genteel, but he said in his letter that his son had been telegrafted to to come home at once. He said Mudd-Weakdew always had been successful in quelling these rebellious workmen down, and making them keep their place, and he thought he would now as soon as he arrived there.

I know Arvilly and Miss Meechim had words about it when she read the letter. Miss Meechim deplored the state of affairs, and resented Arvilly's talk; she said it was so wicked to help array one class aginst another.

"They be arrayed now," sez Arvilly, "Selfishness and Greed are arrayed aginst Justice and Humanity, and the baby Peace is bein' trompled on and run over, and haggard Want and Famine prowl on the bare fields of Poverty, waitin' for victims, and the cries of the perishin' fill the air."

Exciting News from Home

Arvilly turned real eloquent. I mistrusted mebby she'd catched it from me, but Miss Meechim turned up her nose and acted dretful high-headed and said there was nothing genteel in such actions and she wouldn't gin in a mite till that day in Vienna she had a letter that brought her nose down where it belonged, and she acted different after readin' it and didn't talk any more about gentility or the unbroken prosperity of the Mudd-Weakdews, and I wuz shocked myself to hear what wuz writ.

As I say, Miss Meechim read it and grew pale, the letter dropped in her lap and she trembled like a popple leaf for it told of a dretful tragedy. It wuz writ by a friend in Sacramento and the tragedy wuz concernin' the Mudd-Weakdews. On hearin' of the strike, the Mudd-Weakdews had hurried home from their trip abroad and he had tried to quell the strike, but found it wouldn't quell. He had been shot at but not killed; the shot went through his eyes, and he would be blind for life. A deadly fever had broke out in the tenements on the street back of his palace, caused, the doctors said, by the terrible onsanitary surroundings, and helped on by want and starvation. The families of his workmen had died off like dead leaves fallin' from rotten trees in the fall. The tenements wuz not fur from the Mudd-Weakdew garden where Dorris loved to stay, who had stayed at home with a governess and a genteel relative during her parents' absence. The garden wuz full of trees, blossoms and flowering shrubs, a fountain dashed up its clear water into the air and tall white statutes stood guard over Dorris in her happy play. But some deadly germ wuz wafted from that filthy, ghastly place, over the roses and lilies and pure waters, and sweet Dorris wuz the victim.

The clear waters and fresh green lawns and fragrant posies didn't extend fur enough back; if they had her life might have been saved, but they only went as fur as the sharp wall her pa had riz up and thought safely warded his own child from all the evils of the lower classes.

No, it didn't go fur enough back, and sweet Dorris had to pay the penalty of her pa's blindness and selfishness. For what duz the Book say? "The innocent shall suffer for the guilty."

The Climax of a Labor Strike

Her broken-hearted mother followed her to the grave, and it wuz on that very day, Mudd-Weakdew bein' shut up with doctors, that the little boy wuz stolen. The discharged workman, whose little boy had died of starvation, disappeared too. He wuz said to be half-crazy and had threatened vengeance on his old employer. There wuz a story that he had been seen with a child richly dressed, and afterwards with a child dressed in the coarse clothing of the poor, embarking on a foreign ship, but the clue wuz lost, so the living trouble wuz worse to bear than the dead one.

The strike wuz ended, Capital coming out ahead; the workmen had lost, and the Mudd-Weakdews had a chance to coin more money than ever out of the half-paid labor and wretched lives of their men. They could still be exclusive and foller the star of gentility till it stood over the cold marble palace of disdainful nobility. But the wall of seperation he had built up between wealth and poverty had not stood the strain; Deadly Pestilence, Triumphant Hatred and sharp-toothed Revenge had clumb over and attacked him with their sharp fangs, him and his wife, and they had to bear it.

I knowed it, I knowed that no walls can ever be built high enough to seperate the sordid, neglected, wretched lives of the poor and the luxurious, pleasure-filled lives of the rich. Between the ignorant criminal classes and the educated and innocent. You may make 'em strong as the Pyramaids and high as the tower of Babel, but the passions and weaknesses of humanity will scale 'em and find a way through.

The vile air of the low lands will float over into and contaminate the pure air of the guarded pleasure gardens, and the evil germs will carry disease, crime and death, no matter how many fountains and white statutes and posies you may set up between. Envy, Discontent and Revenge will break through the walls and meet Oppression, Insolence and Injustice, and they will tear and rend each other. They always have and always will. Robert Strong, instead of buildin' up that wall, spends his strength in tearin' it down and settin' on its crumblin' ruins the white flowers of Love and Peace.

Holdin' Oppression and Injustice back with a hard bit and makin' 'em behave, makin' Envy and Hatred sheath their claws some as a cat will when it is warm and happy. He tears down mouldy walls and lets the sunshine in. Pullin' up what bad-smellin' weeds he can in the gardens of the poor, and transplantin' some of the overcrowded posy beds of the rich into the bare sile, makin' 'em both look better and do better. I set store by him. But to resoom:

Two Lives Contrasted

Amongst my letters wuz one from Evangeline Noble tellin' of her safe arrival in Africa and of the beginning of her work there, some like strikin' a match to light a lamp in a dark suller, but different from that because the light she lit wuz liable to light other lamps, and so on and on and on till no tellin' what a glorious brilliance would shine from the one little rushlight she wuz kindlin'. She felt it, she wuz happy with that best kind of happiness, doin' good. She spoke of Cousin John Richard, too; he wuz not in the same place she wuz, but she hearn of him often, for his life wuz like a vase filled with the precious ointment broke at the feet of Jesus. Broken in a earthly sense, but the rich aroma sweetened the whole air about and ascended to the very heavens.

A missionary she knew had seen him just before she wrote me. He wuz working, giving his life and finding it again, useful, happy, beloved. Not a success in a worldly way: Mudd-Weakdew would have called it a dead failure. In place of a palace, Cousin John Richard could not call even the poor ruff that sheltered him his own. Instead of a retinue of servants, Cousin John Richard worked diligently with his hands to earn his daily bread; instead of stocks and bonds bringing him rich revenues, he had only the title deeds of the house of many mansions, and Mudd-Weakdew would not have accepted any deeds unless signed before a notary and sealed with our government stamp. No wealth, no luxuries, not hardly the necessities of life had Cousin John Richard, whilst Mudd-Weakdew wuz steeped in the atmosphere of wealth and grandeur for which he had lived and toiled, yet Cousin John Richard wuz blissfully happy and content, Mudd-Weakdew unspeakably and hopelessly wretched. Both had follered their goles and wuz settin' on 'em, but, oh! how different they wuz—how different to themselves and them about 'em. Inspiration and help flowed from Cousin John Richard's personality like the warm sunshine of a clear June day or the perfume from a rare lily, brightening, sweetening and uplifting all about him, whilst from Mudd-Weakdew fell a dark shadder made up of gloom, discontent, envy, hatred. How different they wuz, how different they wuz! And Robert Strong's gole, how different his wuz from Mudd-Weakdew's. I methought of what Miss Meechim had said to me deplorin'ly, how different Robert Strong wuz. Yes, indeed! both on 'em had had fur different goles and pursued 'em. The onselfish road Robert Strong trod wuz leadin' him to the house of happiness—Mudd-Weakdew's to the house of pain and despair.

I dare presoom to say I eppisoded more'n a hour to myself about it and to Josiah, 'tennyrate Josiah got real huffy and acted, and sez in a pitiful axent:

"Samantha, I'm willin' to hear preachin' twice a week and can set under it like a man, but it comes kinder tough to have moralizin' and preachin' brung into the bosom of the family and liable to be drizzled out onto me week days, and any time, night or day."

His axent wuz extremely hopeless and pitiful. He felt a good deal as I did in the matter, but it is a man's nater to be more restless and obstropolous and not bear the yoke so well as wimmen do. Wimmen are more used to galdin' things than men be; I don't blame Josiah.

I wuz glad enough to see in Vienna the stately monument to Maria Theresa, Empress of Austria Hungary. To see all about her and below her the noble forms of Wisdom, Strength, Justice and Religion. And men a-hoss back and sages and soldiers and to see her a settin' so calm and benine on top of the hull caboodle, it gin me proud sensations and made me glad I wuz a woman, but not haughty.

Maria Theresa wuz a likely woman: I wish she could have lived to have me encourage her by tellin' her what I thought on her; I would said to her:

"Marie," sez I, "you did well with what you had to do with. Your pardner left a sight for you to tend to, as pardners will if they see their consort is willin' to bear the brunt. You went through no end of trials and tribulations, wars and revolutions, but come off victorious. You helped the poor a sight, abolished toture, sot up school-houses, fenced in the roarin' Papal bulls so they couldn't break out and rare round so much; you helped on the industries of your country, looked out for the best interests of your husband and son, as pardners and mothers will, and looked and acted like a perfect lady through it all, in war and peace."

It would done Marie sights of good to have hearn my talk, but it wuzn't to be. But this high noble monument wuz some consolation to her if she could look down and see it, as I spoze she can and duz. And partly on her ma's account I visited the tomb of her girl, Marie Christina. It wuz designed by Canova and it seemed to me the most beautiful tomb I ever did see. Nine beautiful figures with heads bowed down in grief wuz bearin' garlands of flowers to strew above the beloved head. Youth, Middle Age and Old Age all bearin' their different garlands and seemin' to feel real bad, even the mighty angel who guarded the open door of the tomb had his head bowed in sorrow. Way up above wuz the face of the beautiful Arch-Duchess carved in the marble with angel and cherub surroundin' her. Josiah said that if he wuz able he would love to rare such a one up for Tirzah Ann. Sez he, "She could enjoy it durin' her life, and if she should pass away before us it would come handy." He thought the features of the Arch-Duchess favored Tirzah Ann but I couldn't see it.

Albert Fountain is a noble-looking structure, rared up by Francis Joseph in 1869.

We also visited the Academy of Fine Arts, the Conservatory of Music, Museum of Arts and Industries, the New Parliament and University buildings. The University library has one hundred and sixty thousand volumes and engravings and drawings enough to fill up an ordinary building; the collection of manuscripts is called the richest in the whole world.

The teachers in the University of Vienna number two hundred and ten. Good land! enough to make a big schooi in themselves, if anybody knowed enough to teach 'em. In the Chamber of Treasures in the Imperial Palace we see the largest emerald known to the world, and the Florentine diamond, one hundred and thirty-three karats big, though Josiah said, when I told him on 't that that wuz nothin' to carrots he'd raised in his garden, but I sot him right. There wuz more than one hundred and forty thousand coins and all sorts of minerals, and a great quantity of bronzes, gems, and cameos.

I hated to give in, but I had to. I see cameos there that went fur beyend mine. We visited gymnasiums, public schools, institutes, colleges, and more noble and interestin' edifices than I could tell you jest the names on, unless I took loads of time.

The principle articles of manufactures in Vienna are jewelry, clocks, kid gloves, musical instruments, shawls, silks and velvets. It is supplied with water that comes forty milds away in an aqueduct, and gits there as fresh and sparklin' as if it hadn't traveled a mild.

INDIA'S FAMINE CLOUD LIFTED

SUPPORT FOR ONE THOUSAND OF THE ORPHANS NOW IN THE MISSIONARIES' HOMES ALREADY PLEDGED BY OUR READERS

BRIGHTER news comes from India. The Bombay Gazette says: "During the past week good rain has fallen and intermittent showers are prevalent in all parts. If rain had held off much longer, there is no doubt that in certain large tracts a water-famine would have followed. Happily there is no need to speculate on the result of such a catastrophe, but the horrors of scanty provisions would have been exceeded if water had given out. At present, land is being brought into cultivation, and although sowings will be rather late, with good rain in September there should be an excellent harvest. The farmers are offered every inducement to fill their soil, in the way of provision of plough cattle to replace some of those which have perished, seed and loans for personal sustenance and labor. Those who cannot procure plough cattle are promised remission of a year's rent if they raise crops by hand labor."

While they are waiting for a harvest, however, there must be extensive suffering. Col. Nurani, the Salvation Army leader at Ahmedabad, writes: "Many of the people have left the relief works, where they earned a little money, and as the crops will take several months to grow, they cannot live without some help in this way. The government undertakes to give loans to those who are registered landholders under the government, but there are thousands of others who hold land, not government property, who are not eligible for this assistance. It is here that private enterprise is so valuable." Col. Nurani adds: "We have received scores of where the people all own fields, but without monetary assistance are unable to take advantage of the rains now falling. In addition to the large number of persons in thirty-three villages to whom we have advanced money for this purpose, we last week distributed 3,000 rupees to the poor Bhils. Three or four days later we again distributed for the same purpose in the Anand Division the same amount to fifteen villages. In regard to the food, we are hoping to continue our cheap grain shops for the next three or four months, and even to increase them, and also the grain given to day-school children."

It is gratifying to know that during this period of waiting, the missionaries are not relaxing their beneficent work. But for the relief that they are giving, from the funds so generously supplied by our readers, many a poor laborer, who has been in the relief camp during the famine, would be unable to live through the weary weeks of waiting for a crop.

Mr. Thomas A. Bailey, to whom we are indebted for many of the photographs we have published, has just returned from a tour in the famine districts, and reports sad suffering as still prevalent. At Jalna he saw people in the last stage of starvation. He says: "I understand that a short time ago it was a common occurrence to find numbers of people either dead or dying in the river bed, and this I can readily credit from the experience I had on Sunday morning. Even though things are now said to be, and no doubt are much improved, still one may find dying people scattered here and there. While returning from the poor-house I saw one man

Lying in the Public Street

My friend and I stopped and found that he had lain down from sheer exhaustion, and though not far from the poor-house was unable to drag himself that little distance. A man approached who was himself famine-stricken, and was wending his way to the poor-house, but not being in a very weak condition, was able to carry his fellow sufferer on his back. A little further on we saw a body huddled up and lying in the gutter, covered with rags. On a closer examination we found an aged blind woman who had apparently given up the struggle for life and resigned herself to her fate. After a little talk we persuaded her to consent to be put into our tonga and taken to the poor-house. But we soon found she was not to be our only fellow-traveler, for on the maidan a hundred yards ahead we saw a woman lying beneath a tree. It was hard to make her understand, owing to her weak condition, what we wanted to do for her, and her piteous cry for pani (water) was almost heartrending. She, too, was lifted into the tonga, and we engaged a man to sit in with her and the old woman so that he would keep them from falling out. Five may seem an unfair number for one horse to draw, but when two of these are only skeletons it is not so bad. We deposited our load at the poor-house, where all was done that could be to revive them, but in the case of the younger woman it was too late, and within a few hours her suffering was at an end. Surely such instances show that there is absolute room and positive need for all the private charity that can be bestowed.

"One instance I would like to record before closing which is now, alas, only too common in this land of sorrows. Just outside the poor-house gate, where newcomers were waiting for admission, I saw a young woman with traces of beauty still manifest, lying on the ground. She was apparently in great pain as evidenced by the weak moans she uttered every moment. Her hair all tangled hung about her in great profusion, her face smeared with the dust of the ground; and sitting listlessly at her side, her little child had just enough strength left to brush aside the flies which were swarming round. I called for the doctor, who appeared promptly, and having bent over to find out her true condition looked up to me and said, 'No pulse.' The little one sheltered in the chappar with hundreds of others who are now called 'famine orphans.'

"Oh, the horror of all this, the continued wail of the sufferers, the continu pathetic appeal mala koni nahin (I have no body), the listless look of despair depicted in thousands of faces is enough to wear one out. That these people will need help for at least two or three months to come is an undisputed fact."

It is gratifying to know that now all missionaries recognize the value of the American corn which the bounty of our readers enabled us to send to the sufferers. The Bombay Guardian, says: "Since 1896 the question of Relief in Cash vs. Relief in Kind has again and again cropped up. In May of this present year, a large number of earnest and conscientious missionary workers were found faithfully warning the American public at the New York Ecumenical Missionary Conference against sending any corn to India, in spite of the few who protested that both cash and corn would be equally valuable. The experience of the steamship Quin we hope may have finally settled this debated point, so far as free cargoes of corn from the United States are concerned, and though there may be places at a distance from railways, where the difficulty of transit cannot be satisfactorily overcome, and where therefore money is preferable, yet the majority of mission centres are either on, or not far from, railways, and can therefore promptly realize consignment when sent, whilst experience has proved the corn thankfully received and eaten by the people.'

DISTRIBUTION OF RELIEF IN THE FAMINE CAMP AT AHMEDNAGAR

Orphan No. 1000

Our readers will be glad to know that at the end of last week support had been pledged for one thousand orphans and remittances on account had already been received. Mrs. Klopsch claimed the privilege of adopting the thousandth orphan and when our books showed that promises had been received for 999 orphans, Mrs. Klopsch paid over to the fund the first year's support for one other, making to date one thousand children whose maintenance and education are secured. We are sure that every one who has thus undertaken the support of a child will enjoy a sweet satisfaction in the thought that on the other side of the world a child is growing up under Christian influences as a result of their beneficence. To have saved the life of only one child and to have given that child the opportunity of hearing of Christ is no small matter. Who knows what that child may yet do for Christ in India? Ramabai, herself, who has done such great things, was a famine child rescued by a Christian missionary.

With so much already accomplished, there is reason to hope that support may be obtained for a much larger number of children. As announced on September 19, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cabled $25,000 to India to support five thousand children for four months while funds were accumulating for their future maintenance. It would be very gratifying to be able to report to the missionaries that the whole of the five thousand were provided for. The sum required—only thirty cents a week—for the support of a child is so small that there must be many who could undertake it. It is a beautiful way of proving our gratitude to Christ and our love for him. To feed one of these little fatherless children is surely well-pleasing in his sight, and if it does involve a sacrifice; if it does require some little self-denial, the gift is all the more precious. As David said, "Shall I offer to the Lord that which cost me nothing?" so there is a pleasure in a sacrifice that is made for his sake to whom we owe all we have and are. Such an opportunity as this may not occur in a generation when at so small an outlay so much good may be done. At the last great day when the souls that have been won through this effort are presented before the throne, he who suffered and died for us will say: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Chinese Problem

SMALL progress has yet been made toward the solution of the Chinese problem. The Imperial government still acting under the name of the Emperor, but really directed by the Empress Dowager, has issued an edict constituting five viceroys and officers of state negotiators for the settlement of the difficulty. One of these is Li Hung Chang, who recently visited this country, and another is Prince Ching, who exerted all his influence to save the lives of the foreign ambassadors during the outbreak in Pekin. It is reported that the German government has insisted that before any negotiations for peace are begun Prince Tuan and the other leaders of the Boxers shall be surrendered to the powers for punishment. Our government, however, does not endorse this demand. It believes that Prince Tuan and his colleagues in barbarism should be punished by the Chinese authorities and not by the foreign powers, and a stipulation to that effect should form part of the treaty of peace. There are signs of other differences of opinion among the powers, Germany, Russia and France generally in agreement, while the United States, Great Britain and Japan form another camp. One question not yet settled is, whether the Empress should be allowed to maintain her authority or whether an effort should be made to restore the Emperor to the position which properly belongs to him. It is certain that at present the Empress wields supreme power. In the sketch on this page, which was made by an officer at a reception to foreign diplomats held shortly before the present troubles, it is the Empress who occupies the throne, while the Emperor is seated on a chair to her left. Grave doubts are entertained of the Empress having repudiated the Boxers, and until she has done so the representatives of the powers are reluctant to leave the government in her hands. They distrust her not only because of her own proclivities, but because of the character of her chosen counselors.

Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee which frameth mischief by a law? They gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous and condemn the innocent blood (Ps. 94 : 20, 21).

Not a Lucrative Service

In the biography of a well-beloved physician whose practice lay in a country district in New England, a significant incident is related. Among his patients was a lawyer with a large family. The doctor knew them all, and could call each child by name and tell its age and the ailments through which it had passed. One winter's day he was summoned to the lawyer's house. One of the children was seriously ill. He prescribed for her, and perceiving that there was danger he called again in the evening, and again the following morning. The lawyer told him then that another of his children, who was visiting in a village twelve miles away, had sickened with the same disease. The news had come that morning. The doctor listened, but made no reply. His patient was better, and had evidently passed the crisis. That night was a bitter cold one; snow was beginning to fall, and an icy wind made traveling a misery. But the doctor called again, and found his little patient still improving. "Now," said he, "I have paid all my visits, and I am going to see how Henry is." The lawyer said: "Surely you are not going to drive twelve miles on such a night." The doctor said he was, as he would have no other opportunity. The next day, at his usual visit, he reported that he had seen Henry, and he was doing well. When the lawyer received the doctor's bill, there was no charge for that long night journey. The father called his attention to the oversight and asked him to add it to the bill, and he would give him a check for the whole. "Good gracious," exclaimed the doctor, "you don't suppose I ever made such a journey as that for money, do you?" No man can be paid in money for a service that was prompted by love. He can be recompensed only by love. People sometimes forget this when dealing with God. It is not their offerings he desires, but the love of their hearts.

We love him because he first loved us (1. John 4 : 19).

Tantalizing Wharfage

An American traveler who recently visited Buenos Ayres declares that the Argentine government has committed a serious blunder in the location of the docks in that city. During the past twelve years it has spent nearly fifty million dollars on accommodations for shipping. These great stone constructions are fine specimens of engineering. Immense warehouses and the best of machinery afford every facility for the care and handling of freight. In proportion to its shipping trade no city excels Buenos Ayres in the extent and adequacy of its dockage and warehouse facilities. But the government made the mistake of building a port without an entrance to it. The docks might as well be rickety wooden piers for all the good they do the larger shipping, which is unable to reach them. The money was spent without studying the peculiar condition of the great river on which the city stands. The silt which the La Plata carries speedily fills up the channels cut into the estuary by which it was expected vessels could reach the docks. Experts have been called in to solve the problem of making an enduring approach, and unless they succeed the fine docks will be useless. The same principle affects the eternal destiny of the human race. It is the glory of the Christian religion that it tells us not only of the delights of heaven but provides a way of reaching it.

It shall be called the way of holiness; the wayfaring men though fools shall not err therein (Isaiah 35 : 8).

DIPLOMATIC RECEPTION BY THE EMPRESS DOWAGER OF CHINA

Entertaining 25,000 Guests

The hugest banquet of modern times took place in Paris, on September 22, when M Loubet, President of the French Republic, entertained at dinner all the mayors in the country, numbering twenty-five thousand. It was a picturesque gathering, for many of the mayors came from small country towns, and were dressed in blouses and corduroys, while the mayors of the great cities wore the ordinary evening dress. A little dash of color enlivened the scene in the contingent from Brittany, as the mayors of that section wore the tri-color sash of office. The dinner was laid in the gardens of the Tuileries, which formerly were the exclusive grounds of the royal and imperial households. The tables extended over a space seven miles long. The chief caterer was in an automobile, in which he traveled to and fro, to see that his employees were doing their duties efficiently. Eight thousand waiters attended to the wants of the guests. They were divided into squads of five hundred, the superintending waiters being mounted on bicycles. The provisions required were enormous. They included 3,000 pheasants, 8,000 ducklings, 8,000 pounds of salmon, 8,000 pounds of beef, 33,000 bottles of Bordeaux wine, 9,000 bottles of champagne, and 1,500 bottles of brandy. The President delivered a ringing speech at the dinner, and as he could not, of course, make himself heard by all his guests, printed copies of his address were distributed at the various tables. He was cheered to the echo, and he has evidently increased his popularity by the entertainment. The mayors went away enthusiastically proclaiming their allegiance to the Republic and its hospitable President. No such feast has probably ever been held since the days of ancient Rome, and it eclipsed those feasts in the number of the guests. The time will come, however, when an infinitely greater celebration will be held, as the Seer of Patmos saw in prophetic vision, when men from all nations shall gather at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. Invitations to that feast are issued, and all who accept them will be welcome.

Blessed are they which are called unto the Marriage Supper of the Lamb (Rev. 19 : 9).

A Wedding Postponed

An undertaker in Jersey City, N. J., had a hysterical young lady to deal with one day last week. She came to his office from a village near by, with her father and a young man to whom she was about to be married. Her father had come in contact with the undertaker some years before, and came to him for advice, being the only man he knew in Jersey City. He wanted to know where a justice of the peace could be found, as his daughter and her lover wanted to be married at once by a legal functionary. The undertaker said there was no justice of the peace in that neighborhood, but he would telephone to Police Headquarters to find out if they knew where one was to be found. In a few minutes word came that a justice was on his way to the undertaker's to perform the ceremony. There was a room back of the office where funeral services were conducted which would serve, the undertaker said, just as well for a wedding. While the party waited the prospective bride went into the room. She returned to the office in tears, declaring she could not be married there, nor could she be married at all that day. The room was lined with caskets of various kinds in glass cases and in piles against the walls. Such grewsome surroundings, the young lady said, were uniucky, and the sight of them had made the day unlucky. The disappointment made her hysterical, but she was firm in her refusal, and the ceremony was postponed. She must have been superstitious, though it must be admitted that the surroundings for a wedding ceremony were somewhat incongruous. We naturally shrink in seasons of rejoicing from the intrusion of thoughts of death and the grave; but happy is he to whom such thoughts are associated with hope and trust.

It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart (Eccles. 7 : 2).

A Millionaire Convict

There is a convict in Joliet Penitentiary, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean, who has two million dollars to his credit in one of the financial institutions of the city. His father was a famous Illinois pioneer, a prospector and a promoter, but he died in poverty. He had borne misfortune heroically and with patience. But his son could not bear poverty with his father's heroism. He fretted over his privations and one day after his father's death he forged the name of a prominent man to a check. His crime was discovered, a warrant was issued for his apprehension and the young man absconded. In the course of his wanderings, to avoid the detectives who were searching for him, he came to a mining district in Idaho where he had once lived with his father. There he found that the most successful man in camp was one who had made a big strike in an abandoned shaft in some old diggings. Looking up the records, the fugitive found that the shaft was part of a claim patented by his father in 1879. He was heir to vast wealth, but he was a criminal and a fugitive. The only way to get the inheritance was to go back, confess his guilt and bear his punishment. It was a bitter alternative, but he accepted it, and he is now serving his term in Joliet Penitentiary. If sinners would show the same spirit toward God, how many might be saved! Instead of flying from him, if they would confess their sins and throw themselves on his mercy, they would receive the inheritance of sons.

And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight. . . . But the father said unto his servants, Bring forth the best robe and put it on him, etc. (Luke 15 : 21–24).

BRIEF NOTES

The China Inland Mission announces that its missionaries who were stationed at Kiangsi, numbering ninety, have arrived at Kinkiang. They are all well.

The director of the census, Mr. Merriam, estimates that the population of the United States will be found to be seventy-six millions, when all the census returns are counted.

A full-blooded Cherokee Indian has been ordained to the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is now laboring at Ardmore, I. T., but is about to undertake work at Milwaukee, Wis.

Rev. Lorenzo Waugh, said to be the oldest Methodist minister in the world, died suddenly on September 7 in a railroad station at Williams, Cal. He was ninety-two years of age, and had been sixty-eight years in the ministry.

Dr. Joseph Parker, the famous English Congregational minister of the City Temple, London, intimates his intention of retiring from the ministry at an early date. He is seventy-one years of age, and, as he says, his prayer now is, "Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace."

The missionaries of the American Sunday School Union in the Northwestern district are doing valuable work. Since March they have organized 452 new Sunday Schools, having 1,703 teachers and 14,486 scholars; and reorganized 258 schools, having 940 teachers and 7,778 scholars.

The New Metropolitan Temple in London was formally dedicated on Sept. 19. This building takes the place of the one in which Pastor C. H. Spurgeon used to preach, which was destroyed by fire. Mr. Ira D. Sankey sang and spoke at the services and received a hearty ovation from the congregation.

Dr. Francis E Clark says that the young Emperor of China is greatly interested in Christian literature. Of 129 books which he ordered, 54 were religious, and among them were such books as The Story of our Lord, Family Prayers for Chinese Christians. It is even said by some that at heart he is a Christian, having been taught by a girl who was once a pupil in the American mission school in Pekin.

An evening Theological School, free to all, is held in Amity Building, 312 West Fifty-fourth street, New York. Its object is to aid young men and young women who are employed during the day, but who are anxious to become more efficient as Sunday School teachers or in other departments of Christian work. It is entirely undenominational. Persons desiring to join the classes for the winter should communicate with the Dean of the school, the Rev. Leighton Williams

NEARLY 150,000 PENNSYLVANIA MINERS IDLE

THE GREAT COAL STRIKE

THE CAUSES OF THE STRIKE EXPLAINED

THE great strike, now on in the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania, is the largest and most far-reaching of any that has occurred since the strike of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen in 1895. There are 142,420 miners and laborers thrown out of work, but the number of persons whose bread-winning powers are affected by the strike will pass the million mark. Business is literally at a standstill in the four counties of Lackawanna, Sullivan, Susquehanna and Luzerne. Orders for winter stocks of merchandise have been countermanded and hundreds of merchants are preparing to close their stores, the Retail Grocers' Association and others having resolved not to give one dollar's worth of credit to the miners. The misery and suffering that will follow among the families of the miners will be beyond description, should the strike be prolonged.

It is undoubted that the miners' grievances are genuine enough, and yet the general prosperity of the region, in some respects, is greater than it has been for twenty years. Hazleton boasts the largest bank deposits of any town of its size in the state. Of a total of $4,000,000, fully $3,000,000 are deposits of mine employees. In Scranton, Wilkesbarre and other large towns, many thrifty miners have managed to build comfortable, modern homes, tastefully furnished. In the present strike the majority of the miners are fighting the battle of the minority. All alike are demanding the abolition of a pernicious system of favoritism, which gives a few men the advantage of all the others.

There are two classes of miners in Pennsylvania—those employed by the railroad companies and those employed by private operators. Those familiar with the situation assert that it is the latter who are really suffering oppression and poverty. The railroad mine employees—who comprise nearly eighty per cent. of all the miners in the state—are said to be comparatively well off and contented.

The anthracite coal mines of Pennsylvania are all virtually controlled by the railroads, which regulate the entire output. Private operators have established a system of oppression of their employees in order to work their mines at any kind of a profit. They declare that, as the railroads "squeeze" them, they in turn are obliged to "squeeze" the miners. They resort to extraordinary methods, which seem crude and clumsy in their manifest injustice. For example, the laws of the state make 2,400 pounds of anthracite coal a ton; yet the men mine from 2,700 to 4,000 pounds for a ton, the companies holding the right to "dock" the miner for "topping," "culm" and "slate." These dockings often amount to twelve per cent. of their daily earnings. In the corporation mines the same system prevails, but the average dockage is only about three per cent. of the day's wage. A ton of coal is not determined, as it should be, by the actual weight of the coal, but by measurement.

STRIKERS AT MOUNT PLEASANT COLLIERY, PA., WAITING TO BE ADDRESSED BY LOCAL ORGANIZERS

Every miner is, in a way, an independent business man. He buys his own tools, powder, oil and other appliances, hires his own laborers and is paid by the companies for the coal which he is able to deliver at the breakers. The laborers receive about one-third of the day's receipts. Each car of coal contains a percentage of impurities, and, taking these into account, it is at the discretion of the overseers and mine bosses to determine the exact amount due the miner for his labor. The latter has no voice in the matter nor any representation at the breakers. He does not even know until the end of the month what his earnings have been, and it is then too late for him to protest against the decisions of the bosses. The miners claim that the "culm," for which they receive nothing, ought at least to become their property; but the companies reserve the right to sell it themselves. The labor involved in making "culm" a marketable product is so great that the miner would scarcely undertake it; but his claim to be paid something for a commodity which his labor puts into the hands of the operators would seem to be fairly just.

One of the greatest grievances—and one that is shared by the entire body of miners—is the excessive price they are obliged to pay for powder. This they are compelled to buy from the companies, who charge them $2.75 a g for powder which the companies buy r less than a dollar. The companies ex- ise this policy by saying that if powder ere cheaper the miners would waste it, d the result would be a dangerous viti- ion of air in the tunnels. They do not low them to buy of outside people be- use the miner might buy a cheaper grade an is considered safe to use.

Another ground of complaint is the me-honored "Company Store" system. he miner buys on credit, of course, and prices which he believes to be far eyond the worth of the goods. At the get out with powder and pick; he provides his own tools, pays for sharpening them, burns his own oil, and hires his own laborer; the theory is that he hires his own laborer; the fact is that in many mines he has not this privilege. The mine foreman reserves this for himself. The foreman also has the privilege of assigning the miner to any particular "breast" or "chamber" in the mine. If the foreman chooses, he can give the easy localities, where the coal is plenty and the waste small, to the man who is willing to pay for the privilege, or who in some way d of the month he is often in debt to e company, and has not a dollar of ages to receive. Besides the "pluck-me" ores, as the miners call them, the com- anies provide doctors for their employees, d the latter pay a dollar a month to the octor, whether his services have been quired or not.

The great evil, against which the min- s as a body protest, is the system of age payment which leaves room for an most endless chain of abuses. In near- every case, it is claimed, opportunities e taken advantage of by the operators d their under-men, superintendents, remen and bosses. Instead of receiv- g a fixed wage for a given amount of ork accomplished, the miners labor un- er a system which leaves their earnings ntirely at the mercy of the bosses. A an never knows at the end of the day hat his earnings have been. He may ave toiled unceasingly for ten hours and ade a single dollar or even less. On e other hand, he may have worked five ours and made four or five dollars: the rice of his superior determines the atter. As has been stated, the miner is eoretically an independent business an, a contractor. He agrees to deliver t the breakers what coal he is able to curries favor with the powers.

The miner is paid only for the pure coal delivered at the breakers. It is absolutely within the foreman's power to determine the amount of impurities which the cars contain: the miner has not even the right to protest. His coal is shoveled into a car bearing his number, and is hauled away. It is then hoisted to the top of the breaker, a towering structure at the mouth of the shaft where the coal is broken, sorted according to sizes, and sent through chutes to the railroad cars. The "docking boss"—who is a checking clerk employed by the foreman—stands on duty at the top of the breaker. He takes the number of the car as its contents are dumped into the breaker, credits it to the miner by number, and docks for dirt, "culm" and other impurities. The amount of dockage is arbitrary and rests entirely with the "docking boss." In the mines operated by the railroads the average dockage is about three per cent; in the private concerns it is often twenty and twenty-five. The men request that they be allowed to have, at their own expense, a checking weighman who shall be at the head of the breaker with the company's checking boss. Their requests have been steadily refused.

Whenever a new vein is opened in a mine, the price to be paid per car is determined between the operators and the miners, according to the formation of the coal deposit. If the vein is high, with plenty of coal, the price paid is about eighty-five cents per car. If the vein is a difficult one, where the men must work in a stooping position, the price is often as high as $1.10. The decision is made in a careless, haphazard sort of a way, and the final word is, of course, said by the operators. In the smaller companies, there is always more or less friction between the forces. Occasionally the men refuse point-blank to accept the operator's valuation, and a strike is the result.

There is still one other evil of the "flexible allowance" system. A vein may at first run clear and easy, and it may afterwards lead into a solid deposit of rock, in which there is little or no coal. This must be blasted through, and the miner is entitled to an allowance, or, as it is called, a "yardage", for the rock he must remove. If the foreman is honest, the miner may make even more money out of rock work than out of coal mining. In some of the mines, the allowance made is pitilessly meagre. Men have worked twelve hours a day,—lying flat on their stomachs, in the darkness and suffocation of the under-world, to earn thirty dollars a month.

Against these and other injustices, the miners have protested in vain, and finally have rebelled. What the outcome will be no man can tell. The railroads can afford to shut down their mines for a year. The smaller operators are prepared for a long and bitter fight, for if the miners' claims are conceded their business will suffer a crushing blow. They say, probably with truth, that under present conditions, they cannot operate their mines at a profit and grant the demands of their men. The men declare that their situation is not to be endured; that if they must starve, they will do so in honest, manly rebellion against oppression. They have little money; many of them have none at all, and a prolonged strike would entail terrible hardships.

Progress of the Coal Strike

Much suffering is already reported as the result of the great strike in the anthracite coal region. Of the 150,000 strikers, many have very little savings and there are reports of widespread privations in the Shenandoah and Hazleton districts. Rioting occurred at Shenandoah, where there are many Lithuanians and Poles among the miners. Several persons were shot, one fatally, and the sheriff being unable to preserve order, state militia were sent to the scene of disturbance. Other districts will also be placed under military control.

There is no prospect of an early settlement of the strike although arbitration is talked of. Some have advocated an appeal to the President to act as arbitrator. Meanwhile coal prices have advanced generally from $1 to $2 per ton to the consumer. It is understood that the coal roads hold a large supply. John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America, and the leader of the strike, is said to have declared that arbitration is out of the question.

Happy Childhood!

YES, thrice happy, because so trustful, so care-free, so easily pleased. Somebody once asked how it happened that a child could run and jump and play all day long, really traversing a great deal of space, and never asking to sit still, while grown people so much sooner gave out. The answer was: The child does the work, and lets his father take the worry. Is there not a good deal of truth in this? We older ones do the work and carry the worry too. Even in our play there is always the undertone of anxiety. We do not cast the burden on the Lord and leave it with him. We throw it down, in our prayers, in our hymns, in our exalted moments of communion, but we very soon stoop down and pick it up again. We are like a poor man who stooped down, in a recent storm, and picked up a live wire that had fallen to the street. It killed him instantly. We are not at once stricken dead by our fatal inclination to pick up what we ought to leave where it lies, but little by little our faith faculty is killed, and we go on, crippled, maimed, living at a poor dying rate, instead of being glad and happy and brave and bright like the children.

On the great East Side in New York City, children fairly swarm. They are on the streets, on the fire-escapes, in the doorways, in mothers' arms, sitting in empty carts which the owners have left for awhile, surging through alleys and crowding together thick as bees that rush from the hive. It is quite wonderful that living as they do, with few advantages of home training, for when mother is a charwoman and father a day laborer, the children must be very much left to themselves, they are so good and so obedient and well-behaved. The bigger ones look out for the little ones. Every child has a care for the one next younger. They play in the streets of course. Where else can they play? Many of the tall tenements have no back yards. Small rooms en suite in the newer and model tenements may be clean and comparatively well ventilated, but in the torrid weather we have every summer in Manhattan, they are fearfully and suffocatingly hot, and in the older, less comfortable East Side houses, the suffering from stuffy atmosphere and lack of air beggars description. The children play in the streets, and get much education there, and between the clustering, narrow houses, they look up and see the blue sky, God's sky, sometimes bright with sunshine, sometimes lit with stars.

Along comes an organ-grinder. He takes his stand on a corner, and begins to play. The tunes are pretty and catching; rag-time tunes, and they stir the little feet, and light the little faces, and presto! every ragged boy and pale-faced girl is dancing in such ecstacy of glee as warms one's heart to see. The children are of various nationalities in our cosmopolitan New York. Bohemian, Italian, French, German, Syrian, Irish, Dutch (not so many of the latter two as of the others), perhaps a few flaxen-haired Danes and Norwegians. Different neighborhoods have different peoples. Our foreign residents are clannish, and in the new land they naturally cling together. One quarter, while showing some specimens of every race, will display a large majority of a particular nation. There will be an Armenian, a Russian Jew, or an Italian settlement or colony living in close proximity to another colony from a different part of the globe. Somehow, in God's own time and way, all these are to be blended and interfused and assimilated in the body politic, and a generation or two hence, they will be good Americans.

Meanwhile, not minding poverty, nor caring about it in the least, the dear children dance and the music grinds out a festive measure and I think there are invisible angels watching the little scene, while God grants it his blessing.

CHILDREN DANCING ON THE PAVEMENT

Tall Children

The generation coming on the stage promises to be tall and vigorous. A great deal of outdoor life, and better understanding of hygienic conditions are accountable for this evident change. Spindling young people are in the minority at present.

Our Martyred Missionaries

"The noble army of martyrs praise thee, O God!"

We have thought often of the magnificent martyr roll of the ages; of the men and women, from Stephen down, who have laid down their lives for Christ; maidens torn by the lions in the Roman amphitheatre; Christians blazing in fires of hell's own kindling, in Rome, in Bohemia, in England, in the islands of the sea. Milton wrote

> Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints > Whose bones lie scattered on the > Alpine mountains cold.

"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." From the fierce persecutions of the first three centuries, our Lord's disciples grew and multiplied, and times, if not persecution, have always emphasized the love and fidelity of Christians.

Still, these are modern times. The modern inventions, modern appliances, modern illumination, and of science, have extended far. We have girdled the earth with electricity, and spanned its remotest gulfs with railway bridges, and we have not expected in our latest strong missionary movement that the flower of our people was to be cut down and sacrificed. Yet, men and women from America have been clubbed to death, have been beheaded, have been put to death with shameful outrage in China, and day by day more and more revolting and heart-breaking details come to us. And the native Christians, thousands of them, quiet, humble, God-fearing, have shared the martyr's fate.

Curiously insensible to the situation, the daily press speaks of the native Christians as furnishing a complication of the situation, and marvels that the missionary element insists on their being considered. Somehow civilization must confront barbarism in that great empire, and Christianity face heathenism, and if peace can be won only at the price of the sword, then the Lord will join forces with the armies that smite.

Blessed are the white memories of our martyr missionaries. Blessed are their names, worthy to live among those of the saints. Blessed is Christ's cause, for which, in an age of greed and of commercial aims paramount and dominant, men and women have been found worthy to die.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—R.T.C. Familiarities between young people are in bad taste, whether they are engaged or not. Formality is in the better taste.

—Velvet Skin. Eat fruit in abundance, especially peaches, if you long for a fine complexion. Oranges are also complexion beautifiers.

—A Young Teacher. Address the Superintendent of Public Schools in your neighborhood for information concerning periodical and other educational literature. If there is a library near you, he can probably direct you to good books. Aunt Prudence wishes you success, and feels sure you will obtain it, because you love your work.

—G. W. A light-colored cloth, either steel-gray or tan, will make a very suitable wedding gown, and, if handsomely made, will answer for many occasions after you are married. Have the waist somewhat elaborate with revers of white satin, and a jabot of chiffon or lace. The skirt should simply be trimmed with a half-dozen rows of machine-stitching. Your hat should be a toque trimmed with velvet to match your dress, with an ostrich feather or flowers as you choose. I prefer flowers. Have gloves the same shade as your gown. Light gray gloves are nice with a black silk dress.

—Bessie. For my part, I am amazed at the young men of the period. In my time, a man was only too much honored and too happy to escort the girl he loved to and from church and elsewhere, and, if engaged, he regarded this as a privilege. I am afraid the girls in your neighborhood have not a just view of their own importance and are too deferential to the young men. Never, my dear child, marry a man who during betrothal shows conclusively that he can oppose your wishes in trifles, and that he prefers his ease to your pleasure. Such a man will make a very selfish husband.

—Ella J. K. It seems not to be understood that blackheads are simply pores clogged up with dirt. Use a little cold cream to open the pores. Then every night wash thoroughly with hot water and any good toilet soap. Make a lather and let it stay on your face a little while. Then rinse it off with clean water, and use a dish of cold water finally. Absolute cleanliness will banish blackheads and most other skin excressences. Pimples are often caused by constipation, and by eating too freely of fried foods and sweets. Health is an affair of exercise, bathing, simple food, sleep and common sense, and beauty is the hand-maid of health.

IN TIME OF NEED

O BLESSED Lord in time of need,
Thou dost thyself impart
In fulness which is strength indeed,
To every longing heart.

The famished soul cries out for bread;
Thou breakest bread divine;
And, thirsting, when the feast is spread,
Thou makest water, wine.

We never ask of thee in vain,
Thou hast a rich supply;
We bear the stress of toil and pain
Content if thou art nigh.

When wearily we march along
A parched and desert land;
Thou givest grace to raise a song,
Thyself, at our right hand.

When troops of foes in menace rise,
And wrath is full of scorn,
Lo! swiftly from the rifted skies
Haste shining hosts of morn.

And rank on rank thine angels come
To help us in the strife;
And battle-field is hearth and home,
In tender sweetness rife.

O, Jesus, Master, King Divine,
Thy gracious name we plead;
For evermore our lives are thine,
And thou art ours indeed.

By pillar and by cloud, we pray,
Still guide as we go
To meet thee in the endless day,
Where life's still waters flow.

Margaret E. Sangster.

Silence is Golden

The familiar adage has its exceptions of course, but in home living, especially when people are a little irritated and ready to be vexed, silence is golden indeed. We are not always to blame for our tempers. If we are very tired and our nerves are on edge we cannot always feel in an amiable mood. There are times, for instance, when the woman who is all worn out and has no appetite, is exasperated beyond words by the finical way or the ravenous way in which some other member of the family eats. In one of the magazines this summer there was a story of a farmer's wife who had had no change for a very long time. She lived in a lonely neighborhood, and had no children. Her husband worked very hard on his farm. She cleaned and cooked and scrubbed and moiled all the time in the house. They were good people and loved one another, but they had grown undemonstrative and taciturn. One day the sight of his greased boots standing by the stove so disturbed the good man's wife that she threw them with all her might into the yard, prudently reclaiming them, however, before the husband came home to his early dinner. The couple exchanged no words, and in their case neither was to blame; only circumstances were untoward. But the wife went away on a visit to her sister, and when she returned, rested and refreshed, the home skies brightened.

Silence is golden when speech would mean quarrels. Silence is especially golden when there is a temptation to comment unkindly on others, or to gossip ill-naturedly. We never regret what we do not say, but we very, very often are extremely sorry for what we have indiscreetly said.

Silence is not golden when it is cowardly. If an absent friend is attacked, if there is reproach of his good name, if our Saviour is misrepresented, then silence is shameful, and is sordid brass, not precious gold.

Bread and Sugar

Johnny does not like bread and butter, but if mother sifts a wee portion of sugar over his bread he eats it with relish. It is often so in the case of children. A little girl I know rebels against her breakfast, but she can eat a thin slice of brown bread if it be spread with soft maple sugar, and with a glass of creamy milk she is supplied with a really nice meal. Children with delicate appetites should be coaxed to eat, never compelled. A meal forced upon a child against its will cannot do very much towards building up tissue and promoting growth.

"BOWERY IKE'S" MOUNTAIN MISSION

A STRANGE BUT APPROPRIATE MEMORIAL TO THE CONVERTED CRIMINAL IN THE NORTH CAROLINA MOUNTAIN WILDERNESS...

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will no doubt remember the account given in these pages some time ago of Ira B. Snyder, alias "Bowery Ike," the redeemed thief and burglar. Though dead, Ira Snyder yet lives in the influence that he exercised on those he left behind. While so much attention is being given to the great need of the foreign field and the heroic missionary work done there, I wish to call attention to the fruitful field and the great need in the mountains of North Carolina, and to "Bowery Ike's" part in meeting that need.

When it was decided to educate "Bowery Ike" for missionary work, Mr. Walter N. Smith, one of the trustees of the Jerry McAuley Mission, furnished means to send him to Chicago to the Bible Institute. Mr. Smith was taken ill, and was ordered South for his health. He went to Asheville, N. C., and there met the Rev. Dr. R. F. Campbell, of the First Presbyterian Church of Asheville.

The great need of the people in the interior within a radius of fifty miles of Dr. Campbell's church had induced the Presbytery to make an effort to reach them and teach them the way of Christ. After having examined the country for miles around, Dr. Campbell was thoroughly aroused to its great lack of educational and spiritual opportunities. In the summer of 1898, the Presbytery of Asheville commissioned two evangelists, both mountain whites, to investigate the destitution within her territory, which comprises the eleven most westerly counties of the State. They were directed to leave railroads, telegraphs and the lower valleys behind, penetrate the mountains and highlands, and report what they found. They spent a little over three months in this way, preaching from house to house, and in the woods, sharing the rude accommodations and plain fare which the people offered with true hospitality.

One evangelist found numbers of homes without a lamp, candle, looking-glass, or similar articles of civilized life. Many of the people had never seen a town, and the buggy in which the evangelist traveled was in some places a great curiosity. They had seen buggies before, but this was the first one they had ever seen with "a hat on it." Food, often half-cooked, served on broken dishes, was frequent fare. Several of the counties have no newspaper, which alike is a symptom and a cause of ignorance. Many of the families were found without Bibles. One of the settlements visited consisted of 150 square miles, with 400 children of school age, but there was no school.

The following, an accurate description of one home, serves as being a fair illustration of many: The family consisted of seven members, father, mother, five children, the eldest daughter grown. Not one of that family—parents or children—had ever been to school. They had heard little or nothing of Jesus Christ, and hardly knew what is meant by the resurrection of the body or the immortality of the soul. They lived in a fairly good cabin on their own farm of fifty acres. Many homes were visited, which no minister of the Gospel had ever entered before, and whose inmates had never heard the Word.

When the trustee, Mr. Walter M. Smith, was made acquainted with these sad conditions, he began to set about remedying them. It was his purpose, had Ira B. Snyder lived, to have paid his salary here as my assistant in Water street, but as God has called him to his heavenly home, he decided to use the money that would have gone to Brother Snyder in aiding these poor people in the mountains of North Carolina. Last January, in company with Mr. Smith, Rev. Dr. Campbell and Rev. Dr. Caldwell, I left Asheville to go twenty miles in the mountains on the railroad. At that point we secured a wagon, two horses, and a driver, and started into the mountains, stopping for the night at Crabtree, where a school and meeting-house were to be dedicated. The person of chief interest here is great-hearted, self-sacrificing Miss Jennie Towles. Surely God has found a faithful servant in this devoted young woman. She commenced her school at Crabtree in an old log tobacco house. Children came from miles around as soon as the work she was doing became known.

After services, the evangelists drove about a mile and a half away, to the home of a Mrs. McClure, an old log cabin, well on to a century old. Erastus, her son, twenty-three years old and paralyzed, was the only one living with her then. Yet this young missionary three years ago began teaching the Sunday School Primer. He himself in one week had read the Shorter Catechism; in three months' time he knew it perfectly, and straightway began teaching it to others. When he was ten years old an Asheville merchant had given him a jack-knife, and he had become very expert in the use of it. He was fond of music, but had no instrument within his reach, and he undertook one day to make a violin. He had no tool but the jack-knife, but he had time and patience, and a purpose, and he made a very good violin indeed. He said: "I can't part with my violin. I love it more than anything in the world but my mother." The missionary said: "Can you give it to God?" He answered: "Yes, I could give it to him." So it was given to establish a free bed in the Asheville hospital. It was brought North, and played in the old McAuley Mission.

It was Miss Towles who had taught these folks in this lone mountain home the love of the Lord Jesus Christ; and as Mr. Smith, Dr. Campbell, Dr. Caldwell, herself, and the writer, sat around the fireside in the evening, and, joining hands, sang "Nearer My God, to Thee," this poor crippled boy, who could express himself with so much difficulty, told how Jesus had saved him.

The following morning we drove twelve miles deeper into the mountains to Fines Creek, Haywood county, where Mr. Smith had helped to build a church and school combined, the land for that purpose having been generously donated by one of the citizens. Owing to the high water, this building could not be finished in time for dedication, so the services were held in a nearby Methodist church, the people riding in on their mules from miles around. This church and school building is to be known as the Ira B. Snyder Memorial Mission. "Bowery Ike," through his faithfulness and his loving work for God, so raised up friends to perpetuate his memory that his life will be a blessing to those poor people in the mountains of North Carolina.

Dyspepsia

From foreign words meaning bad cook, has come rather to signify bad stomach; for the most common cause of the disease is a predisposing want of vigor and tone in that organ.

No disease makes life more miserable. Its sufferers certainly do not live to eat; they sometimes wonder if they should eat to live.

Mrs. S. H. Wallis, Hillsboro, Ohio, who was greatly troubled with it for years, could not eat anything without much suffering; and Peter R. Gaare, Eau Claire, Wis., who was so afflicted with it that he was nervous, sleepless, and actually sick most of the time, obtained no relief from medicines professionally prescribed.

CLOSING DAYS AT MONT-LAWN

LITTLE FOLKS RETURNING TO THE CITY—GOOD WORK FOR THE WAIFS—LASTING INFLUENCES OF THE HOME

THE cool days have come, and when this issue reaches our readers Mont-Lawn's latest guests will have returned to their city homes. Many tots, who, with desks secured, walked proudly into the public schools, and so passed safely under the wing of city teachers, owe ruddy cheeks, bright eyes, sturdy tread, and ability to "get their lessons well," to the outings given by our generous readers. Hundreds of children owe yet more profound obligations to this beautiful work, whose influence, we find, as years roll by, to be lasting, deep and wide.

Recently, as a company of our children were riding on a Tenth street car toward the Chrystenah's dock, a young lady eagerly approached the teacher in charge.

"Where are these children going?" she asked.

"To Mont-Lawn."

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home!" she exclaimed, her face beaming. "I thought so. The happiest memories of my childhood are connected with that place. I was up there the first summer it opened. I was over-age—fourteen

THE "GOOD-BY LUNCH"

—but I was taken in all the same. I stayed a long time. Dr. Klopsch said I should, because I was ailing. We were very, very poor, then. My father had died suddenly, leaving my mother, an invalid, with absolutely no means of support. I don't know what would have become of us if God had not put it into his kind heart to send all three of us children to the Home, and let us stay there till mama got better. She found work for herself as soon as she was strong enough, and she got work for my older sister. I shall never forget Mont-Lawn. Life was so dark and hopeless, and our young hearts were full of anguish and despair, with papa dead, mama in the hospital, and nobody to look to. It was like a message from heaven when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD missionary came to take us to Mont-lawn. That outing put hearts of hope in us all—it made us feel that God hadn't forgotten us. I think, too, the spiritual lessons I learned there help me in my school work; I'm a teacher, now. It seems a long time ago—seven years — but seeing these children this morning brought it all back."

Some children who went to our Mont-Lawn Home seven years ago, and who have come season after season, are entering the missionary field now, as active workers. Through thousands, the blessed influence of Mont-Lawn has been carried into tenement homes. In numerous instances report has come to us that whole neighborhoods are the better and that attendance at missions and Sunday Schools has increased because of the love for holy things which the children acquired at our Fresh Air Home.

Mrs. Packard, of the "Little Mothers' Aid Association," called lately at this office, saying: "I've come to thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the delightful outing our children had at Mont-Lawn. One child gained eleven pounds. All the children who went have called on me to express their gratitude; in many instances their mothers have come for the same purpose. That outing was a god-send to whole families of little ones who went up under the care of their big sisters. Every child was needy; every one was worthy."

The picture given shows a corner of one of the long tables under the big dining tent just before it was folded away for the next summer. The little lads had not begun their attack on the plate of bread when the camera snapped them.

Protracted hot weather caused us to keep the Home open late into the season; and children, who, for some such reason as the necessity of working part of the time, are unable to attend public schools, were beneficiaries. But now our little folks are all gone; the big green lawn is deserted; the sweet tumult of childish song and laughter echoes no longer from hillside and forest. Purple asters and gorgeous golden-rod grow unplucked; the very birds seem to sing mournfully as though missing their little playmates.

But little folks call daily at the Bible House to say a word to the missionaries who were so good to them all summer, to express shy thanks and tell what a fine time they had. Sometimes they come with their troubles—papa is out of work, mama is sick; or very loneliness or lack of love at home brings the small man or woman to our doors. One brave laddie, who had shown himself bright, honest and industrious at the Home, came in and sat down quietly, tears shining in his eyes. He wanted work but did not know how to get it. A good friend of the Home helped the boy to find a place where he could study and work, too.

Housemother Collins receives letters the year round from the children who have been under her guidance at Mont-Lawn. For her beautiful influence over their lives, thousands rise up and call her blessed. Many of her children, grown to manhood and womanhood and living in distant States, remember her ministry and show forth its fruits in their lives. Our teachers have page after page of their note-books filled with the names of children whom they follow up all winter.

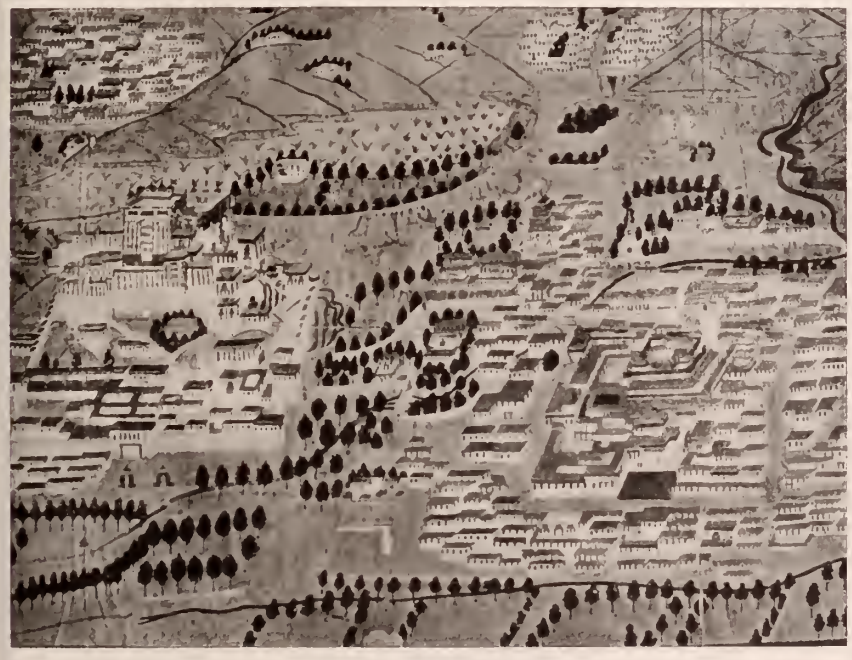
TIBET'S MYSTERIOUS CITY

THOUGH Lhasa, the mysterious, forbidden city of Tibet, is still an unsolved mystery to the outer world, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is to-day enabled to print a picture of this strange capital. This picture is from a drawing made by a Tibetan artist several years ago, and which ultimately came into the hands of Mr. Pratt, an English traveler, who procured it from a trading caravan. It is now reproduced from Black and White of London. Like the work of most Oriental artists, it is a mixture of careful drawing and false perspective. The large ornamental building that rises so high over all the other roofs on the right of the picture is the Chief Lamassary, the home of the official head of Buddhism. On the other side, not so far away, is an almost square block of buildings with a kind of courtyard and an inner block behind it; there is the Chinese Yamen, the viceregal headquarters of Chinese authority over Tibet. For the rest, Lhasa consists mainly in Lamassaries, the homes of Lamas or Buddhist priests, planned on the monastic method or standing individually. It is strictly not a town; it is rather a sacred congregation of Buddhism and the Mecca of that faith. European travelers have repeatedly tried and failed to enter the town during the past fifty-four years.



LHASA, THE "FORBIDDEN CITY" OF TIBET, STILL UNEXPLORED

There is no record of a European having entered it since M. Huc, who is said to have visited it in 1846. Colonel Prejevalsky tried in 1870, and again in 1879. In 1889 M. Rockhill made a long journey through Tibet, but found the way to Lhasa barred. In 1868 T. J. Cooper was turned back at Batang, in an attempt to get through Tibet to India. In 1877 Captain Gill, R. E., had to turn back at the same place. In 1880 Count Bela Szchenyi, the Hungarian traveler, led a very complete expedition into Tibet with the special object of reaching Lhasa, but had to turn back. In 1889 M. Bonvalot, with Prince Henry of Orleans, got within a few days of Lhasa, but could get no farther. M. Rockhill was again there in 1892 and found it as before. Finally we have the very recent story of Mr. Savage Landor, whom the Tibetans tortured for his attempt to reach Lhasa. Many other expeditions have been led into Tibet and have done good work there since 1846, but there is no well authenticated record of any European having entered that mysterious city of priests and temples.

The traveler is met within about three days of Lhasa by men armed to the teeth and unwilling to argue. They point him to another route—away from Lhasa. If he goes away, he may possibly be safe; if not, it appears that they cut his throat, tie him on a horse and throw daggers at him, or else allow him to get a little nearer for a severer treatment. As to passports, the Tibetan Government, recognizing its infinite superiority over the rest of the human race, refuses to consider any such undignified compromises with the barbarian.

Although the mystery of Lhasa has thus deepened during the past fifty years of travel and exploration, it appears that during the previous 500 years, and especially during the previous fifty, it was far more accessible. In his Journey Through Mongolia and Tibet, Mr. Rockhill mentions no fewer than eight European visits to Lhasa during those 500 years, beginning with Friar Odoric in 1325 and ending with Thomas Manning in 1811.

Providential Help

Every year a book is issued describing the work at the orphanages founded by the late George Muller and acknowledging contributions. Mr. Wright, Mr. Muller's son-in-law, who carries on the work, has continued the practice, and has just issued the report of the sixty-sixth year. He says: "In one respect this year's receipts have surpassed all the former sixty-six years. I refer to the receipt, on March 24, of a legacy of $90,000 ($100,000 less legacy duty) to the Orphan Fund. This sum exceeded, by about $35,000, the largest amount ever before received in a single payment. It is not, however, the mere largeness of this item that is to be noticed. The timelincss of it is especially instructive. When, some fourteen years ago, the testator was moved by God to insert this bequest in his will, what was then hidden from human ken, was 'naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do,' viz., that the year 1900, when this bequest would become payable, would, on account of a most costly war in South Africa, and an unprecedented famine in India, be a year of more than ordinary strain to charitable enterprises dependent, instrumentally, upon free-will offerings. Our Father in heaven foresaw the need of the hundreds of fatherless and motherless ones who, in the year 1900, would, in dependence solely upon his power and mercy, be gathered under the sheltering roofs of the Orphan Houses, or rather, under his own sheltering wing, and he took care that even in the time of famine they should be satisfied." The question used often to be asked, "What will become of the institution after Mr. Muller is gone?" Is not God answering the question himself?

A COMFORTING THOUGHT

COMFORT, dear Lord Jesus; comfort,
Give to those whose hearts are sore;
Those who sit in death's dark shadow,
With their dear ones gone before.
Be thou ever near and gracious;
On the troubled breathe thy peace;
Let them hear thy voice of soothing,
Bidding all their sorrow cease.

May they see, as did thy servants,
Angels clothed in shining white,
Making the dark grave all radiant,
Glowing with celestial light.
Comfort with a clear, glad vision
Of the Heavenly home so sweet,
When the loved ones death has parted
In thy smile with joy shall meet.

But a little while the waiting,
Earth shall fade and pass away;
When the night of sorrow ended,
Dawns the bright immortal day.
Oh the sweet, unclouded morning!
No more death, no sorrow-tears,
Peace and love, at home with Jesus,
Through the glad eternal years.

The Lapsley Mission-Boat

The Samuel N. Lapsley mission steamboat, recently described in the columns of this paper, was built by the Sabbath School children of the Southern Presbyterian Church for service on the upper Congo River in Africa and its tributaries. The Congo Mission was established in 1891 by Rev. Messrs. Samuel N. Lapsley (white) and W. H. Sheppard (colored), who were sent by the Foreign Mission Committee of the Southern Presbyterians, Rev. S. H. Chester, D.D., secretary. The first station was opened at Luebo, an important trading-point at the junction of the Luebo and Lulua rivers, the latter flowing into the Kassai, one of the large affluents of the Congo from the South. Lapsley, after a year's heroic labors, died of the deadly African fever and was buried at Underhill on the Congo, where the Baptists have a mission. Sheppard is still in the field, and for his important discoveries he was made a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of England.

Luebo is one thousand miles from the coast and in the extreme southern border of the Congo State. Nine years ago when the mission was started at that place, it was in the midst of utterly heathen tribes, some of whom were cannibals. At present, Luebo is a Christian settlement, having a neat church edifice and a membership of about 300. The work has spread in that section, for a wide door has been opened and more laborers are needed. Stations have been opened at Dombi, to the southeast, at Ibanj, on the north, with the prospect of another station among the Bakuba tribe governed by King Lukenga. There have been nineteen members of this Congo Mission, three of whom have died on the field, and four have been obliged to return to America. The present force is composed of both white and colored men and women. The language has been reduced to writing.

But like all other mission fields this one has had its seasons of discouragement and peril. Last fall the Zappo-Zaps, a fierce cannibal tribe living in the vicinity, armed and employed by the Belgian officials, made a raid near Ibanj, and killed and ate many of the people. The barbarities of the state officials were fully exposed, but the government authorities attempt to throw all the blame of the cruelties and wholesale slaughter of natives in the vicinity of the mission on the Zappo-Zaps.

The government has also shown its hostility to Protestant missions by throwing obstacles in the way of further advancement, although this is in direct violation of the agreement of the powers in organizing the Congo Independent State, in which it was expressly stipulated that religious liberty should prevail and that all denominations should be allowed to conduct mission work without hindrance.

New Orleans, La. EDWARD J. YOUNG.

A MEDICINE-MAN'S CONVERSION

The Rev. H. W. G. Stocken, of the Blackfoot Mission, Northwest Canada, reports to the Church Missionary Society the conversion of a former medicine-man. Mr. Stocken writes of this convert: "Wolf Collar is a man of close upon fifty years of age, a native chief, and a prominent medicine-man. Before his confirmation he gave up the whole of his heathen and medicine paraphernalia, saying that he was conscious that they represented nothing but evil, and that he was desirous not to be a half-hearted Christian. He wished God to clean his heart thoroughly and to keep it entirely. You will understand a little the reality of his conversion when I tell you that on giving up his heathen medicine practice he really sacrificed his wealth, for as a medicine-man he obtained at least two ponies for a single case."

The "In-er-seal Patent Package" is the package that helped to make the Uneeda Biscuit famous. Its ingenious construction renders it proof against water, dust, odor and germs. "It keeps the cargo dry."

When buying Soda Biscuit, Milk Biscuit, Butter Crackers, Graham Biscuit, Oatmeal Biscuit, Ginger Snaps, Handmade Pretzelettes, or Vanilla Wafers, be sure to get them in the "In-er-seal Patent Package." You can distinguish it by the "In-er-seal" trademark on the end. Look for it at your grocers.

The "In-er-seal Patent Package" is owned by us. The genuine contains only our own products.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

25 Masterpieces of AMERICAN ART

DELIVERED FREE ON APPROVAL.

Simply send us your name and address (a postal card will do) before November 3, 1900, mentioning this magazine, and we will forward a fine portfolio containing twenty-five masterpieces of some of America's greatest artists absolutely without expense to you. We want you to see these pictures whether you purchase or not. If you do not like them return them to us and we will pay express charges both ways. If you decide to add them to your home you can pay for them in cash or on easy monthly payments at a special rate.

Special price holds good until November 3d, 1900.

This choice collection, representing thousands of dollars, is now within the means of all lovers of art, and all who wish to beautify the home, and is for the first time available in a single collection. Accompanying each picture is a portrait of the artist and a brief sketch of his life and his most famous works.

The finest photogravure process is used in making these reproductions. The photogravure is the nearest approach to the painting, since all the elements of tone, texture and color-values are preserved by the most delicate and painstaking workmanship.

Each picture in this collection represents the combined efforts of the artist himself and the most skilful engravers. We say without fear of contradiction that this is the most perfect collection of photogravures ever produced. Each picture is printed on extra heavy paper, 18 x 24 inches, in the tint best suited to the subject.

If you cannot afford to have original paintings, which would cost you from $500 to $5000 each, these photogravures are the highest form of art that you can secure with which to adorn your home. They make the most elegant birthday, wedding or Christmas presents at a trifling cost.

Do not fail to write at once in order that you may take advantage of our special offer.

Artistic Monuments in White Bronze

COST NO MORE THAN PLAIN ONES

Marble is entirely out of date. Granite soon gets moss-grown, discolored, requires constant expense and care, and eventually crumbles back to Mother Earth. Besides it is very expensive.

White Bronze is strictly everlasting. It cannot crumble with the action of frost. Moss-growth is an impossibility. It is more artistic than any stone. Then why not investigate it? It has been adopted for nearly one hundred public monuments. We have designs from $4.00 to $4,000.00. Write at once for free designs and information. It puts you under no obligations. We deal direct and deliver everywhere.

Over $28,000 worth of work sold to Christian Herald readers in the last few years.

"RED CHEEKS"

Other Children Have, Why Not Yours?"

The above comments occur in a letter refering to proper selection of food, from E. J. Wilson, 342 Hemlock St., Allegheny, Pa. When our first baby boy reached seven months, he began to lose strength and grow pale. He could not digest any of the ordinary baby foods or prepared milk.

"Acting on the advice of a sister-in-law, who was bringing the roses to the cheeks of her two children, by their diet of Grape-Nuts food, my wife purchased a package and began feeding it gradually to our baby, preparing it with little hot water until it was the consistency of a thick gruel. She not only fed it to the baby but herself began eating it three times a day.

"The transformation was wonderful. Within a month the baby was free from all stomach trouble and my wife's strength was completely renewed, that feeling of fatigue having entirely disappeared. Do not over-feed when giving Grape-Nuts food to the baby. Other children have red cheeks, why not yours?"

This food is concentrated and requires less in volume than any food known. Its delicious taste wins friends and the remarkable effects in the reason of any thoughtful person. It was originally prepared for brain workers, but the effect upon the nerve centres and brain is so valuable that it can be used with even nursing babes, to their very great advantage.

ANECDOTES
. . . FROM MOODY

Spiritual Gems from the Last Writings of the Great Evangelist

Example and Influence

I HAVE heard of a canary that was taught to sing "Home, Sweet Home," by being placed in a room, when young, with a musical box that played only that tune. Moses' face shone after he had been in the mount with God forty days. They took knowledge of the disciples "that they had been with Jesus." And it is said of Lord Peterborough after spending a night with Fenelon, the great French preacher, he was so impressed with his holy character that he said to him on leaving:

"If I stay here any longer I shall become a Christian in spite of myself."

Many a person who is engaged in active Christian work, or who takes a leading part in the prayer-meeting, is so faulty in his daily walk as to be a stumbling-block to others. Some times the last people to be favorably impressed by professing Christians are those who know them in their home life. This is all wrong. Test yourselves therefore, and see if you indulge in any questionable habit, anything in your example and influence that is likely to lead astray those who read your conduct.

An Emblem of the Spirit

How silently the dew comes, and how silently it passes away. And so with the rain. And they are the same the world over. So it is with the Spirit of God. If I should go to China or Japan, I would find the same Spirit as in America. I have sometimes been in a place where the very air seemed to be charged with the breath of God like moisture. I remember one time as I went through the woods near Mount Hermon school, I heard bees, and asked what it meant.

"Oh," said one of the men, "they are after the honey-dew."

"What is that?" I asked.

He gave me a chestnut leaf and told me to put my tongue to it. I did so, and the taste was sweet as honey. Upon inquiry I found that all up and down the Connecticut valley what they call "honey-dew" had fallen, so that there must have been altogether hundreds of tons of honey-dew in this region. Where it came from I don't know. It sometimes seems as if the honey-dew of heaven has fallen for us, and if any one has not tasted its sweetness it is his own fault.

The Power of Conversion

Christmas Evans, that Welsh preacher, pictures a converted drunkard coming home. The little children out playing—his own children—catch sight of him, and they run into the house and cry: "O mother, father is coming! He will kill every one of us."

The mother slips to the door and shuts it, and puts a bar and chain across it, and says: "Mary, come away from the window! Don't let him see you."

And Mary says: "Mother, I don't believe it is father after all. He is clothed like other people and he is walking in the footpath."

Before, when he came home, he would come in a bee-line over ditches and hedges, rush into the house, and knock his wife down and kick the children. They couldn't believe it was he, such a wonderful change had come over him. The devils had gone out, and Christ had come in. When he gets to the house he finds the door bolted and barred and chained and fastened, and he knocks gently.

"Mary, Mary, let me in! I haven't come to hurt you. I have come to tell you what great things Jesus of Nazareth has done for me. I have come to tell you how he cast the devils out of me."

With fear and trembling the wife opens the door, and she can hardly believe her eyes. His voice is as sweet as it was the day he married her; how it just thrills her soul! That face is lit up with the light of another world. She leaps into his arms, they embrace each other, and then he sits down and begins to tell what the Lord has done for him.

THE true value of a paint can be determined only by a series of paintings. It costs more to burn off a cracked and peeled surface than it does to paint a new one.

The cost of keeping a house in good condition for a series of years is less with Pure White Lead than with any other paint. When repainting is required the surface is always in good condition. These brands are genuine.

FREE For Colors use National Lead Company's Pure White Lead Tinting Colors. Any shade desired is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving full information and showing samples of Colors, also pamphlet entitled "Uncle Sam's Experience With Paints" forwarded upon application.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Of Such is the Kingdom*

I.

A HOT, dusty crowd has gathered in the railway station, and is elbowing its way through the funnel at the door while the porter punches the tickets.

The hour-glass is filled with unruly, unnatural human sand,

Dropping its anxious, questioning, uncomfortable grains one by one on the platform.

But a little child joins the throng, and is sucked into the vortex.

A way is opened for him.

Men and women whose faces showed a moment ago no trace of aught but the sharpening, narrowing struggle for existence, begin at last to smile.

One strokes the little fellow's head, another playfully pulls his ear, a third shows him where to present his ticket.

Even the busy doorkeeper finds time for a friendly wink.

The travelers interchange glances, and are almost ashamed that their naked moral selves have been exposed to view.

But it is too late: the magic deed has been done.

For an instant the boy has crystallized those repellant atoms of sand into a beautiful unity,

And the little wizard has passed on, unconscious of his work.

II.

Ah me, what goodness lies buried in every human soul, waiting for the enchanter's wand!

We were each of us wizards once.

We were born such, and for a few brief years we went about turning hearts of stone into hearts of flesh.

How did we lose the happy art?

How did we sink so low as to need its ministrations for ourselves?

Can we not regain the subtle power?

At least let us open our souls to its influence, and perchance it may revive a kindred force within us.

What function is there nobler than the calling forth of what is best in others?

What career grander than that which devotes us to such a mission?

What triumph more sublime than the opening flowers which greet each ray of the rising sun?

*From Plain Talk in Psalm and Parable, by Ernest Crosby. A volume full of beautiful teachings quaintly expressed. Pp. 188. Price, $1.50. Published by Small, Maynard & Co., Boston, Mass.

After Fourscore Years

Good-night, dear heart, good-night!
Nay, let our weeping cease;
Her morning breaks where cloudless light
Bathes the fair hills of peace.

That peace to her so dear
Has settled on her brow,
And now methinks the angels hear
Her gentle "Thee" and "Thou."

Close the sweet, patient eyes—
Why mourn their fading light?
Her vision sweeps celestial skies
Where there is no more night.

Fold the dear earth-worn hands,
They clasp our own no more;
She greets among immortal bands
Her loved ones gone before.

No dying agony
In this last hour is given;
One look across the silent sea,
One step from earth to heaven.

One little sigh for sleep,
A fluttering of the breast,
And then—oh, wherefore should we weep?
She enters into rest.

Toward this calm resting-place
Long was the way she trod;
And so we cover up her face
And leave it all with God.

—MRS. JULIA M. DANA.

MORE BOXES OF GOLD,
And Many Greenbacks.

To secure additional information directly from the people, it is proposed to send little boxes of gold and greenbacks to persons who write the most interesting, detailed, and truthful descriptions of their experience on the following topics:

1. How have you been affected by coffee drinking and by changing from coffee to Postum?

2. Do you know any one who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?

3. Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make Postum clear, black, and with a crisp, rich taste?

4. Have you ever found a better way to make it than to use four heaping teaspoonsful to the pint of water, let stand on stove until real boiling begins, then note the clock and allow it to continue easy boiling full fifteen minutes from that time stirring down occasionally? (A piece of butter about the size of a navy bean, placed in the pot will prevent boiling over.)

5. Give names and account of those you know to have been cured or helped in health by the dismissal of coffee and the daily use of Postum Food Coffee in its place.

6. Write names and addresses of twenty friends whom you believe would be benefited by leaving off coffee. (Your name will not be divulged to them.)

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

Be honest and truthful, don't write poetry or fanciful letters, just plain, truthful statements.

Decision will be made between October 30th, and November 10th, 1900, by three judges, not members of the Postum Cereal Co., and a neat little box containing a $10 gold piece sent to each of the five best writers, a box containing a $5 gold piece to each of the twenty next best writers, a $2 greenback to each of the 100 next best, and a $1 greenback to each of the 200 next best writers, making cash prizes distributed to 325 persons.

Almost every one interested in pure food and drink is willing to have their name and letter appear in the papers, for such help as it may offer to the human race. However, a request to omit the name will be respected.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold and envelopes of money will reach many modest writers whose plain and sensible letters contain the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

Talk this subject over with your friends, and see how many among you can win the prizes. It is a good, honest competition and in the best kind of a cause. Cut this statement out for it will not appear again.

The Secret of Success*

Paul's Survey at the End of His Career of the Principles Which Had Guided Him

SACRED beyond all other utterances of a great man are his last words. If he is conscious that the end is near, he is apt to make his final words impressive in counsel and warning. If they are not personal, they refer to his work, which he naturally hopes will be continued by other men and guided by other hands. We look, too, in these last utterances for some expression either of satisfaction or of disappointment at the result of lifelong effort. Does the man realize that he has wasted his life? Does he confess that he has been following a will-o-the-wisp? Now that the struggle is over, does he feel that it was not worth the making? Or is he glad that he has devoted his life to the particular purpose that has occupied him? Does he consider that he has succeeded and does the success satisfy him? If more remains to be done, how would he advise his successors to proceed; of what must they beware? The answer to such inquiries is especially interesting in the case of a man who has been regarded as a fanatic. When the world has abused him and called him fool and madman and he has persevered in spite of it, believing in his cause, we are curious to know whether the man is at the end just as earnest as ever and as fully convinced as at the beginning of his career that he was right. So when Paul the aged is consciously near death and is writing to his chosen successor, we want to hear what is his own estimate of his extraordinary life.

There is no hesitancy, no ambiguity about the answer. Paul declares himself thoroughly content with the cause for which he had suffered the loss of all things that men value. He is a prisoner in chains, suffering cold and privation; and a violent death at the hands of the executioner is close at hand; but he does not regret the work that has brought him to such an end. This is the more remarkable from the fact that it is not apparent on the surface that any good had come to him as a result of his labors. If therefore Paul's object had been wealth or social consideration, his career was a failure. He had sacrificed himself, sacrificed his prospects in the Jewish community. Yet we can see from his avowal that if it had all been to do over again, he would have taken the same course. Truly it was good to live a life that so satisfied in the hour of death.

What had been its characteristics and what its reward? His exhortation to Timothy tells the story. He does not tell the young missionary to be such an one as he has been; but he tells him what qualities he should have and what his conduct should be. This is Paul's ideal of a Christian life. Earnestness, perseverance, courage, promptitude, endurance, watchfulness, indifference to the hostility of enemies or the ingratitude of friends—these were the qualities he hoped that Timothy would have. And truly, he had need of them all, if he was to carry on Paul's work. The difficulties that Paul had encountered and surmounted were not all overcome. They would raise their heads again and new ones would come to their aid. To this day they have survived and we recognize in Paul's enumeration many of the opponents that the missionary and the earnest Christian, whether preacher or layman must meet. The congregation with itching ears, desiring to hear words that are not too personal and that will comfort them with assurances that they are safe and nothing—not even righteousness—is required of them—that Jesus has done it all—they are still with us. But Paul demands of his successor that he be bold and declare the truth and rebuke and reprove and exhort, with all long-suffering. Little as we know of Paul's life and work, we can see how thoroughly he had made these things the rule of his own career. So must they still be the rules for every Christian in his own circle, if at the last he would be as satisfied as Paul was.

GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER

The popular secretary of the Wellsburg, N. Y., Board of Trade is Mr. W. J. Dalton, and his statement to a reporter regarding one of the most important events of his life carries with it the greatest weight. It is unusual for a person to be afflicted from childhood with rheumatism but it is even wonderful that there is a remedy so exactly suited to the treatment of this stubborn disease that one hundred doses were sufficient to eradicate it in a case of twenty years' standing. The proof that such a remedy is within the reach of all rheumatic sufferers is found in Mr. Dalton's own words. He says:

"I had been troubled with rheumatism all my life, even when a boy. It attacked me in the legs, arms and shoulder. The pain in the latter was particularly severe. I, of course, took medicine for it, but did not obtain permanent relief. One day about three years ago while reading a newspaper, I saw an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and determined to give them a trial. I had taken but three boxes of the pills when the trouble, which had been my affliction from childhood, entirely disappeared.

"About a year later, I had another attack of rheumatism which was brought on by working in a damp place. I remembered well what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People had done for me, so I immediately purchased some. Strangely enough, just three boxes again cured me, and I have been entirely free from rheumatism ever since. I have told a number of people about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and they have taken them with the most beneficial results."

(Signed) W. J. DALTON.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, AND BROWN'S BIBLE COMMENTARY

By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's Glasgow; Rev. A. B. Fausset, A. M., St. Cuthbert's York, and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen. A Complete commentary critical, explanatory and practical on the Old and New Testaments. —1380 pages, bound in cloth. Former price, $7.50.

It is enriched with the results of learning, the researches of travelers who have visited every region on which the light of revelation originally shone, and the expository labors of scholars and critics. Far in advance of the older works now in use, this explanatory and practical commentary has been prepared by three eminent divines, distinguished alike for their scholarship and their piety. While this is the most practical, suggestive, scientific and popular commentary yet published in this country, its compact form and convenient size, together with the immense amount of matter it contains, forming an encyclopædia of biblical knowledge, render it also at once the cheapest and most economical.

Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, Editor of The Sunday School Times: I do not know of its equal, within its scope and cost, and I believe it will have, as it merits, a very wide circulation, and will do great good.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, Bishop M. E. Church: "This immense book deserves a place on the table of every Bible student. It is the cream of the commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars."

EDERSHEIM'S LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS THE MESSIAH (2 Vols.).

The Authorized American Edition. By Alfred Edersheim, M. A., Oxon, D.D. Lecturer, Oxford University.

Two volumes, former price, $6.00. Royal 8vo, 1,524 pages, handsomely bound in silk cloth.

A famous book for clergyman, student or general reader. Its long continued success and the many favorable notices are sufficient evidence of the popularity this new edition will achieve. Gives a full account of society, life and development,—intellectual and religious—in Palestine, to serve as a frame and background for the picture of Christ. The fresh study of the text of the Gospels makes the book a historical commentary on the four Gospels.

This great life of Christ will prove particularly valuable to every Sunday School worker as the International Lessons are now on the life of Christ.

The Sunday School Times recommends it: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Savior which is critical in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time. This book is written not for the learned alone, but rather for the generally intelligent Christian reader.

CRITICAL AND EXPOSITORY BIBLE CYCLOPÆDIA.

Compiled and written by Rev. A. R. Fausset, A. M., joint author of the Jamieson, Fausset and Brown Bible Commentary.
It contains 750 three-column pages; 600 illustrations.
Regular price, cloth binding, $5.00.

This great work is the result of seven years of labor by the author, contains three thousand seven hundred articles, and presents a completeness, conciseness, and thoroughness, such as to make it a perfect Bible Cyclopædia.

It sets forth briefly and suggestively those doctrinal and experimental truths which are contained in the Written Word itself. In it, also, the fruits of modern criticism and research are placed in most convenient and accessible form for Bible students.

Fresh light has been thrown on many obscure questions of Sacred Topography and History, verifying in the minutest details the accuracy of Holy Writ. For this the author is indebted to the labors of the Agents of the Palestine Exploration Fund.

The work also contains a valuable Index of all the books and chapters of the Bible in consecutive order, with references to the articles which illustrate them.

J. W. Bashford, D.D., President Ohio Wesleyan University: "It is a most admirable aid. I hope ten thousand teachers will use it inside the next six months."

Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage: "It is in advance of all books in that line,—unique, learned, accurate, and valuable."

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

Readers are invited to forward new questions which they believe would be suitable for discussion in this department.

These Questions Will be Answered Nov. 7

1. An emblem used in one passage in the Bible to signify frailty, is used in another for humiliation, and in a third for sin. What is the emblem, and where is it so employed?

2. Should the Christian Church recognize as binding any other form of marriage than that which it has prescribed, i.e., such forms or ceremonies as may be used by non-Christian or unevangelized peoples?

3. If a Christian becomes accidentally acquainted with the hiding-place of a criminal, is it incumbent upon him to give information to the police, or should he leave them to find it out themselves?

4. Is it right to use fermented wine at the Lord's table, inasmuch as by partaking of it some reformed drunkard may be brought into danger of backsliding into sin?

5. Should a Christian employer be satisfied with paying the market rate of wages to his employees when he knows they cannot live upon them in decent comfort?

6. If an eagle leaving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, New York, January 1, 1901, were to fly due eastward at the rate of one hundred miles a day, between sunrise and sunset, when would it encircle the globe and return to its starting point, assuming that the earth is a perfect sphere of 8,000 miles radius?

7. Is a Christian justified in continuing in business after he has gained a competence, or ought he to retire to give other men an opportunity?

8. At what temperature does water boil at each 1,000 feet of altitude, and what is the cause of the variation?

9. What is the distinction referred to in I. Thessalonians 5:23, between the spirit and the soul?

10. Where is the centre of population in the United States?

☞ An aged subscriber writes us that he wishes to bequeath his property, valued at $15,000, to The Christian Herald Children's Home, as his only son is a spendthrift, whom he wishes to debar from the use of the property, and asks for the details of a legal bequest. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, while cordially welcoming assistance toward the maintenance of the beneficent work in which it is engaged in behalf of the tenement children of this great metropolis, does not consider it advisable for parents to cut off their children from their rightful inheritance. A few years may regulate the young man's habits and then such a will would prove a very deplorable affair.

Better far to make a bequest of a few hundred or even a thousand dollars for a benevolent purpose, such as the one proposed, and thus give the young man a chance and a fair start in life. The legal title is The Christian Herald Children's Home of New York; but we do not invite legacies that would deprive others of their just inheritance. Indeed, we should hesitate to accept such bequests.

Questions of the Week

1. Upon what do people who believe that each person upon earth has a "guardian angel" base their belief?

We know from Scripture that the good angels guard and protect the pious: (1) in infancy, Matt. 18:10; (2) in any honest calling, Ps. 34:7; 91:11, 12; Matt. 1:19, 20; 2:13, 19; Acts 10:3, 7; Rev. 1:1; 22:6, 16; and (3) at death, Luke 16:22. But to the question above, we have no definite answer. Baier, in whose opinion the majority of orthodox scholars coincide, says: "It may be asserted with probability that one angel is appointed for the protection of each pious person, and that in extraordinary cases many angels are sent to the help of single individuals."

G. E. KRAUTH.

Three strong influences to lead us to rest in the comfort of angelic watch and care may be found in Ps. 34:7, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them"; in Ps. 91:11, 12, "He shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands"; and in Heb. 1:14, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation?" We read that angels ministered to Daniel, Hagar, Balaam, Gideon, Elijah, Peter, Paul and others. This leads us to trust that they are also sent to us, and in Heb. 13:2, it is suggested that we may not always be aware of their presence. In Gen. 48:16, Abraham speaks of "the God which hath fed me all my life long," and "the angel which hath redeemed me from all evil." In Rev. 14:6 we read of an angel to proclaim an eternal gospel to them that dwell on earth of every nation, tribe, tongue and people, from which we imply an angelic ministration to each individual. LOUISE C. TOWER.

2. What is the most explicit and definite quotation of the Old Testament in the New?

Out of several quotations from the Old Testament, found in the New, the following seems "the most explicit and definite" because each word is given exactly as it is found, in three different places, and in one case the location of the quotation in the Old Testament is given. See Acts 13:33, "as it is written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee;" see Psalm 2:7.

HEPPIE W. HAMILTON.

3. In conversion, is faith or repentance experienced first?

On this point some of the older divines were very definite. Calvin, for instance, said that faith certainly comes before repentance. But is it necessary to become so definite? In dealing with the action of the Spirit on the soul of man we must expect to encounter more or less mystery. There may perhaps be no absolute rule that applies to every case. At any rate, so far as consciousness goes, there will be a diversity of experience. Some are conscious of experiencing faith first—others of repentance. But while there may be a more conscious experience of the one thing or the other, I incline to think the two experiences are simultaneous. There may be a consciousness of the one thing, and a sub-consciousness of the other; so they may really come together. I think of faith and repentance as two attitudes of one act. For what is faith but turning to God, and what is repentance but turning from sin? If I turn my face to God, I must turn my back on sin; it is a necessity of the case; the two attitudes are involved in the one act; and the one attitude means faith—the other repentance. As I have said, there is mystery here. The realm of the Spirit's operation is hallowed ground, and we must tread it reverently.

REV. JOSEPH HAMILTON.

We believe the Scriptures clearly demonstrate that in conversion, repentance is experienced before faith. Conversion is defined as "a radical change of moral character: a change from the service of the world to the service of God." Repentance is defined as "A heart broken for sin and a life broken from sin." John the Baptist opened his wonderful ministry by saying, "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus commenced as follows: "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 4:17). The twelve commenced their ministry by going out and preaching that men should repent (Mark 6:12). As Jesus bade his disciples farewell, his parting message was, "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached" (Luke 24:47). Thus we find the keynote of the new dispensation was repentance and not faith. The first sermon Peter preached after the day of Pentecost had for its theme Repentance (Acts 2:38), and the same is true of his second discourse where he exhorts them to repent and be converted (Acts 3:19). Repentance and faith are both the gift of God, and our heavenly Father can bestow them at his good pleasure, but it seems to me that the Gospel and the Book of Acts place repentance as the basis of the new birth, or in other words that repentance is experienced before faith. A. A. KNIGHT.

4. Did the elders of Israel see God, as is stated in Exodus 34:10, 11, or has no one seen him at any time, as is stated in John 1:18?

In John 1:18 the word, "God," is without the article, "the." This mode of expression, therefore, means not God as a person, but rather refers to the Divine nature—"God as God." The appearances of God mentioned in the Old Testament do not come under this category. As Canon Westcott says, "Even Christ himself was not 'seen' as God. The perception of his true Divine nature was not immediate, but gained by slow processes, John 14:9. The words (John 1:18) . . . do not deny the possibility of a true knowledge of God, but of a natural knowledge of God, such as can be described by 'sight.'"

G. E. KRAUTH.

5. Since the tree of life in the Garden of Eden was not forbidden to Adam, why did he not eat of its fruit?

There is nothing in the narrative to indicate that he did not eat of its fruit all through the time of his innocence. The penalty imposed upon disobedience was that he should "surely die." "In the day" that he ate of the "tree of knowledge," which was forbidden, he was cut off from further eating of the "tree of life," and so, being cut off from immortality, he died. That he had eaten of the tree of life before his sin (as he most probably had, as the condition of his immortality,) did not suffice to keep him forever alive after his sin. This exclusion from the tree and the penalty of death seem to be identical. C. P. ATKINSON.

6. Should a Christian become surety for his friend if that is the best way of helping him, or is he justified in refusing because of the warning in Prov. 6: 1 and other passages?

The double relation of friendship and necessity makes a heavy claim against us. The warning in Prov. 6:1-4 is only a caution of prudence and practical wisdom. If it is the best way of helping a friend in need, we are not justified in refusing to become his surety by all warnings of prudence, unless we see reasonable grounds of fear in our individual situation. If our own case is such that we would be bringing ourselves to possible want and embarrassment, then we should take the warning. We have no right to put ourselves in as bad or worse plight than the involved friend. The law of charity demands of us that we should make sacrifices and take some risks, but not beyond the reasonable limit of protection to ourselves and our obligations. That is where Proverbs 6:1 applies.

C. P. ATKINSON.

7. Is the use of tea and coffee, as a whole, a blessing or a bane to the human race?

Tea and coffee both contain, coffee in the greater degree, a dangerous substance and poison called nicotine, which has an injurious effect on the mental and nervous systems. It has been proven that a man is better without than with either drink. A certain case gained ten pounds in one year, after stopping coffee; and tea has been known to produce effects (when drunk at every meal) similar to liquors.

Where tea and coffee are abstained from, better mental faculties, better health, and a better general system are sure to be the results. The inference then is that the two are better let alone. W. RAY BURROUGHS.

A blessing without any question. Its use gently stimulates, and has no injurious reaction. Thousands of workers, worn out both mentally and physically nightly rejoice because of its restful and tranquilizing effects. Physiology also conclusively proves that it diminishes the waste of tissues, and permits the performance of excessive labor, even on an inadequate diet, without reducing the muscular strength. The testimony of the poor everywhere, of miners, of caravans on the deserts, of soldiers in camp, and of thousands of others, proves that it is a blessing. To them it is indispensable in supplementing an imperfect and meagre diet, and in relieving that overwhelming sense of fatigue which all experience after continued and exhaustive labor. CAROLINE SCHNEIDER.

8. Is a wife justified in giving to philanthropic or religious work unknown to her husband, when she is satisfied that it is his duty which he is neglecting?

It depends on whether the wife has means of her own. If her husband makes her an allowance for her personal use, as every husband should, she is justified in going without a new hat or a new dress and devoting the money thus saved to charitable or religious purposes. If by her exertions in the household, money can be saved that otherwise would be spent in hiring help, that too she is entitled to use as she chooses. In short, anything that is hers by earning or by self-denial she has the right to use. She has no right to take money supplied to her for one definite purpose and apply it to another. Nor has she the right to go to her husband's savings and take money to apply to religious purposes. She will not be held accountable for her husband's negligence, but only for her own failure to do her own duty. It is better, even so, that he should know what she is doing. Secrets between husband and wife are liable to breed disunion. ROBERT WYNN.

9. What conclusive proofs exist (outside of Scripture) that death does not end all?

The belief in immortality, or an existence after the end of this life, is universal among men. This idea or hope could not have arisen out of human experience; nor could it have been suggested by human reason. It must, therefore, be a part of human nature, and, whether human nature be a creation or an evolution, whatever is a part of it must be a truth. This belief is, therefore, to the soul of man a prophecy and a revelation of its immortal destiny. Immortality is proven also by the principle of perfection. Everything in nature is perfect, and completely accomplishes its purpose, human life only excepted. If death ends all, then is man, the noblest of God's works, the most conspicuous failure among all the things he has made. It is proven also by the principle of justice. Justice is an elementary principle in God's universe, and the love of justice is innate in man. But, in this life justice does not rule. There must be another existence where the wrong and injustice of this can be corrected. If death ends all, then is truth a fiction, honor becomes hypocrisy, the distinction between vice and virtue dwindles to an imaginary line, unselfishness is folly, justice a mockery; and man, all the finer sentiments of his nature being outraged, sinks below the level of the brute; and God becomes the author of a system ending in moral as well as material chaos. If evolution be true, immortality is a logical sequence, for the universe in all its parts is an infinite progressive series, without beginning, and equally without end, and man, the flower of the series, must continue to develop into its ripened fruit.

JOHN G. OSBORNE.

In all ages, man has felt the inward conviction of the truth of a future life. Science, logic, sophistry, cannot shake this unalterable conviction. Either God himself is immortal, and his Spirit in us makes us also immortal, or he has imposed upon the entire human race an inexplicable hallucination and delusion, which makes life a mockery, our conception of Deity a fable, religion a baseless dream, and justice, honor, love, virtue, truth, integrity meaningless words. If the latter be true, man is possessed and tormented by an active, irrepressible, irresistible desire which can never be gratified—the only instance in the whole creation of an unsatisfied want. If the former be true—as I believe it to be, absolutely—we shall be enlightened and enlarged the instant we escape from this mortal tenement, and then our real selves, with the sense of spiritual vision newly awakened, will see and understand what God in his wisdom has concealed from us during our sojourn in this life. We shall some day open our soul-eyes and say with gladness: "Lo, death is only the beginning of the greater and sweeter life, the entrance to our Father's limitless universe, where, under his beneficent care we shall find possibilities of expansion not even dreamed of in our world experience." ROBERT VYSE.

10. When two members of the same church quarrel and the minister is unable to reconcile them and is in doubt which is right, ought he to exclude both from the Lord's table until they are reconciled, or leave the matter to their own consciences?

The pastor should faithfully labor with the offending parties, and should plainly warn them of the spiritual peril involved in coming to the Lord's table in an unsuitable frame of mind and heart (I. Cor. 11: 27-30). He may even advise them not to communicate until their differences are adjusted. But with that, his duty is done. He is not a spiritual dictator; he has no right of exclusion. In the last analysis, the liberty of the individual conscience must be recognized and conceded.

Miscellaneous Questions

We have received several letters criticizing us for devoting so much space to the publication of individual subscriptions to the India Famine Fund. In reply, we beg to submit that this space is not devoted to this work at the expense of the readers of this journal. In every instance, these acknowledgments are made in supplementary pages specially added to the paper for that express purpose, that none of the features may be curtailed in consequence thereof. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will not receive moneys that it cannot publicly acknowledge, nor will it handle charity funds for which it cannot publish detailed statements concerning their administration. While such a course frequently entails much trouble and expense on the publisher, we believe it proves eminently acceptable and satisfactory to every contributor to the worthy causes which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from time to time espouses.

J. S., Newark, N. J. What is an Indian mela?

It is a great gathering of people in some particular place at an appointed time and with a common purpose. It may be either social or religious. Some melas are marked by gorgeous decorations and illuminations, grand dinners and other costly festivities.

J. H. H., Repaupo, N. J. What does intemperance cost our nation annually?

Our annual drink bill, that is money spent on liquor actually consumed, is $1,080,000,000. To this should be added 60 per cent. of the total of all judicial, penal, reformatory, police, and charitable expenditures in the different states, which are the result of the drink traffic—say $65,000,000. To offset this, there is a state and local revenue from the traffic of about $25,000,000.

N. S., Gunpowder, Ky. David says he never saw the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging. How was it with the beggar who was laid at the rich man's gate, and who died, and was carried by angels to Abraham's bosom?

The two cases have no bearing upon each other. David was speaking, not for the whole human race, but of matters strictly within his own experience, when he said that in his own day and generation he had never seen the righteous forsaken, nor his children brought to beggary.

..RED MEN AND WHITE WORSHIP TOGETHER

AT·AN·INDIAN·CAMP-MEETING

CHRISTIAN TRIBESMEN ADDRESS THE CAMPERS

ONE of the events to which the civilized and evangelized Indians look forward each year is the camp-meeting. Perhaps they have in view, not only the spiritual good to be derived, but also the enjoyable social reunion at which they will meet many friends.

The Wichita Mountains lie forty miles south of the Indian Agency, at Anadarko, Oklahoma, at the foot of Mt. Scott. The highest peak is an ideal camping-ground where such meetings are often held. This year's camp was especially interesting. Among the party that started for the camping-ground was a young Comanche girl, named Sarah, whose baby died the previous night. The party came driving up to the mission, asking that a service be held before taking the baby for burial. A trunk was lifted from the wagon and placed upon two chairs. A blanket had been placed in the bottom of the trunk, on which the poor little Indian baby was tenderly laid, and then all that had belonged to the child was put in the trunk. When the service was about to begin, the cover was closed and the trunk locked. It was a sad group of Indian women with tear-stained faces that gathered there, for Indians really love their children.

A CAMP-MEETING OF RED MEN IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY

All morning the great, heavy covered wagon, laden with bedding, edibles and precious live freight dragged along over the almost level prairie. Mt. Scott soon peered above the horizon a faint, bluish cloud which grew brighter as the day grew older. At noon, and eighteen miles out, we came to Cache Creek, where we rested under the small trees which in this part of the country grow only on the banks of the little streams. We camped about two hours, refreshing both the outer and inner man. The horses, after eating, rolled in the water and soon were in the harness again ready to travel with renewed energy. On and on we went in the hot sun, with a hot wind blowing constantly. Cold water was our only desire and this was granted when we came to a Presbyterian Mission Station—an oasis in a desert. Here we "tanked up," little dreaming that it would be our last good water for days to come. Going still onward over what a few years ago was called the "Great American Desert," but which is now a part of Oklahoma, we came at last to the far-off mountains of the morning. The road through the mountains was very rough; the strata stood vertically with little soil in the crevices where the long grass grew in perfectly even rows. There were no trees. Passing through the last valley, a grand view of Mt. Scott surprised us by its nearness. As we came to the foot of the mountain, we saw a little Methodist Church, apparently miles from anywhere. The wilderness had indeed "blossomed as the rose." We soon descried the Indian camps and knew that our journey was ended.

While supper was being prepared, we roamed among the camps and found them a very comfortable set of semi-civilized Indians. Their arbors were well-built and thickly covered with branches. Indians carry all their possessions with them, and under one arbor there were two sewing machines in operation. Supper was just ready and the rest of the family were seated at the table which was full of edibles, principally melons. Before eating, Dompedite asked a long blessing in Kiowa. Oklahoma watermelons are not to be equaled in cheapness or quality and Indians are especially fond of them.

After supper came the evening service. Sankadota, a Kiowa, gave the summons. The air being very clear, his voice swelled strongly on the evening breeze and many gathered under the arbor. After a hymn, Pedro, a Mexican captive, was asked to offer prayer. He began in Kiowa, "Aho, aho, aho Jesus, aho," (Thank you, thank you, thank you Jesus, thank you). A heart full of thanks for the blessings of life from one having so little, apparently, certainly had its lesson.

After service, all disposed of themselves for the night, some in tents, some in hammocks, or on cots out of doors, and others, rolled in blankets, lay upon the ground. All were soon fast asleep. The first night, however, did not prove one of rest, for the wind blew, stirring up the dust and gave us an extra covering. Dust storms form no small part of the climate in this section of the west.

Breakfast was cooked over the camp-fire. In camp, "everything goes," and one relishes everything served on a tin plate and coffee in a tin cup. The water for drinking, cooking and bathing all came from a pretty little stream called Medicine Creek, which flowed right by the camp. Here the horses rolled and drank; here the children, Indian and white, waded and swam, and here we all drank in one and the same place. The water was warm, too, but it was a swift little current that was always clear. Indian children are children of nature, and it was a perfect delight to see how quickly they could slip off the one garment from their brown, chubby bodies, dive and swim and splash and then spring out on the bank and into their clothes again. They often jump in with their clothes on, and then sit in the sunshine to dry off, only to try it over again. Their fun was the most unaffected to be imagined.

Sankadota's call "Bacoholda!" ("come here") again summoned us. It was indeed a strange audience. Most of the men had long hair, though dressed in civilized clothing. One man had on a buckskin suit, wore dark glasses and carried a fancy fan. The women, almost without exception, wore Indian clothes. One fully realized that God is no respecter of persons, for there were in this religious assemblage whites, several tribes of Indians — Kiowas, Comanches and Apaches—and Mexicans representing the Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopal churches, and many identified with no particular church.

Next day was Sunday, and even in camp, miles and miles away from the busy life of the world, the atmosphere seemed permeated with the stillness and rest peculiar to the day. The call by faithful "brother" Sankadota again rang out solemnly on the quiet, and one felt drawn irresistibly to go to church. The congregation presented a Sunday appearance. The men had their glossy black hair smoothly brushed, twisted with bright ribbons or worsted, one strand hanging over each shoulder in front, the scalp lock finely braided and hanging down behind. There were a few men wearing blankets, and there were several white shirts and collars, and all had on neckties. One Indian wore tan shoes, another a white shirt that had been washed but not ironed. The women were very neat, clean and attractive in their bright calicos and gorgeous shawls. Kiowa hymns, both words and music composed by the Indians were sung in perfect time with the rhythm peculiar to Indian music. The men have wonderfully deep, bass voices, while the women sing in a fine falsetto. The Indians were told they might "talk just a little, so a good many could have a chance." In a short time the talks began to lengthen and the morning was soon gone. We understood but little, but the interpreter gave us glimpses now and then, and without exception each said he was "trying every day to walk the Jesus road." While service was in session, Dompedite rose from her place and went quietly among the people, shaking hands and causing no interruption. The minister, who expected to do a little of the talking himself, was entirely cut out, for when Luther, a fine specimen of an educated Kiowa, was asked the time, he took out a gold watch, the only timepiece in camp, saying it was twelve o'clock.

Four babies were baptized at the afternoon meeting. The chubbiest of all was little Thomas, whose surname is Cat. One little girl was called Emma, and as the drops fell from the minister's hand, she put out her little tongue, catching them one by one, so the minister paused to give the baby a drink. She smiled and drew herself up ready to spring with glee out of her mother's arms.

There was service again in the evening. Dompedite wished to speak, and came forward to face the people, and talked a long time. When she finished she not only shook hands, but surprised many, especially the white people, by suddenly throwing her arms about them and kissing them. Next day the Indians began to show signs of unrest and breaking-up camp. A picnic at Chickasha, a town sixty miles away, was the attraction. Sankadota was asked if many were going. He being a Methodist, said, "No, the Christians, they stay, but the others, pretty soon they all go."

While we were eating dinner Pedro happened to come along, and was invited to sit down too. He was asked many questions about himself. He is a Mexican, and was captured by the Kiowas when a small boy, and has lived with them ever since. In the Indian warfare of 1875 he was taken prisoner, and was one of those sent to Florida for three years. The boys had been fishing, and "fish stories" were in order. Pedro listened, and then took his turn, saying, "One time, Indians on war-path, heap hungry, pretty soon killed big turtle. Three hundred Indians just eat half."

A COMANCHE MOTHER AND BABE — DOMPEDITE AND HER HUSBAND, GAWKEY — KIOWA LITTLE FOLKS — KIOWA AUNT AND CHILD

At the evening farewell service, which was well-attended, several were just a little sleepy, among them Pedro. The good Sankadota, ever alert, suddenly arose, walked straight to Pedro, giving him a good shaking, which soon brought him back to listen to the sermon. A good work was not only wrought upon Pedro, but it had the effect of arousing all dull listeners. After service, the hearty handshakes and cordial good-bys were indeed a more than enjoyable feature of the meeting, for the brotherhood of man between red and white was sealed with Christian love. Breaking camp next morning, we retraced the forty miles that lay between us and the agency.

Towards Evening

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text, Luke 24: 29: . . . . . Abide with us; for it is towards evening.

TWO villagers having concluded their errand in Jerusalem have started out at the city gate and are on their way to Emmaus, the place of their residence. They go with a sad heart. Jesus, who had been their admiration and their joy, had been basely massacred and entombed. As with sad face and broken heart they pass on their way, a stranger accosts them. They tell him their anxieties and bitterness of soul. He in turn talks to them, mightily expounding the Scriptures. He throws over them the fascination of intelligent conversation. They forget the time and notice not the objects they pass, and before they are aware have come up in front of their house. They pause before the entrance and attempt to persuade the stranger to tarry with them. Night is coming on, and he may meet a prowling wild beast or be obliged to lie unsheltered from the dew. He cannot go much farther now. Why not stop there, and continue their pleasant conversation? They take him by the arm and they insist upon his coming in, addressing him in the words: "Abide with us; for it is towards evening." The lamps are lighted, the table is spread, pleasant socialities are enkindled. They rejoice in the presence of the stranger guest. He asks a blessing upon the bread they eat, and he hands a piece of it to each. Suddenly and with overwhelming power the thought flashes upon the astounded people—it is the Lord! And as they sit in breathless wonder, looking upon the resurrected body of Jesus, he vanished. He was gone.

The Evening of Old Age

With many of us it is a bright, sunshiny day of prosperity. There is not a cloud in the sky, not a leaf rustling in the forest. No chill in the air. But we cannot expect all this to last. He is not an intelligent man who expects perpetual daylight of joy. The sun will after a while near the horizon. The shadows will lengthen. While I speak, many of us stand in the very hour described in the text: "For it is towards evening." The request of the text is appropriate for some in every community. For with them it is toward the evening of old age. They have passed the meridian of life. They are sometimes startled to think how old they are. They do not, however, like others to remark upon it. If others suggest their approximation toward venerable appearance, they say: "Why, I'm not so old after all." They do, indeed, notice that they cannot lift quite as much as once. They cannot walk quite so fast. They cannot read quite so well without spectacles. They cannot so easily recover from a cough or any occasional ailment. They have lost their taste for merriment. They are surprised at the quick passage of the year. They say that it only seems but a little while ago that they were boys. They are going a little down hill. There is something in their health, something in their vision, something in their walk, something in their changing associations, something above, something beneath, something within to remind them that it is toward evening.

The great want of all such is to have Jesus abide with them. It is a dismal thing to be getting old without the rejuvenating influence of religion. When we stop on the down-grade of life and see that it dips to the verge of the cold river, we want to behold some one near who will help us across it. When the sight loses its power to glance and gather up, we need the faith that can illumine. When we feel the failure of the ear, we need the clear tones of that voice which in olden times broke up the silence of the deaf. When the shadows begin to fall and we feel that the day is far spent, we need most of all to supplicate the beneficent Jesus in the prayer of the villagers: "Abide with us; for it is towards evening." The request of the text is an appropriate exclamation for all those who are approaching the gloomy hour of temptation. There is nothing easier than to be good-natured when everything pleases, or to be humble when there is nothing to puff us up, or forgiving when we have not been assailed, or honest when we have no inducement to fraud. But you have felt

The Grapple of Temptation

Your nature at some time quaked and groaned under the infernal force. You felt that the devil was after you. You saw your Christian graces retreating. You feared that you would fail in the awful wrestle with sin and be thrown into the dust. The gloom thickened. The first indications of the night were seen. In all the trembling of your soul, in all the infernal suggestions of Satan, in all the surging up of tumultuous passions and excitements, you felt with awful emphasis that it was toward evening. In the tempted hour you need to ask Jesus to abide with you. You can beat back the monster that would devour. You can unhorse the sin that would ride you down. You can sharpen the battle-ax with which you split the head of helmeted abomination. Who helped Paul shake the brazen-gated heart of Felix? Who acted like a good sailor when all the crew howled in the Mediterranean shipwreck? Who helped the martyrs to be firm, when one word of recantation would have unfastened the withes of the stake and put out the kindling fire? When the night of the soul came on and all the denizens of darkness came riding upon the winds of perdition—who gave strength to the soul? Who gave calmness to the heart? Who broke the spell of infernal enchantment? He who heard the request of the villagers: "Abide with us; for it is towards evening."

The prayer of the text is appropriate for all who are anticipating sorrow. The greatest folly that ever grew on this planet is the tendency to borrow trouble; but there are times when is so evident that we need to be making especial preparations for its coming. One of your children has lately become a favorite. The cry of that child strikes deeper into the heart than the cry of all the others. You think more about it. There is something in the cheek, in the eye and in the walk that makes you quite sure that the leaves of the flower are going to be scattered. The utmost nursing and medical attendance are ineffectual. The pulse becomes feeble, the complexion lighter, the step weaker, the laugh fainter. No more romping for that one through hall and parlor. The nursery is darkened by an approaching calamity. The heart feels with mournful anticipation that the sun is going down. It is toward evening.

You have long rejoiced in the care of a mother. You have done everything to make her last days happy. You have run with quick feet to wait upon her every want. Her presence has been a perpetual blessing in the household. But the fruit-gatherers are looking wistfully at that tree. Her soul is ripe for heaven. The gates are ready to flash open for her entrance. But your soul sinks at the thought of separation. You cannot bear to think that soon you will be called to take the last look at that face, which from the first hour has looked upon you with affection unchangeable. But you see that life is ebbing and the grave will soon hide her from your sight. You sit quiet. You feel heavy-hearted. The light is fading from the sky, the air is chill. It is toward evening.

You had a considerable estate and felt independent. In five minutes on one fair balance sheet you could see just how you stood with the world. But there came complications; something that you imagined impossible, happened. The best friend you had proved traitor to your interests. A sudden crash of national misfortune prostrated your credit. You may to-day be going on in business, but you feel anxious about where you are standing, and fear that the next turn of the commercial wheel will bring you prostrate. You foresee what you consider certain defalcation. You think of the anguish of telling your friends that you are not worth a dollar. You know not how you will ever bring your children home from school. You wonder how you will stand the selling of your library or the moving into a plainer house. The misfortunes of life have accumulated. You wonder what makes the sky so dark. It is toward evening.

Trouble is an apothecary that mixes a great many draughts, bitter and sour and nauseous, and you must drink some one of them. Trouble puts up a great many packs, and you must carry some one of them. There is no sandal so thick and well adjusted but some thorn will strike through it. There is no sound so sweet but the undertaker's screw-driver grates through it. In this swift shuttle of the heart some of the threads must break. The journey from Jerusalem to Emmaus will soon be ended. Our Bible, our common sense, our observation reiterate in tones that we cannot mistake and ought not to disregard: it is toward evening.

Oh, then, for Jesus to abide with us! He sweetens the cup. He extracts the thorn. He wipes the tear. He hushes the tempest. He soothes the soul that flies to him for shelter.

Let the Night Swoop

and the dread Euroclydon toss the sea. Let the thunders roll—soon all will be well. Christ in the ship to soothe his friends. Christ on the sea to stop its tumult. Christ in the grave to scatter the darkness. Christ in the heavens to lead the way. Blessed all such. His arms will enclose them, his grace comfort them, his light cheer them, his sacrifice free them, his glory enchant them. If earthly estate take wings, he will be an incorruptible treasure. If friends die, he will be their resurrection. Standing with us in the morning of our joy and in the noonday of our prosperity, he will not forsake us when the lustre has faded and it is toward evening.

The words of the text are pertinent to us all, from the fact that we are nearing the evening of death. I have heard it said that we ought to live as though each moment were to be our last. I do not believe that theory. As far as preparation is concerned, we ought always to be ready; but we cannot always be thinking of death, for we have duties in life that demand our attention. When a man is selling goods, it is his business to think of the bargain he is making. When a man is pleading in the courts, it is his duty to think of the interests of his clients. When a clerk is adding up accounts, it is his duty to keep his mind upon the column of figures. He who fills up his life with thoughts of death is far from being the highest style of Christian. I knew a man who used often to say at night, "I wish I might die before morning!" He is now an infidel. But there are times when we can and ought to give ourselves to the contemplation of that solemn moment when to the soul time ends and eternity begins. We must go through that one pass. There is no roundabout way, no by-path, no circuitous route. Die we must; and it will be to us a shameful occurrence or a time of admirable behavior. Our friends may stretch out their hands to keep us back, but no imploration on their part can hinder us. They might offer large retainers, but death would not take the fee. The breath will fail and and the heart will stop. You may hang the couch with gorgeous tapestry, but what does death care for bed-curtains? You may hang the room with the finest works of art, but what does death care for pictures? You may fill the house with the wailings of widowhood and orphanage; does death mind weeping?

This ought not to be a depressing theme. Who wants to live here forever? The world has always treated me well, and every day I feel less and less like scolding and complaining. But yet I would not want to make this my eternal residence. I love to watch the clouds, and to bathe my soul in the blue sea of heaven; but I expect when the firmament is rolled away as a scroll to see a new heaven, grander, higher and more glorious. You ought to be willing to exchange your body that has headaches and sideaches and weaknesses innumerable, that limps with the stone-bruise or festers with the thorn or flames on the funeral pyre of fevers, for an incorruptible body and an eye that blinks not before the jasper gates and the great white throne. But between that and this there is an hour about which no man should be reckless or foolhardy.

Circumstances do not make so much difference. It may be bright day when you push off from the planet or it may be dark night, and from the forest. It may be spring and your soul may go out among the blossoms, apple orchards swinging their censers in the way. It may be winter and the earth in a snow shroud. It may be autumn, and the forests set on fire by the retreating year; dead nature laid out in state. It may be with your wife's hand in your hand, or you may be in a strange hotel with a servant faithful to the last. It may be in the rail-train, shot off the switch, and tumbling in long reverberation down the embankment—crash! crash! I know not the time; I know not the mode; but the days of our life are being subtracted away, and we shall come down to the time when we have but ten days left, then nine days, then eight days, then seven days, six days, five days, four days, three days, two days, one day. Then hours: three hours, two hours, one hour. Then only minutes left: five minutes, four minutes, three minutes, two minutes, one minute. Then only seconds left: four seconds, three seconds, two seconds, one second. Gone! The chapter of life ended! The book closed! The pulses at rest! The feet through with the journey! The hands closed from all work. No word on the lips. No breath in the nostrils. Hair combed back to lie undisheveled by any human hands. The muscles still. The nerves still. The lungs still. The tongue still. All still. No throb. No life. Still! Still!

On earth, with many of you, the evening is the happiest part of the twenty-four hours. You gather about the stand. You talk and laugh and sing. You recount the day. You plan for the morrow. You have games and repartees. Amid all the toil of the day, that is the goal for which you run, and as you take out your watch or look at the descending sun, you thrill with the thought that it is toward evening. So death comes to the disciple! What if the sun of life is about to set? Jesus is the day-spring from on high; the perpetual morning of every ransomed spirit. What if the darkness comes? Jesus is and of heaven. What though this earthly house crumbles? Jesus has prepared a house of many mansions. Jesus is the anchor that always holds. Jesus is the light that is never eclipsed. Jesus is the fountain that is never exhausted. Jesus is the evening star, hung up amid the gloom of the gathering night.

You are almost through with the abuse and backbiting of enemies. They will call you no more by evil names. Your good deeds will not longer be misinterpreted or your honor filched. The troubles of earth will end in the felicities of heaven! Toward evening! The bereavements of earth will soon be lifted! You will not much longer stand pouring your grief in the tomb like Rachel weeping for her children or David mourning for Absalom. Broken hearts bound up. Wounds healed. Tears wiped away. Sorrows terminated. No more sounding of the dead march! Toward evening. Death will come, sweet as slumber to the eyelids of the babe, as full rations to a starving soldier, as evening hour to the exhausted workman. The sky will take on its sunset glow, every cloud a fire-psalm, every lake a glassy mirror; the forests transfigured; delicate mists climbing the air. Your friends will announce it; your pulses will beat it; your joys will ring it; your lips will whisper it: "Toward evening."

THE WONDERFUL TABULATING MACHINE

THE GENERAL WORKROOM WHERE ALL THE CARDS ARE HANDLED

PUNCHING THE CENSUS CARDS

Over 75,000,000 Separate Cards Handled

SUMMING UP OUR 12TH CENSUS

A Machine With Almost Human Intelligence

THE expenditure of over fifteen million dollars; the employment of about forty thousand people, enumerators, whose work is finished, and 3,300 clerks and mechanical operators now at work; the visiting of over 75,000,000 people, scattered over nearly 4,000,000 square miles of territory; the arranging of immense amounts of information obtained; and the final publishing after years of work, of the many large volumes which will contain valuable data collected—these may be numbered among the requirements for putting into shape the "Business History" of the United States, better known as the "Twelfth Census."

There is to be no unnecessary delay in placing this history before the people. Congress has decreed that the most important part, embracing agriculture, manufactures, population and mortality must be published by July, 1902. Other volumes will follow as quickly as possible. It took nearly nine years to complete the work of the 1880 census, and about seven for that of the eleventh. The main subjects treated in the twenty-six volumes of the latter are agriculture, manufactures, population, vital and social statistics, wealth, debt and taxation, occupations, selected industries, statistics of cities, transportation statistics, real estate and mortgages, insurance, mineral industries, farms, homes and proprietorship; the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb and blind; crime, pauperism and benevolence. Now, that we have seen some of the results of census work, let us take a look into the building at Washington, where the twelfth census is in process of completion. Glancing over the two main lower rooms, each 214 feet long by 130 feet wide, one beholds a human beehive or woman hive. Sitting about three feet apart are more than a thousand people engaged in the machine work that makes the twelfth census so largely a mechanical operation. Notwithstanding the seemingly crowded condition of the rooms, there is ample working space and good ventilation. One hundred electric 16-inch fans will furnish, according to need, cool air at the rate of 120,000 cubic feet a minute; air is changed every eight minutes. In punching and tabulating cards, women seem to be more expert than men; they learn the machine method very readily and are rapid workers. Their pay is graded by amount of work performed, after beginning at $50 a month. When capable of finishing about 120 cards an hour the pay rises to $60 a month, 140 cards an hour increases this to $75, and higher numbers simply contribute to maintaining the salary at $900 a year.

The system of punching and tabulating information cards by machinery has wonderfully simplified census work, and it saves Uncle Sam a large amount of money which, without the apparatus, would be required to pay clerical workers. When the work of tabulating is finished over 75,000,000 separate cards, one for each inhabitant of the United States containing their sign records, will have passed through these machines. On the card is printed in spaced divisions the letters and figures representing place of birth, age, sex, color; birth-place of father, mother; whether single, married, or divorced; number of children; occupation, months employed; literacy, language; whether naturalized, and the enumeration district. The card is first put through the keyboard punch, which has a swinging arm ranging over a celluloid keyboard perforated with small holes, each hole corresponding to a letter or figure sign on the printed information card. The latter is placed back of the keyboard, the finger of the swinging arm pressed down into one of the holes of the board, and the punch, set midway of and under the arm, descends and cuts out the sign indicated. If, for instance, the subject of the enumerator's "copy" is a widow, the arm finger engages the perforation in the celluloid marked "Wd." and the punch cuts the card at the widow sign. If a person has been divorced, "D" is punched, and so on until the card receives all its record holes. Ages, numbers, and amounts are indicated by figures; sex, names of places, etc., by letters. When machines have finished with the cards they are kept in their enumeration districts, and then are further punched to show the civil division, of which the enumeration district formed a part by a "gang-punch," operated by foot-power. There are 1,000 keyboard punching machines in the Census Office, and their combined clicking is not soothing.

The most wonderful part of the mechanism of the Census Office is the electrical tabulating machine—the invention of Mr. Herman Hollereth, of Washington, D. C.—as is the keyboard punch. There are ninety-four of these tabulators, which, at a little distance, look like small upright pianos or organs. And there is "music" in them, too, for there is an almost continual ringing sound produced as the busy operator works a lever and keeps the cards going through the electric detective process, while each one is registered.

This machine, which seems to be endowed with almost human intelligence, and which certainly possesses more than human accuracy, consists, principally, of three parts—the press, the dials, and the sorting boxes. The press plate has 316 pocket holes, corresponding to the holes in the punch keyboards and gang-punches. Just over the plate swings a reciprocating pin-box, having projecting spring-actuated points. The counters are arranged along the upper front portion of the machine with the registering dials, each of which will register as high as 10,000, in sight. The operator deftly lifts the lever, which raises the pin-box, places a card on the plate below, swings the lever down, and listens for results. If the information signs have been punched correctly, the points depending from the box pass through the holes in the card, registry is made on the dial, and the card drops into a box which opens automatically to receive it. If the card has not been punched correctly the spring-actuated points meet with obstruction (one or more holes are absent) and a bell is rung.

When the work is finished the cards are found to be sorted, and their census story recorded. Imperfect cards are left for the attention of the night force, which consists of men expert in reading the card signs and in correcting mistakes.

It is very probable that the many volumes, which will contain the twelfth census report, will be printed at the Government printing office. There is at the Census Building quite a fine printing outfit, but it would not be equal to bringing out rapidly the great number of large books to be comprised in Uncle Sam's "Business History."

ANSWERED PRAYERS

L. E. B., Virginia, writes:
I wish to acknowledge through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD my grateful thanks and praise to him who does answer prayer. I have had two direct answers to prayer recently, one for which I had prayed for years. The other was answered almost directly. His promises never fail if we only accept them.

Reader, Ettrick, Va., writes:
I wish to acknowledge, through your paper, a recent answer to prayer. I was in deep trouble, but the Lord heard and answered my prayer, and I give him the praise and the honor.

Earnest Reader, Kansas, writes:
Surely God does answer prayer. I was very ill, and a long, long way from medical assistance—almost too ill to pray; but in a few earnest words I asked God for speedy relief, promising him to acknowledge it. I now redeem my promise.

A Follower, Pembroke, N. Y., writes:
I am another who can say the Lord answers prayer.

Reader, Providence, R. I., writes:
A short time ago I had a service to perform. It was a Christian duty. I was ready, but on account of physical inability I needed help. I could not see where the help could come from. I was troubled and told the Lord about it. I asked help, believing his Word because he has promised to give wisdom when needed. Very soon my prayer was answered and the help came.

Another. I called upon the Lord in a time of anxiety. I believed he would help in trouble as he has promised. He delivered me and I wish here to express my belief that he is a prayer-answering God. To fearful souls I can say, "Only trust him."

F. B., Montana, writes:
I prayed God to give me a happy heart and whole body, and I am thankful that he heard me. I thank him for many answered prayers.

Reader, Wyoming, Pa., writes:
I was in trouble, and the outlook for the future was very dark. I promised the Lord if he would answer my prayer, I would willingly acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. My prayer has been answered and I can truly testify that God is faithful.

Reader, Early, Ia., writes:
I was in trouble and the future looked dark. I promised the Lord if he would answer my prayer, I would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. My prayer was answered. I can testify that God does answer prayer. This is not the first time the Lord has answered mine. I give him the glory.

Reader, Mechanic Falls, Me., writes:
I wish to acknowledge in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD God's goodness in answering prayers for me. If I should write all my answered prayers it would more than fill your paper.

M. E. B., North Lawrence, O., writes:
I prayed if the Lord would answer my prayer that I would give him the glory, and would acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is answered.

A. E. J., Central, Ill., writes:
I would like to acknowledge through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a direct answer to my prayers. God in his goodness brought me through great trouble, and from a full heart I will sing his praises.

E. L. H., Prescott, Ark., writes:
I desire to testify through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to a direct answer to prayer. I praise God for his marvelous goodness.

Repentance, Sauk Center, Minn., writes:
Hoping this may encourage other readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in regard to answered prayer, I testify that although I am very unworthy, the Lord has not remembered my unworthiness, but has answered my prayers a great many times. Blessed be his holy name. He will answer every one who calls upon him in faith.

Girl Reader, Terre Haute, Ind., writes:
Three days ago I asked God to answer my prayer, promising, if he did so, to acknowledge it in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The next evening it was answered and I now give him all the glory.

A Friend, writes:
I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answer to prayer. I was in great trouble and I took it to the Lord in prayer and he has answered—has taken my trouble all away, bless his holy name. Please publish this, that it may encourage some who are in doubt.

An Old Subscriber, Hanover, writes:
I, too, wish to acknowledge a recent answer to prayer. I was in trouble, and God heard me when I called on him.

W. B. N., Duncan, I. T., writes:
I acknowledge through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a direct answer to prayer.

Reader, Chambersburg, Pa., writes:
Several weeks ago, when in deep financial trouble we asked God to help us, which he did.

The Lost Sheep and the Lost Coin

International Sunday School Lesson for October 21: Luke 15: 1-10.

"WHEN HE HATH FOUND IT HE LAYETH IT ON HIS SHOULDERS REJOICING"

By DR. and MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

GOLDEN TEXT, Luke 15: 10: "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

LOOKING at the whole chapter, including the lesson of next week, as one sermon, we see the five partners in salvation presented in varied illustrations: 1. The Heavenly Father's part in salvation is seen in the parable of the prodigal's father, who welcomes the lost one returning.

2. The part of the Son of God is pictured by the Shepherd, who seeks the lost one.

3. The Holy Spirit's part; 4. Working through the Church is pictured by the light in the woman's hand by which the lost coin is found.

5. The lost sinner is pictured as precious by the coin, as beloved of the Son and the Father in the lost sheep and the wayward son, but especially as a necessary partner in his own salvation in that he cannot be saved until he will say: "I will arise." To-day's lesson presents only a part of this divine plan of salvation—the soul, precious and beloved—sought and found by the Saviour and the Spirit-filled Church. The two parables we are now to study were Christ's defence against the Pharisee's charge: "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them." In the last two lessons Christ was eating with a Pharisee who was really a great sinner, guilty of pride and hypocrisy and covetousness. Christ had eaten with him, nevertheless, that he might, if possible, save him. In the time intervening between those lessons and this one Christ had evidently been eating, for the same reason, with another kind of sinners, who had fallen into coarser sins, but had a better chance of salvation, because they were not blind to their own faults. They saw their own sins, and Jesus saw them yet more fully with the clear vision of sinlessness, and yet they gathered eagerly about him, because his attitude was not one of scorn but of sympathy. He, too, had been tempted, and all these were his wayward brothers and sisters whom he must love back to God.

"LIGHT A CANDLE AND SWEEP THE HOUSE"

Every Soul the Object of Christ's Personal Love What man of you having a hundred sheep, if he lose one of them. Christ has been called "the discoverer of the individual." His most novel doctrine is the sacred individuality of every human soul. Roman justice was justice for Roman men only. There was no justice for the Roman's wife. There were no "children's rights," for the Roman child, much less "human rights" for the Roman slave or the Roman's foe. It was a new teaching to the world, though often hinted in the Old Testament, when Jesus taught that not only every man, even the outcast, but also every woman and every child, is a son or daughter of God, a brother or sister of Christ and of every human being, to be loved and helped, not hated or harmed. Greek and Roman philosophers and even Hebrew rabbis often spoke of the "common people" as incapable of receiving their teaching, or unworthy of them. Christ would not have us even use the words "common people." Better, like Lincoln, to call them the "plain people," and respect and regard them as he did.

In this age of multiplied organizations, we need to note Christ's appreciation, so often shown, of one man. As we have said, his great discourses were mostly given to one or a few individuals. Except the last part of the Sermon on the Mount and the sermon at Nazareth, when his townsmen mobbed him, there is hardly a discourse of his which was not spoken to one or a few individuals—twelve or less.

The one lost sheep is your worst boy or girl; your wickedest relative; the worst man in your village or city; that drunkard you regard as hopelessly tangled in an evil habit; that fallen woman; that imprisoned murderer. Whenever the papers tell of some unknown woman found in woods or river, victim of murder or suicide, hundreds of letters are received by the police from parents out of whose fold some foolish, wayward lamb has strayed. Such a sorrow breathes in the following poem of James Lane Allen:

My lamb is missing from the mighty fold.
And bleak the wind that sweeps the darkening wold.
Where wandereth she, so late and ever bold,
With foolish feet?
Hath any seen a lamb that's gone astray,
Caught in the hidden thorns along the way,
Or slipped adown some steep, alack-a-day!
With piteous bleat?

O thou Good Shepherd! Seek her in the path
That many a terror, many a pitfall, hath;
On her bewildered head let not thy wrath
From heaven break!
To the calm pastures of a better land,
Where all the flock are guided by thy hand,
And follow only where thou dost command,
My lost lamb take!

An Episode for Children A child coming home from Sunday School said: "Our teacher drew mountains on the blackboard, and a little square for the sheepfold, and tore a little piece of paper for the sheep that went astray, and moved it up and down over the mountains till it was caught in the thorns far away, and there he pinned it. Then he tore a bigger piece of paper for the shepherd and moved that all over the mountains, hunting for the lost sheep, till at last he found it. And then he took both pieces together straight back to the fold. Oh, mama, it was just like a truly shepherd and sheep. We were all so glad when he found the sheep and brought it back!"

Let us not think the lost sheep means only the immoral. To the eye of the sinless Christ, the most respectable of unsaved souls, in its proud rejection of the love of God, is as black as the vicious and criminal seem to us. Is it nothing for a son to be ungrateful to his Father? Is it a trifle to continue day after day in treasonable revolt against your beneficent King?

God Seeking Men And when he hath found it, he layeth on his shoulders rejoicing. This is not the first time in this year's lessons that we are reminded of the supreme distinction between all other religions and Christianity. Other religions present "seekers after God," but only in Christianity do we find God seeking men. From the palace of heaven the divine Shepherd came, putting aside the robes of divine royalty, dressing in robes of poverty, and through the flinty paths of privation and persecution he walked for thirty-three years seeking your lost soul, caught in thorns of appetite, greed, lust, or perchance of pride and ingratitude and selfish ease.

Do you, lost soul, feel too weak for the returning path? His strong "shoulders" are your sure support. And presently his strength shall transform your weakness.

They called him "the man of sorrows," because of the scorn and abuse of men, but three times in this chapter and often elsewhere he pictures himself as "the man of joy." The joy of saving others overtopped all the sorrow and pain. And this joy in the next parable is shown to be the supreme joy of Christ's human helpers; also the joy of saving the lost, the joy of heaven as well.

The Value of a Boy One day a shepherd boy was keeping watch over his sheep. He whiled away the time by drawing pictures on a smooth stone with a sharp stone for his pencil. A great artist named Cimabue chanced to cross the field and stopped to look at the boy's pictures, which showed such skill that he went to the boy's father and asked that he might teach the boy, offering to pay for his time if need be, knowing it would some day be his highest honor to be known as the teacher of Giotto, who indeed came to be not only a great painter, but the architect of what Ruskin calls the most perfect building in the world, Giotto's tower. History is full of such discoveries of greatness in lowly boys. But to God's view it is a greater achievement to develop goodness in bad boys. It is well to help a lowly boy to accomplish the work God made him to do. It is still better to help a boy who is not lowly, but "low," in the worst sense of the word, to fulfil God's plan for every human life which includes goodness, if not greatness. Gifts are for the few, but graces we may all have.

Persons rescued from drowning, seemingly dead, have been restored after three hours' effort. In the wildest boy, parent, teacher and pastor may develop a spiritual life, where there seems to be only moral death, by persistent faithfulness.

The Spirit-filled Church Seeking the Lost What woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece doth not light a lamp and sweep the house? All through the Bible the Church is symbolized by a woman. (Psa. 45; Isa. 62: 5; Matt. 25: 1; John 3: 29; Rev. 22: 17). Light and oil are equally frequent symbols of the Holy Spirit. (John 1: 9; Acts 2: 3; Rev. 1: 12). The lighted lamp in the woman's hand the Holy Spirit in the heart of Christians, aiding them to seek and save the lost soul, which is pictured by the lo coin, made of precious material, a symbol of the soul's essential immortalit and stamped with the king's image, a the soul is made in God's imag There is another thought also in th parable. An Oriental woman ofte carries her whole fortune in the strin of coins, fastened like a crown abou her head, which is at once her chief o nament and the dowry that awaits he betrothed. To lose one coin out of not only decreases its value but grea ly mars its symmetry. Thus Go pictures the fact that not one soul ca be spared. He misses it with all hi millions of souls, and the Churc should not be content to leave on soul in its lost estate in the dust an darkness of sin and sorrow.

The Church's most beautiful adorn ment is not in costly frescoes or gran choirs but the immortal souls it ha saved.

Does this woman, spirit-filled an earnestly, persistently seeking the un saved, picture our Church? Is i your individual picture? Is it mine? Whil politicians are so earnestly trying to save gold or silver, and business men are doing the same in another sense, are we, who together make up the Church, equally in ear nest to win the doubtful, to convince the op posed?

A coin in the dust! That is Christ's picture of the most despised "sinners" of his time An actress, walking sadly and aimlessly along the street, heard singing, and entered the house from whence it came. A few ladies were having a prayer-meeting, and the song was

"Depth of mercy."

She remained but a few moments, and went out again, feeling her own sinfulness and sorrow more than ever. The words of the song seemed to follow her for hours, until they gave her hope in God's mercy, and she was saved.

"THE FOLD AND THE MOUNTAINS"

Depth of mercy! can there be Mercy still reserved for me?
Can my God his wrath forbear?
Me, the chief of sinners spare?
* * * * * * *
God is love! I know, I feel Jesus weeps and loves me still.

The whole world rejoiced when the news flashed over the wires that the brave four hundred marines of the little international army that defended the legations in Pekin with the courage of Thermopylæ for so many weeks, had been able to hold back the foe till the larger relieving army arrived. If we could see things with the God's-eye view we should be equally anxious about every sin-beleaguered soul, and equally joyous when such a soul had been rescued from these mighty foes, that assassinate not the body, but the soul. To have escaped the plots of the "Boxers" that seek to slay the soul with drink, with gambling, with impurity, with Sabbath-breaking, aye, and with covetousness and pride, is the supreme occasion for rejoicing, on earth as well as in heaven, by those who know the true values of things, the true perils of life.

Not from my foes without, but those within,
I pray to be protected hour by hour;
For that aggressive self that leads to sin,
And lures to pleasure with seductive power,
Stands ever by the portal of desire.
And mocks my spirit when it would aspire."

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

From even the hidden foe of selfishness Christ can save us and fill our hearts with "songs of deliverance," chiming with the song of heaven, "Unto him that hath washed us from our sins in his own blood."

A NOTABLE AID TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS

HOW S. S. LEADERS IN PHILADELPHIA ARE GRAPPLING WITH THE PROBLEM OF TEACHER-TRAINING

BY REV. H. A. BOMBERGER

WALLACE MACMULLEN, D.D.

REV. MOSELEY H. WILLIAMS, PH.D.

DR. BRUMBAUGH

THERE is no need in our day to prove the benefits the Sunday School has brought to the Church of Christ. Its value and its usefulness have been demonstrated the world over, and they cannot be exaggerated. But, howsoever valuable a movement or an institution may be, it may be possible to improve it and develop it and render it more efficient. If there is life, it must expand and grow. In our day this fact is more and more recognized. This age has a horror of ruts, and though the teachers and officers who are in the schools from year to year, while the child comes fresh to the school and finds things new to him, which to the teachers have long been familiar, even the child ought not to feel that the school is doing only routine work. The world is making rapid progress; our common schools are giving every generation a better education than the previous one; so if the Sunday School lags behind, keeping to the antiquated methods and proceeding on the old lines, there may come in the near future a time when it will be regarded as obsolete. Our most prominent educators, as well as our Sunday School leaders, have been taking this fact into consideration, and it is now a fact that they appreciate this beneficent institution of the Sunday School more for what it promises to be in the future than for its past achievements or its present condition.

REV. ALEX. HENRY

The Sunday School is here. It is here to stay. Even at its worst, it remains the mightiest agency of the Church. Socially, religiously, and indeed, educationally, for efficient Bible teaching, genuine reform, and true evangelization, it still occupies a place far above and beyond any other Christian institution. It is by no means "decaying," though undoubtedly stunted in its growth; it is not "broken down," though its teaching may be scorned by some; its work is not at all "trifling," though it may be suffering from a certain debility. On the other hand, the Sunday School, revived as it may be, holds in securest grasp the future of the Kingdom in a very large measure. An educational system of evangelization by which are men not only brought to Christ, but also built up in Christian character, and fitted for efficient Christian service. It is more than one of the later "departments" of church work; it is the Church at work—the Church in its broadest acceptation, the whole parish at school, studying and teaching God's Word.

Its best friends, however, cannot but recognize the fact that the Sunday School as such, is not all that it should be. They see clearly enough that its present power and future usefulness depend largely on its character as an instrument of moral and religious education. Now any school is what its teaching makes it, just that and nothing more. And the character of its teaching rests in the hand of its teachers. Consequently, if these be well qualified in mind and heart the institution must accomplish its purpose with comparative satisfaction. But if these be poorly prepared for their important and responsible duty, the great cause must inevitably fall into discredit, if not into literal decay. And here lies the grave danger that threatens the usefulness of the Sunday School, if not its very life.

As a result, no movement in this great field of Christian service is attracting such attention among the leaders the world over as is the training of Sunday-School teachers and superintendents. The hope of the Sunday School as an educational and religious centre of power seems, to those best qualified to judge, to rest upon the trained worker. As the public school system of the United States has been reared, developed and sustained largely by the teacher regularly trained by normal school instruction, so the future maintenance, development and progress of the Sunday School will depend largely upon the normal trained teacher.

The Philadelphia County Sabbath School Association, the author of so many recent movements of note, fully appreciating the seriousness of the present situation, has earnestly sought to remedy it. The first efforts lay in the direction of the Teacher-Training Class, an organization connected with the local church, pursuing regular courses of study under a competent instructor or leader. These courses are already prepared; they are simple and comprehensive, relating to the Bible, the Sunday School, and the Art of Teaching. This class is usually composed of (1) teachers and officers, or (2) younger people who intend to engage in Sunday School work. There are many such classes in Philadelphia.

The Philadelphia Institute of Teacher-Training is only an elaboration of the local training class. At the very first it received the inspiration of the hearty cooperation of Prof. M. G. Brumbaugh, Ph. D., of the University of Pennsylvania, now United States Commissioner of Education for Porto Rico. It was largely through his interest and active work on the teaching staff that the movement was made possible. To the leaders it was a matter of glad surprise that our most eminent men were found quite ready to help. Recognizing the importance of the work, the practicability of the proposed plan, and the high standard presented, such were willing at once to render service.

WM. H. SCOTT

The experience of last year has led to a modification of the plan for the approaching season. It will be seen immediately that this is so simple that it may readily be adapted to any town or city in the land. And it is indeed in the hope that the movement may spread that this description of the plan is given.

There are six courses of study, three relating to the Bible, the others to the school, the scholar and the teaching process. Each one of these is in the hand of an able instructor. With ten lectures in each course, the arrangement of the courses and the teaching force is as follows: The Rev. Kerr Boyce Tupper, D.D., LL.D., "Studies in Bible Doctrine"; spring session. The Rev. Wm. J. Erdman, D.D., "Analytical Bible Studies"; winter session. The Rev. James A. Worden, D.D., LL.D., "Evidences of Christianity and the Inspiration of the Bible"; fall session. Rev. C. R. Blackall, D.D., "Sunday School History, Organization and Purpose"; fall session. Prof. Lightner Witmer, Ph. D., and others, "Studies in the Nature and Nurture of Children"; spring session. The remaining course, "The Pedagogy of the Bible School," winter session, will be in charge of the superintendent. We are fortunate in being able to say that the public generally is quite familiar with most of the names mentioned: the first, that of the noted pastor of the First Baptist Church of Philadelphia; the second, one of the ablest analytical Bible students in the country; the third, the eminent Sunday School Secretary of the Presbyterian Church; the fourth, the distinguished editor of the Sunday School literature of the Baptist Church, and the other the Professor of Psychology in the University of Pennsylvania. Surely when such men are willing to be associated with the effort to elevate the Sunday School, it means well for this hopeful institution.

DR. WORDEN

Surrounding this teaching force is a reserve corps of "lecturers," made up of fifteen pastors, superintendents and professors, prominent not only in local religious and educational circles, but also in the larger circles of the nation. All these with one accord assented heartily to the proposition of cooperation in the work of the institute. Thus we enjoy first of all the splendid advantage of their good name, but also the uplift of their active service in filling vacancies and making special addresses. It may be said that this has proved a very wise provision.

During the season that is almost upon us we add to the regular Tuesday evening lectures a special course of Thursday evening lectures to be given monthly from October to June by leading Sunday School men and educators. For, after all, this cause that we represent needs the tonic effect of the so-called Institution of Learning more than anything else. Among these lecturers will be President Weston, of Crozer Theological Seminary; Rev. A. F. Schauffler, D. D., of New York; Bishop Foss, of Philadelphia; Rev. Jesse L. Hurlbut, D. D., of New York; President Reed, of Dickinson College; President Stewart, of Auburn Theological Seminary; and Nathan C. Schaeffer, D. D., LL. D., the efficient State Superintendent of Public Instruction of Pennsylvania.

The salient features of the institute plan are outlined briefly in the annual catalogue somewhat as follows: The institute contemplates the formation of evening classes for systematic study under competent instruction, with a view to thorough training for modern Sunday School work. The increasing demand for trained workers, and the great advantages to be gained by special preparation, offer a sufficient reason for this movement. The courses of study for those engaging in this important work are sufficiently comprehensive to cover the following subjects: The Teacher and Himself, His Bible, His School, His Scholar, and His Teaching. The instruction will be given by the lecture method with free discussion of the subjects presented.

The institute year comprises three sessions, the first from Oct. 9 to Dec. 20; the second from Jan. 8 to March 19, and the third from April 2 to June 13. The meetings are held in the rooms of the Presbyterian Board of Publication in the Witherspoon Building every Tuesday evening, from eight to half past nine o'clock.

The institute welcomes all Christian workers who have an earnest purpose to prepare themselves for larger and better service. The only other conditions are proper enrolment, the registration fee and regular attendance. Upon the satisfactory completion of the required courses of study, students will be graduated with a teacher's diploma on the occasion of appropriate exercises. The registration fee is two dollars, in advance. For this, an annual membership ticket is issued, entitling the owner to all privileges, including the special Thursday evening lecture course. The tuition is free, but this fee for registration is deemed essential to continued interest on the part of the student and closer application. It is moreover the institute's only source of income. The gratuitous services of the teachers and lecturers is a notable contribution to a great and good cause. And men may everywhere be found thoroughly qualified to render valuable assistance who will willingly engage in such an effort without remuneration.

In conclusion, it needs to be said that the institute is under the immediate and efficient oversight of the County Sunday School Association, of which the Rev. Wallace MacMullen, D.D., is President; Rev. Alexander Henry, Chairman of the Executive Committee; Richard H. Wallace, Secretary, and William H. Scott, Treasurer. The Rev. Moseley H. Williams, Ph.D., of the American Sunday School Union, is Chairman of the Special Committee on Normal Work.

Body and Soul

WE must remember that your physical health is closely allied to your spiritual. The heart and the liver are only a few inches apart, and what affects the one affects the other. A historian records that by the sound of great laughter in Rome. Hannibal's assaulting army was frightened away in retreat. And there is in the great outbursting joy of a Christian's soul that which can drive back any infernal besiegement. Rats love dark closets, and Satan loves to burrow in a gloomy soul.

The Meanest Thing in the World

PROF. DRUMMOND wrote a book on "The Greatest Thing in the World," and we have heard of the loveliest thing in the world, but we have now an exhibition of the meanest thing in the world, and that is the wide and violent attack upon the missionaries in China, charging them with being the cause of the late massacres. There may be unwise men among missionaries as there are unwise men among all classes of people, but there are no wiser or kinder or more self-sacrificing people in all the earth than the foreign missionaries. They have given up home and country and civilized associations that they may help for this life and the life to come people who do not even belong to their own race. By the time the children of these missionaries come to six or seven years of age they must, for the sake of their health and morals, be sent to America or Great Britain to be taken care of. Hence the sad partings which are witnessed at all the missionary stations. These missionaries are graduates from colleges and theological seminaries and have the mental equipment for success at home, but they resign all that they may serve Christ amid privation and squalor. Their pure lives are a perpetual rebuke to the dissolute merchants from America and England and Scotland who are living at Pekin and Hongkong and Shanghai and in most of the great parts of China and India. Hence these infamous charges. The war was caused by a hatred toward all foreigners and not especially against missionaries. The war in China will close, and the consecrated men and women who have been obliged to flee for their lives will resume their work, and China will be redeemed. But this war has not only revealed the cruelty of the Boxers, but the diabolism of some newspaper men who have in editorial and reportorial columns defamed men and women of whom the world is not worthy. It is amazing that there can be found intelligent people who are always ready to accept any charges that may be made against the only influence that can possibly save the nations, namely, the Gospel of Jesus Christ whose truths the missionaries proclaim, and whose virtues the missionaries exemplify.

Consecrated Strength

I HONOR muscle. As the world's heart improves, the world's arm will grow stronger. In the millennium, what oars we will paddle, what crickets we will play, what wrestlers we will throw. We are told in that day there are to be "bells on the horses," and that means swift music and innocent gayety and sleigh rides and swift teams and liveness and good cheer and tintinnabulation.

That there is betting at these athletic contests we deplore, but we cannot stop healthful amusement because people bet on them. There are men who bet on everything. Every time the log was thrown from the stern of the ocean steamer, there were wagers lost and won. Passengers bet about which foot in the morning the captain would first put out of the door of his office, the right or the left foot. Betting about the kind of soup we should have for dinner. Betting about the hour of our arrival at Queenstown. But all this betting is no reason why we should not take steamers across the Atlantic.

For the cause of civilization we will capture the world's oars and bats and chessboards and rifles. We want sanctified brawn. When the animals passed Adam in Eden to get their names, they did not dare even to growl at that first athlete. Had he been like unto a modern specimen of weak delicacy, instead of his naming them, they might have swallowed him up, giving him their own name of lion or bear.

We want more Samsons; not to carry off gates, but to hang new ones; not to set foxes' tails on fire, but to put the torch to the world's shams; not to pull down pillars, but to build temples of righteousness; not to slay Philistines with the jaw-bone of an ass, but to kill the ass of the world's stupidity and inanition.

While the schools go on to build the head of the coming man, and the church goes on to build his heart, let our out-door recreations go on to build his body. If that be the coming man, the sooner he comes the better.

The Curse of Opium

IN battling intemperance, we are apt to forget that the ravages of opium are increasing. In 1876, there were in the United States two hundred and twenty-five thousand opium consumers; but there are probably now in the United States at least five hundred thousand opium consumers. The fact is appalling. Do not think that they are merely barbaric fanatics who go down under that stroke. Read the great De Quincey's Confessions of an Opium Eater. He says for the first ten years it gave him the keys of paradise; but it takes his own powerful pen to describe the horrors consequent. Samuel Taylor Coleridge, after conquering the world with his pen, was conquered by opium. The most magnetic and brilliant lawyer of this century fell a victim to its stroke, and there are thousands of men and women — but more women than men—who are being bound, body, mind and soul, to this terrific habit.

There is a great mystery about some families. You do not know why they do not get on. The opium habit is so stealthy, so deceitful and so deathful. You can cure a hundred drunkards easier than you can cure one opium-eater. I have heard of cases of reformation, but I never saw any. I hope there are cases of genuine reformation. I have seen men who for forty years had been the victims of strong drink thoroughly reformed; but the opium-eaters that I have seen go on and go down. Their cry in the last hour of life is not for God, nor for prayer, nor for the Bible, but for opium. Perhaps there are only two persons outside the household who know what is the matter —the physician and the pastor; the physician called in for physicial relief, the pastor called in for spiritual relief, but they both fail. The physician acknowledges his defeat. The minister of religion acknowledges his defeat, for it seems as if the Lord does not answer prayer for opium-eaters.

What is remarkable, they are going down from the highest and the wealthiest classes, and from the most fashionable circles—going down by hundreds and by thousands. The clerk of the drug store says, "I can tell them when they come in. There is something peculiar about their complexion, something peculiar about their nervousness, something peculiar about the look of their eyes that immediately reveals them."

Are you tampering with this habit? have you just begun? are you, for the assuagement of physical distresses or mental trouble, making this a regular resource? I beg you stop. The ecstasies at the start will not pay for the horrors at the last. The paradise is followed too soon by the pandemonium. Morphia is a blessing from God for the relief of sudden pang or acute dementia, but was never intended for prolonged use. And what the peculiar sadness of it is, it comes to people in their weak moments. De Quincey says, "I took it for rheumatism." Coleridge says, "I took it for insomnia or sleeplessness." What do you take it for? For God's sake, do not take it too long.

A Home Service on the Farm

OUR first page illustration presents a scene which is not unfamiliar to many of our readers in sparsely-settled rural districts, especially in the West and Northwest. There are hundreds of farming localities where, owing to their great distance from the nearest church, the ordinary religious privileges are rarely enjoyed. The occasional visit of a preacher or Sunday School missionary is gladly welcomed; but it frequently happens that many weeks and even months may pass, during which there is no opportunity of attending a regular religious service. In many such places the good farmer, or it may be his Christian wife or some of his children, finds a good substitute in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Gathering the family and the workers together in the sitting-room, on the porch or even in the roomy barn, one of the group reads aloud to the others the regular weekly sermon by Dr. Talmage, and the rapt attention of the hearers shows how heartily the simple, earnest exposition of the Gospel is enjoyed. We have had letters from many readers living in lonely localities, far from church or school, testifying to the preciousness of these sermons, and telling how their reading in the home, of a Sunday afternoon, has stood in lieu of a service and has been productive of much spiritual good.

Our artist has shown such a gathering. Looking at the picture, one can almost hear the deep voice of the aged farmer as he reads the Story of Life. All the surroundings—the dark, cool barn, with the hay-loft over it; the sturdy laborers, sitting coatless on account of the heat; the glimpses of the white farm house beyond, with its shady surroundings, and the general air of peacefulness and rest from labor —betoken the Sabbath. After the reading, come a hymn or two sung with heartiness, and a brief prayer, uttered it may be haltingly and with trembling lips, but coming from a sincere heart. Formalities there are none; everything is simple and unpretentious. Yet the divine blessing is not wanting, for he who is faithful and true hath said: "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18: 20).

The Little Brown Berry

IT is so charming to find the flavor of a tiquity in what we eat and drink, tha am sorry to confess the want of it our cup of coffee. However, if we ca not have age, we have dignity of origin; t the Mohammedans—who ought to know say that it was a special revelation of t angel Gabriel to Mohammed; a compensati provided for the people, whose religion forbi them to drink wine. Hence Mecca reveres c fee; Medina sips it around the prophet's tom

About the middle of the seventeenth ce tury it reached Europe, and went to the Dut heart at once; from the very first dividi their attention with tobacco and tuli Charles the Second, when in exile in th country, became a confirmed coffee drinke and when he returned to England to enjoy h own—and a little of other peoples—agai everyone made a point of liking whatever t king liked. The swarthy, melancholy mo arch sauntered among the ladies of his cou with his cup of coffee in his hand, sipping ar chatting to them; and history gives us vivid picture of the bad, beautiful Dutche of Cleveland drinking coffee and rating Cla endon, and the grim Chancellor answering h with this bitter sentence: "Woman, you w one day become old."

A few years after the Restoration, Londc had more coffee-houses than Grand Cair There was "Wills," where John Dryden s loftily in that chair no one else dared to tak There was "Buttons," where Mr. Spectato grave and genial critic, reigned without di pute. "Betty's" and "Don Saltero's" an "Tom King's" call up men the world will nc let die: Dr. Harvey, lounging thoughtfull over his cup; John Evelyn, the pearl of Eng lish gentlemen; Dennis hanging up a rod b the fireplace to whip Mr. Pope for some of hi bitter, brilliant satires. Surely the coffe drank in those resorts is as classical as Ca tillian water.

America is great in coffee, as in everythin else. We are the largest coffee consumers i the world. For this there is an excellent rea son, for a curious sympathy exists betwee coffee and liberty of thought; the two hav struggled for propagation together. It is tru the Puritans did not abandon their brow jacks and flasks of strong waters for its brew but Charles II., in 1675, shut up all the coffee houses as "schools of sedition," and in Amer ica they have been, from the first note o freedom, favorite rendezvous of democrati principles and social progress.

It was at Burns' coffee house in New Yor that the merchants and Liberty Boys met o the 31st of October, 1765, and bound them selves to import no more English goods unti the Stamp act was repealed; and the Mer chants' Coffee House at the foot of Wal street was also a great political centre anc exchange. Another famous coffee house stooc on the southeast corner of Broad and Pear streets, and in a parlor on its second floo Washington bid the officers who had served under him a touching adieu.

It is indeed beyond a doubt that coffee is essentially democratic in sentiment. It never is at home in any country until it fraternizes with all classes of the people. It has also a singular attachment to literature, and the men who love coffee generally love reading. Even in those cheap coffee houses which charity provides for the poor and homeless, it comes as natural to supplement the coffee with newspapers as it does to provide for it sugar and milk. And here we may notice that not only is the real origin of coffee a myth, but most of the changes it has experienced are also shrouded in mystery. Who was the great man who first roasted the berry? How did he discover that carbonization brought out its fragrance and nutrition? There is no answer to these questions. Who first found out the superexcellence of lump sugar for coffee? We do not know; but we do know that it was a Dutchman—M. de Nieukhop—who taught us to put cream in our coffee.

The moral aspect of coffee is a very important characteristic of the little Arabian berry. It is and it always has been a powerful aid in fighting drunkenness and ignorance. We all know what deeds men are capable of planning, sitting around a table with whiskey before them; but it would be far more difficult to plan a murder or robbery over a cup of coffee. Men are gregarious, and it is natural for them to gather together; but earth may put on her beautiful garments when they gather in coffee houses instead of liquor saloons.

The simplest thing in life may touch heights and depths angels look reverently into, and it is not improbable that these little brown berries of Arabia may supplant in the near century the vine that intoxicates the world, and the stir of the coffee spoon cause the Bacchic clash of crystal to be forgotten.

Mediation in the Strike

ALTHOUGH the month closed with the actual situation in the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania practically unchanged, there were some welcome indications of a hopeful character. One of these was a slight reduction in ıe retail price of coal. As this reduction ras made, of course, by the operators, ıe inference was obvious that they ex- ected a speedy resumption of work. uch an expectation implied that they ad decided to make concessions to the ıiners, which the employers believed ould satisfy them. It could not have een based on an opinion that the Union as weakening, for every day has added ɔ its strength. New accessions of mem- ers and a general determination not to ield were seen throughout the region. It as also notable that, considering the umber of men who were idle, there were ɔ few signs of disorder. The men were nder control and were ot becoming desperate. t was known that efforts ɔ effect a reconcilation etween the employers nd the men were being ıade. One of the em- loyers admitted the fact, nd being asked if they ended toward arbitra- on, replied that at pres- nt they might rather be escribed as mediation. Perhaps it was the result f these efforts that a no- ce was issued on Octo- er 1, offering an advance f wages of ten per cent. ɔ all miners who would eturn to work. The offer as made without con- ultation with President Iitchell or the other lead- rs of the Union. In- eed, it was positively tated that the United Iine Workers would not e recognized by the em- loyers under any cir- umstances, but each firm ould try to settle with ts own men. It is doubt- ul whether this can be one; and, in any case, he men are likely to look ɔ President Mitchell for dvice before accepting ny terms. They are aware hat only by organization can they gain oncessions, and therefore they will prob- bly decide to stand or fall together. Be- ides this, a mere advance of wages does ot cover the whole of the matter in dis- ute. As explained in this journal last eek, there are other grievances that the nen want removed. Chief of these is the iscretion vested in the "docking boss," who examines every miner's output of coal, nd makes such deductions from his pay n account of rock, soil and impurities, as e deems proper. Whether this inspector eals fairly with the men in all cases is isputed, but it is obvious that he has the pportunity of cheating them if he is so isposed. This and other grievances will ave to be adjusted before a permanent ettlement is effected. We may hope that either on the one side nor the other will here be a disposition to prolong the strike n any unimportant question, but that nutual concessions may speedily bring his unhappy conflict to a close. A settle- nent would soon be reached if both par- ies obeyed our Lord's injunction:

All things therefore, whatsoever ye would that nen should do unto you, even so do ye also unto hem (Matt. 7:12).

The Train Saved

The story of a train saved from wreck s told by the Denver Republican. On ne of the hillsides, eight miles from Glenwood, Colo., there is a cabin close to the railroad track. The line has a sharp curve just there and the engineers of the approaching trains are instructed to whistle as they enter the curve. For some months past the whistle has brought to the door of the cabin a bright girl of about fifteen years of age who waved a greeting to the passengers as the train flew by. One evening two weeks ago, she heard the whistle of a train from Aspen, and went to the door as usual. Looking along the line ahead she saw a sight that startled her. Far along the line, and hidden by the curve from the view of the engine of the approaching train a huge boulder lay on the track. Not a second was to be lost, as the girl knew, for the train was coming at the rate of thirty miles an hour. She sprang back into the cabin, seized a stick of kindling wood, upset the kerosene-can over it, and thrust it in the stove. Instantly she was back at the door, waving the blazing torch in wide circles. Happily, the engineer suspected the meaning of the signal, and signalled down-brakes. The train slowed up, but so near was the catastrophe that the pilot of the engine struck the massive bowlder and was shattered. The passengers turned pale as they saw how narrowly they had escaped, and made up a purse for the girl whose presence of mind had been the means of saving their lives. Men are not always so grateful to those who warn them of spiritual danger, though the service is infinitely greater.

Albert I do not say to thee, how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides (Philemon 19).

A New Mooring Device

The Navy Department and the Light-house Board had representatives in New York last week to inspect experiments that were made by the inventor of a novel anchor. It consists of a disk shaped like a mushroom. It is lowered with its convex side downward and when it reaches the bottom a tube is passed along the chain and through an aperture in the mushroom-like disk. Through the tube a stream of water is forced by hydraulic pressure, which makes a hole under the disk, which then sinks to any desired depth. The hole speedily fills up and the disk is held fast. In the experiment a tug was employed with a steaming capacity of 450 horse-power. After the disk had been sunk and a chain a hundred feet long run out, full steam was turned on and the seventeen foot propeller made 108 revolutions a minute, but the tug was held fast. Not until the hydraulic force was again applied through the tube and another hole made, was the disk released. It is thought that the novel device will be of service not only in ships but with the buoys near shore which are always hard to keep in their proper places. Men appreciate the value of such a device in nautical matters, but unhappily they fail to make use in spiritual matters of the provision for their safety which would keep them from being driven from their moorings by the winds of false teaching and the storms of temptation.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast (Heb. 6:19).

College Seals on Whiskey

The trustees of the chief universities are grievously annoyed by the action of distillers who have used the designs on the college seals as a brand for whiskey. Whiskey can now be purchased bearing the seal of any one of a dozen seats of learning. Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Pennsylvania, Brown, Lehigh, Cornell, Johns Hopkins, Columbia, Swarthmore, Oxford and Cambridge have all suffered in this way. One enterprising distiller has even gone so far as to produce a brand which bears the familiar initials W. C. T. U. As the distillers have patented their brands as trade-marks, there is a possibility of their having a better legal right to their use than the colleges themselves. This, however, will be tested, and already steps have been taken to get a decision in the courts. The object the distillers have in view appears to be to get the patronage of alumni of these institutions by creating the impression that the whiskey is intended especially for them. It may be hoped that whether the practice be continued or not, it will fail of the purpose for which the distillers use it. If the alumni have profited by their training in the respective institutions, they will be indignant at seeing the symbol of their college put to so vile a use, and whoever else may drink the whiskey that is so marked, they will not. So will they administer reproof to the men who have disregarded the prophet's warning:

Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him and makest him drunken (Hab. 2:15).

A Maniac's Delusion

The life of a demented man was saved a few days ago in Chicago by a fellow workman. The crazy man climbed to the summit of the great smokestack of the Illinois Steel Works. He sang hymns as he went up and declared he was going to heaven. It was evidently his intention to leap from the top believing he would be caught up to heaven. A comrade with whom he worked missed him and on going out to look for him, found a number of people watching his perilous ascent. He followed quickly and when he approached the summit the crazy man saw him coming. He stopped the prayer he was making to warn his follower against coming nearer. The crowd fully expected to see a struggle at that dizzy height. Instead, they saw the crazy man quietly following his friend down the ladder. The crazy man had explained what he was going to do and his friend told him he could not reach heaven by such means; the only way was to pass through fire and water, and if he wanted to go to heaven he must come down and take that course. The crazy man at once accepted the advice and came down, and on reaching the ground was overpowered and taken to an asylum. We may hope that the poor demented creature may there recover his reason and may learn that the way to heaven is neither the way that he in his madness chose nor the way recommended by the friend who saved him from destruction, but the way of Christ.

Say not who shall ascend into heaven; nor who shall descend into the deep. But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart (Rom. 10:6-8).

Venus in Photography

A press dispatch from Geneva, N. Y., reports an interesting experiment in photography. It states that Dr. William R. Brooks, who was among the first astronomers to realize the value of photography in astronomical research, conceived the idea that the chemical properties which give the sun's rays the power to take pictures, existed also in the light of the planets. To test this theory he so covered the dome of his observatory as to admit only the light of the planet Venus. The time chosen was the darkest hour of the night, just before dawn, when Venus had risen and was shedding its still light in the heavens. His camera and the objects to be photographed were ready. As soon as the light from the planet entered through the opening in the dome the experiment began. The action of the light proved to be even stronger than he had anticipated, and the photographic plates were remarkably clear, intense and fully timed. This shows that faint as is the light of Venus compared with that of the sun, it is of the same nature and produces the same effects. It is so with the soul of man. Infinitesmal as it is compared with the Divine nature, it may be lighted by it and give light to others.

The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord (Prov. 20:27).

PRESIDENT MITCHELL ADDRESSING A GROUP OF MINERS

BRIEF NOTES

The Northfield Seminary has opened for the term with nearly four hundred students—the largest number in its history.

On Sunday, September 30, Dr. Talmage preached in the City Road Chapel, London, the scene of John Wesley's labors. On October 7 he preached in Belfast, Ireland.

Onofra Padilla of the Y. M. C. A. of Lawrence, Kan., writes that he would gladly receive copies of this journal and of illustrated magazines, for use in a reading-room frequented by four hundred Indian boys, if people would send them after they have been read.

The fifty-fourth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association is to be held in Springfield, Mass., October 23-25. Newell Dwight Hillis, D. D., of Brooklyn, will preach the sermon. The Court Square Theatre, having the largest auditorium of any building in Springfield, has been secured for the gathering.

A sudden death in the pulpit occurred in New York on September 30. Dr. Gilbert H. Gregory, pastor of St. Stephen's Methodist Episcopal Church, was conducting service, and had just announced the hymn before the sermon, "Love divine, all love excelling," when he was seized with severe pain at the heart. He sat down, and though two physicians went to his assistance, he died in a few minutes. He had been subject to such attacks for some months past, and had not preached for three weeks. His physicians had cautioned him against preaching, but he had replied: "I had rather meet my death in that way than retire and shirk my duty in order to live longer." He was sixty-three years of age.

AT THE MARIA THERESA STATUE

Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife

Samantha Visits Royalty

I FELT that I ort to go and see the Emperor, Francis Joseph, while I wuz in Vienna. I knowed that if my Josiah had been took from my heart and presence as his Elizabeth had been and he'd come to Jonesville to see the sights and look round some as I wuz doin' and hadn't come to condole with me I should feel dretful hurt.

Just to think on't, the sweet, beautiful woman that he had loved ever sence she wuz a little girl in short dresses and would marry in spite of all opposition, and who had been his confidant and closest earthly friend for so many long years a settin' up there by his side on that hard peak with the kodaks of the world aimed at 'em, and rejoiced in his joy and sympathized in his sorrow, to have her struck down so sudden and to once by the hand of a assassin. Why, if it had been my Josiah I couldn't have bore up as Fritz had; it seems to me as if I never could have held my head up at all after it.

But Fritz had bore up under his sorrow and carryin' it along he bore also the load of his people's cares and perplexities and tried to do the best he could with what he had to do with, which is a golden rule to frame and hang up over our soul's mantletry piece and study from day to day and which is the very best a human creeter can do in Jonesville or Austria.

I sot store by him. One think specially I always liked in him wuz his humility and reverence, as showed by the foot-washing in the palace. I'd hearn about that, and wanted to see it myself, like a dog, but it wuz too late, for that takes place in April. But Robert Strong wuz here once in April, and witnessed that ceremony.

It is a old custom, comin' from so fur back that nobody knows what monarch it wuz and whose feet they wuz, and whether they needed washin' or not. But I presoom they wuz middlin' clean; they be now anyway, and the Emperor doesn't do it for bathin' purposes or to help corns, but it is a religious custom. Robert explained it all out to me so plain that I almost seemed to see it myself.

Robert said that the day he wuz here there wuz twelve old men, some on 'em ninety years old, seated at a table set out handsome with good dishes, napkins, etc., and the table all covered with rose leaves, and under it brown linen cushions for the old feet to rest on.

The old men had on black clothes, short breeches, black silk stockings, and wide white turned-down collars. They wuz seated by grand court officials, the oldest man seated at the head of the table. Anon the Emperor come in in full uniform, with a train of nobility and big court officers with him, all in gorgeous attire, and the Emperor took his place at the head of the table as a waiter to wait on the oldest old man. And then follered twelve palace officials, each bearin' a black tray that had four dishes of good food on it, and they took their places opposite the old men who set on one side of the table, some as they do in pictures of the Last Supper or some as we have some times in cleanin' house and things tore up and we all set on one side of the table.

Then all bein' ready, the Emperor took the food off the tray opposite the oldest man, and waited on him jest as polite as Philury waits on me when we have company. The Crown Prince waited on the one next in age, and each of the old men wuz waited on by some grand duke or other member of the Austrian nobility.

The Foot-washing Ceremony

After the trays wuz emptied, the palace guard, in full uniform, come in with twelve more trays, and so on till four courses wuz served, the last consistin' of a sweet dish, fruit, cheese, almonds, etc. After this, and it wuz done quite quick, for not a mouthful wuz eaten, a large, gold tray wuz brought in with a gold pitcher on it and a large napkin, and the Emperor knelt and poured a little water on the old man's foot, and wiped it on the napkin. It wuzn't very dirty, I spoze; his folks had tended to that, and got off the worst of it. But he had had his foot washed by a Emperor, and I spoze he felt his oats more or less, as the sayin' is in rural districts, though he orten't to, seein' it wuz a religious ceremony to inculcate humility, and the old man ort to felt it too, as well as the Emperor. But howsumever, the hull twelve on 'em had their feet washed and wiped by nobility. And that bein' done, the Emperor, Crown Prince, and all the arch dukes, etc., havin' riz up from their knees, the Grand Chamberlain poured some water on the Emperor's hands, who dried 'em on a napkin, and all the rest of the nobility done the same.

Then a court officer come in bringin' twelve black bags of money containing each thirty silver florins. They had long black cords attached, and the Emperor fastened the bags around the necks of each of the old men by putting the cords round their necks. Then the Emperor and nobility left the hall.

All durin' this ceremony a priest and twenty assistants read and intoned beautiful extracts from the Gospel, showin' how the Lord washed the disciples' feet. Then all the food and plates and foot cushions wuz packed into baskets and sent to the houses of these old men, and I wuz glad to hear that, for I thought how they must have felt to have such tasty food put before 'em and took away agin for good and all.

When the Empress wuz alive she did the same to twelve old wimmen—good creetur! Wuzn't it discouragin' to wash the feet of the poorer classes every year of her life, and then be shot down by one on 'em? How Fritz must have felt a-thinkin' on't! If he'd been revengeful, I felt that he might have gin their feet a real vicious rub—kinder dug into 'em real savage; but he didn't; he washed and wiped 'em honorable, from what I've hearn.

I always thought that that wuz a noble thing for the Emperor to do. I d'no as our presidents would be willin' to do it, and I d'no as they wouldn't. I don't believe the question has ever been put t 'em. I guess Washington and Lincol would anyway, and I don't believe th they would have shrunk back if the fe wuz real dirty; they went through wors things than that.

Invited to the Palace

But to resoom: Robert Strong's d scription of this seen made me set mor store by Fritz Joseph than I had sot. An I wanted dretfully to meet him and co dole with him and congratulate him, bu didn't know as I should have a chanc But to my great satisfaction we wuz a invited to the palace to a big informa reception. I wuz tickled enough.

I spoze it wuz on Robert Strong's ac count that we wuz invited to the Empe or's palace, though Josiah thought that i wuz on his account. Sez he:

"Fritz is a educated man and read about foreign affairs; of course, he ha hearn of Jonesville and knows that I an one of its leadin' men, and wield a power ful influence in politica and religious circles, an wants to honor me and o my account and to pleas me, and for various diplo matic reasons he is willin to receive my pardner."

But it wuzn't so, n such thing; it wuz o Robert's account; Rober had been invited there fo lunch when he wuz there before, for Miss Meech im had told me on't ove and over. When the even ing of the reception come, Miss Meechim wuz in high feather every way. She wore one in her hair that stood up higher than old Hail The Day's tail feathers, and then her sperits wuz all feathered out, too.

Dorothy looked sweet as a rose just blowed out. She had on a gown of pale-green satin and shiffon, which looked some the color of fresh, delicate leaves, and her sweet face riz up from it and bloomed out like a flower. It wuz a little low in the neck, which wuz white as snow, and so wuz her round arms. A necklace of big pearls wuz round her neck, not much whiter than the warm, soft flesh they rested on, and she carried a big bunch of white orchids. She looked good enough to frame in gold and hang up in anybody's best parlor, and Robert Strong felt just as I did I knew by his liniment. On such a occasion, I felt my best black silk none too good, and at Dorothy's request I turned down the neck a little in front, mebby a half a finger or so, and wore a piece of lace she gin me over it that come down to my belt. It looked like a cob-web that had ketched in its transperent meshes some voylets and snowdrops. And at her request I did not wear the cameo pin, but a little bunch of posies she fixed for me, fine white posies with a few pale lavender ones. I spoze Dorothy, though she didn't tell me so, for fear it would make me oneasy and nervious, but I spoze she wuz afraid that some bold thief might rob me of that valuable jewel; she knowed that cameo pin fell onto me from Mother Smith and fell onto her from her ma. This rim of memory sot it round and rendered it valuable aside from its intrinsic worth, which wuz great. Why, I hearn that Grandmother Smith paid as high as seven dollars for it, gin five bushels of dried apples and the rest in money. Tommy stayed to home with Martha.

The guests wuz ushered into a spacious and magnificent room. Innumerable lights flashed from its lofty ceilings and music and flowers brightened the seen. The rich costooms of the ladies and the gorgeous uniforms of the men, representatives of the different countries, richly embroidered in gold and silver, added to the beauty of the panorama. Jewels wuz sparklin' everywhere, and I thought to myself I d'no but Dorothy wuz more staid than she need be, I d'no; but I might have resked the cameo pin there. For it didn't seem as if anybody there, man or woman, stood in need of any more ornaments, and if they took it, I should always thought they done it out of pure meanness. For such a profusion of jeweled ornaments I never see, and such dresses, oh, my! I thought even before I met the royal party what would I give if Almina Hagadone could be shot down there with liberty to bring a lot of old newspapers, the Jonesville Augurses and Gimlets and take patterns. Oh, my! wuzn't they grand, though our good Methodist sisters wouldn't dream of havin' their calico and woosted dresses with such long trains draggin' behind 'em or havin' 'em low-necked and short sleeves. I could hardly imagine how Sister Gowdey and Sister Henzy would look with their chocolate-colored calicos made without sleeves and dekolitay, as Miss Meechim called it; they would blush to entertain the thought and so would their pardners.

An Amiable Ruler

Francis Joseph, or as I called him in my mind, the good crisp name of Fritz, I found wuz good lookin' and good actin'. Of course, like myself and Josiah, he's gittin' some along in years. And like us, too, he won't most probable ever be hung for his beauty. But what of that? Like others lately mentioned, his liniment shows just what kind of a person he has been and is. Honest, honorable, hard-workin', gittin' up at five o'clock in the mornin', doin' a good day's work before lots of folks rises up from their goose-feather pillers. Fillin' up the day with duties performed to the best of his ability. Good, solid-lookin' and good actin' the most of the time, though I spoze that like every human bein', he has had spells of bein' contrary and actin', but on the whole a good man, and a well-wisher to his race.

And now in this dretful epock of time, when everything seemed upside down, thrones tottlin' and foundations warpin', and the roar of battle comin' nigher and higher on every side, I felt that it wuz a great thing for him that he had the chance to hear some words of encouragement and advice. Yes, I knowed that if ever the Powers wuz in a tight place they wuz now.

I wuz the last one in the line, and so had a chance at him; I shouldn't have had if Miss Meechim and Arvilly had been follerin' close to my heels. I had said in days gone by that if I ever got holt of one of them Powers I would give 'em a piece of my mind that they could patch onto their daily experience, and tremble and wonder at it for the rest of their days. I had been riled up by these Powers a number of times, real provoked and out of patience with 'em. But now when I stood in the presence of one on 'em I felt different from what I thought I should feel; I pitied 'em like a dog. And I showed it. I mistrust my liniment looked pale and excited, though not havin' a lookin' glass present I couldn't tell for certain, but I know my voice trembled with emotion, for I hearn it myself.

I sez to him how proud and happy I wuz to see him lookin' so well and holdin' his age to such a remarkable degree, and after a few such preliminary politenesses had been tended to, I branched out and told him with my liniment lookin' good and earnest I know, and tears almost standin' in my eyes, I told him the feelin's I felt for the Powers, how mad I'd been at 'em in the past, and how them feelin's had turned into pity, for I knowed just what a ticklish place they wuz in and how necessary it wuz for 'em to keep a cool head and a wise, religious heart, and then, sez I, "I d'no as that will save you. You Powers have got so hard a job to tackle that it don't seem to me you'll ever git out of it with hull skins if you you don't use all the caution a elephant duz in crossin' a bridge. Go cautious and carefull and reach out and try every plank before you step on't."

Samantha on the Powers

He felt it, I could see he did, he knowed how the ground wuz quakin' under him and the rest of the Powerses. "And don't," sez I, "don't for mercy's sake! you Powers git to squabblin' amongst yourselves, for if you do you might just as well give up first as last, for you are all lost as sure as fate. Keep your temper above all things," sez I. "You've got age and experience as well as I have, and it takes such experienced wise heads to manage such a state of affairs, and I d'no even then as we can git along without an awful fuss, things are so muddled up." He said sunthin' in a deep agitated voice about China and the dretful doin's there.

And I sez, "Yes, the Empress and Prince and the Boxers and Mr. Lie Hung Chang has got to be tended to, specially Mr. Lie. I mistrust," sez I, "that the first part of his name suits him to a T, and I guess the middle part of his name ort to be enforced on him, though I never believed myself in capital punishment. For the public to set twelve men and a judge to killin' in cold blood never seemed to me right. A good talkin' to and shettin' up for life at hard work seemed better to me than murder—legal or otherwise. Mr. Lie has, I am afraid, acted mean and deceitful, but charity covers up lots of things, and I've thought mebby the first part of his name had struck in, and he couldn't help it. I never see how a Algernon or a Aubrey de Vere could grow whiskers and do a man's work.

"But that's neither here nor there, what I wanted to say is your name seems jest right and to suit you, Fritz Joseph, short, crisp, manly; mebby you're the very one to go on and try to straighten out the snarls in the skein of the nation's trials and perplexities, and I'll do all I can to help you," sez I.

He wuz dretful impressed by my eloquence; he acted for all the world just as Mr. Carnafeller did. He looked at his watch just as if he wuz anxious to know just the time I said such remarkable things, and I continued on, "Sister Henzy," sez I, "thinks that the millenium is comin'."

"Sister Henzy?" sez he inquirin'ly.

Millennial Speculations

"Yes," sez I, "Sister Mehala Henzy, sister in the M. E. meetin'-house at Jonesville. She sez that this is the great universal war that is to usher in the thousand years of peace and the comin' of our Lord. She reads Skripter a sight and has explained it out to me and I must say it does look like it. And oh how I do want to be here to see it, but don't spoze Josiah and I can live a thousand years, no matter how much patent medicine we take, specially as we both have the rumatiz bad, but oh how I would love to.

"Brother Meesick thinks this is goin' to be a war of the yellow races agin the whites. And though it would come tough on Josiah and me to be driv out of house and home and scalped and made slaves on, yet right whilst them yeller races wuz engaged in it if I could think at all—and of course I don't know how much the seat of thought is situated in the crown of the head and hair and whether the entire citadel would go with the scalp, but if I could think and keep my conscientiousness as I spoze I should, I should have to give in right then and there that it wuz only justice fur the white races to submit to the revenge of the darker complected, thinkin' what we'd done to them.

"Josiah bein' so bald they would probable have to take his head right off, not havin' anything to hang onto while they scalped him, and I should probable foller him soon, as I couldn't imagine a life Josiahless. But whilst I lived, and even if I wuz sold into captivity, and see Thomas J. and the rest of the children sold into distant countries, and I chained to widder Henzy, drove off west to be slaves to Hole In The Day or Big Thunder, I should have to say amidst my heart breakin' groans and sithes, it is just, it is just, we white folks richly deserve it for our treatment to the darker races."

SENORA JORRIN, HAVANA'S "LADY BOUNTIFUL," IN HER HOME GARDEN

Havana's Grandest Charity

THE BENEFICENCIA, HAVEN OF HOMELESS WAIFS AND ITS PRESIDING GENIUS, SENORA SERAPHINA JORRIN

BY MARY C. FRANCIS

LITTLE or nothing is known in the United States of an institution founded more than a third of a century ago by Cubans, which is easily the most notable on the island—the Beneficencia in Havana. At the head of this noble and indispensable charity is a woman widely known in both Cuba and the United States, who by virtue of a marvelous personality and of unexcelled qualities peculiar to the highest type of womanhood, has probably done more for Cuban children and the education of those who would otherwise be homeless waifs than any other agency in Cuba, the distinguished Senora Seraphina Jorrin. To be received in her home as a guest is to find free passport to the aristocratic and exclusive circles of the survivors of the old Cuban regime, for Senora Jorrin is an aristocrat of the oiden school.

To learn of her life and work is to admire her, for she unites the philanthropy of a Florence Nightingale to the graciousness of a Lady Bountiful. Sitting in the beautiful tropical court of her stately Cerro home, where the fountain plashes musical refrains to the Senora's mild voice, one listens with charmed interest while she relates thrilling tales of war, siege, flight and exile, the brutality of Spanish soldiers and the agony of bereavement. Her story, heroic, simple, is illuminated with sympathy and love for suffering humanity, and compassion for those of whom "is the kingdom of heaven."

"I think the good God has spared me," she said with plaintive dignity, "that I might provide for some of the homeless ones of earth." For twenty-five consecutive years Senora Jorrin has been the President of the Beneficencia and the Maternity Society of Havana. Through this organization hundreds of foundlings are every year received and cared for. Certain unhappy social conditions and the existence of much mixed blood on the island result annually in a larger proportion of cast-off children than is common in Anglo-Saxon countries, and it is only through the wise and beneficent administration of this home that Cuba is not further afflicted with a consequent degenerate, illiterate and criminal population. During its long existence thousands of abandoned infants have been deposited in the basket swinging outward at the revolving gate. But once within those walls, the newcomer, whose advent was made in such sad wise, has a chance for life, for health, for education and for a practical training.

Senora Jorrin, in the course of her varied and extensive experience, has many times visited the United States and Europe. In our country she has studied the best types of similar institutions as they exist in New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other cities; and the results of her observations have been happily incorporated here at the Beneficencia. When Weyler's reign of terror dominated Havana, he sent for Senora Jorrin.

"I want the Beneficencia for barracks for my troops," he said, brutally.

The proud lady became the supplicating woman.

"But, General Weyler, the children, the babies; we have no other place."

"If I should need your own house, madam, I will take it. Give me the Beneficencia within three days."

And within three days the Spanish soldiery possessed and desecrated the vast, well-equipped building. During the rest of Spain's reign they occupied it, and when they departed halls, corridors, dormitories, hospital, school and living rooms were in a state of ruin and pollution. The havoc of furniture and everything breakable was complete. The whole institution was a wreck. It took three months of work with carpenters, masons, plumbers and artisans to put it in a condition to be reopened. But, being endowed and very wealthy, the Beneficencia rose again, largely through the instrumentality of its President, and to-day it is one of the finest and most perfectly conducted philanthropic institutions in the Western world. All children, unless previously adopted, are kept until they are fifteen years old, being educated in the meantime and trained to some useful occupation. Then every effort is made to place them in desirable families in wage-earning capacities.

According to a time-honored custom, the wife of the Governor-General is the honorary president. The interest of the government of intervention is shown by the fact that within the past year $60,000 has been spent in improvements, plumbing, electric light and other modern devices.

Mont-Lawn's Helpers

How Old and Young Aid Our Waifs by Gifts and Prayers—Pledges of Support

NEVER has a season at Mont-Lawn been more successful than that which has just closed. We do not mean merely that some 2,000 little waifs—the ragged, hungry, friendless and loveless; the orphan; the darlings of struggling mothers, of sick mothers, of mothers near unto death, have been fed, clothed, loved and tended, as great a work as this may be. We mean that our children have been reached and helped in a moral and spiritual sense, in a way that would be truly wonderful if there were ever occasion to marvel at results in a work which God's Spirit has overshadowed. We have seen children of the tenements—the little Arabs of the street—growing under our eyes in truth and gentleness, even as flowers grow in beauty when sun and rain blesses them. During the winter they may lose somewhat of that which they have gained, but not all, and next summer we will have them once more, and drooping graces will revive, for God is faithful.

This work is the work of many prayers. It cannot but be blessed. From Canada to Mexico, Massachusetts to California, God's people are praying for our Children's Home and the little ones who feel its hallowed influences. Letters from many friends assure us that they hold this work in prayer before God all winter; many pledge themselves to give it material aid next year; others send contributions, saying: "I know the Home is closed now. But I have this beside me for God's work, and I give that you may open earlier next year." Some say: "I give now that you may enlarge the Home and help more waifs next year." Friends write: "We will set aside every month this winter some part of the gifts with which God blesses our labors for his little needy ones whom you help at Mont-Lawn." Surely a work must prosper where God's people think of it thus:

Mrs. M. L. W., White River Junction, Vt., $18. "What a wonderful blessing it must be to the poor little children of the tenements. I feel so thankful that God put it into the hearts of those connected with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to do this great and good work. What a blessing to these poor little ones to be permitted to be there under such good influences. I pray God to bless this work, and I trust that each year the way may be opened for many, many more children to enjoy its benefits." —Mrs. H. E. B., $3. "Tenement waifs of to-day are the men and women of to-morrow. The work is a blessing to our country. I feel that God approves it."—A Daughter of the King, Livonia, $3. "I pray that the lessons learned by the children may not be forgotten."—Mrs. J. M. B., "Only a widow's mite, but it may help some dear little one."—I. H. N., Norwich, Conn., $1. "A widow's mite, but the Father will accept it for his little ones."—A Friend, Ponce, Porto Rico, $5. "I was unexpectedly enabled to earn this sum and dedicated it to Mont-Lawn."—Mrs. H. J. M., San Francisco, Calif., $1. "I have had many a kindness done to me. I want to pass it on."—Mrs. S. B. S., Villa Holsatia, Germany, $6. "My thank-offering for renewed health."—Mrs. A. L. EMPEROR KUANG SU FOR PEACE

There are indications that the end of the troubles in China is near at hand, and that, with peace and order restored, that country will soon again be safe for missionaries and foreigners generally. Emperor Kuang Su has addressed a letter to the Emperor of Germany, in which he expresses regret for the disturbances which interrupted friendly relations, and severely condemns those of his subjects who were responsible. He has ordered an official tribute or oblation to be paid to the memory of the murdered German ambassador. The letter closes by appealing to the Emperor of Germany to aid the efforts for peace in order that perpetual "peace" may be secured. Further evidence of the young Emperor's desire to meet the expectation of the Powers is found in the official degradation of Prince Tuan, the leader of the rebellion, who has been stripped of rank and revenues, while a number of other high personages prominent in the anti-foreign movement have been seized and held for trial by a proper tribunal. It is believed that Kuang Su is acting in accordance with the plans of Li Hung Chang relative to the punishment of the rebel leaders and for the restoration of order and the security of foreign life and property.

King's Evil

That is Scrofula.
No disease is older.
No disease is really responsible for a larger mortality.
Consumption is commonly its outgrowth.
There is no excuse ever for neglecting it, it makes its presence known by so many signs, among which are glandular tumors, cutaneous eruptions, inflamed eyelids, sore ears, rickets, catarrh, wasting and general debility.

John Brearley, Potter Hill, R. I., had a "large scrofulous bunch" in his neck; the little son of Mrs. Minnie Spear, Parishville, N. Y., had a "large scrofulous sore"; the little grandson of A. E. Withers, Longview, Ark., "had scrofula very bad."

According to voluntary testimonials, they were effectively treated by which has proved itself to be the best of all medicines for scrofula in old or young.

Under the Evening Lamp

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Naming the Baby

THE baby has no voice about the name, which is chosen by her parents for him or her, and for this reason parents should try to select a name the darling will enjoy when grown up. Family names, for girls or boys, should not be repeated if they are grotesque or eccentric, though good, strong, old-fashioned names such as John and Mary, Henry, Mark, George, Martha and Lydia have a certain dignity, and may well be handed down along the family life-lines. Caprice has a good deal to do with children's names. Somebody in the family has read a book which had a charming heroine, and straightaway the next baby girl is named for the young woman in the book. A good many Jocelyns will follow in the wake of To Have and To Hold. A baby was on her way to church to be baptized, and her name was settled upon and decided. She was to be Julia. A little brother tugged at his mother's skirt just as they crossed the church threshold. "Please call her Amy," he pleaded, and Amy she was named.

Fifty years ago there were more Samuels, Hirams, Ebenzers and Peters than there now are, and also more Mary Janes, Susan Anns and Eliza Matildas. Margaret was then regarded with some disfavor. A change has brought Margaret to the front, and the name is very fashionable at present. Following the Mary Ann period came an era of fanciful nomenclature; Aramintas, Amandas, Aurelias, Lanissas, Jessicas and Florillas were frequently met. Then came the day which still continues, of Gladys, Blanche, Hazel, Edith, Ethel, Katharine, Olive, Dorothy, Penelope, Ruth and Elizabeth, all of which names are great favorites, and promise to remain so.

In our Southern states girls are often given surnames as Christian names, Bland, Cary, Parker, and so on, and also they sometimes bear the names of states, Carolina, Georgia, or Virginia, while Indiana is rather liked, though Texas would not be thought of for a moment. There will be Deweys galore after a few years, and Bryans and McKinleys; and one might well call a son after that hero of the cross, as well as of the flag, Admiral John Philip, or after the veteran missionary lately fallen on sleep, Cyrus Hamlin. It would seem as if a blessing would come to the boy with so pure a name. Remember, friends, the name is to be long worn, and is important. One of the dearest verses in the Bible may be quoted here, for shall we not rejoice that the Son himself says, "I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine."

The sweet name of Mary, just plain, straightforward, and sincere, and sacred because borne by the mother of our blessed Lord, never goes out of fashion. Every household has its Mary, and everybody has a sister, a cousin, or an Aunt Mary, just as everybody has an Uncle John.

Pet names are to be kept strictly for the privacy of the home. They are not to be used among strangers, nor written as signatures to letters and legal documents, nor inserted in the catalogues of schools.

Dangers Seen and Unseen

There are those who never forget at family worship and in their closets to thank the Lord for preservation from dangers seen and unseen. How grateful we should be for safety from accident. A lady enjoying a few weeks in the heart of the woods, feeling secure from every peril, was not long ago shot so terribly that her leg was amputated in the hope of saving her life, and that, as I write, is hanging in the balance. The ball, fired from the bank of a stream at an imaginary deer, passed through the muscles of a man's back before striking the lady. Here was an accident of a very uncommon kind, and one against which no one could guard. A violent tornado sweeps the sea upon the land, and ruins a great city. Not one in the thousands who died in the appalling horror at Galveston but felt quite safe a few hours before death came swooping down on the fated place like a great black bird of prey. In the air about us, unsuspected, may lurk germs of pestilence. There may be peril in the water we drink.

All this should not make us nervous, or anxious, or worried. We are in our Father's care. When calamity comes our Father is still at the helm, and he knows why he permits it, and perhaps some day we shall know it too. More deeply as we realize the uncertainties of life we should realize our dependence upon God and the closer we should cling to him. "Forget God?" said the mountaineer, on the lonely sea-washed island of St. Kilda, "how can we? We hang continually on his arm."

SABBATH EVENING WORSHIP IN A SHEPHERD'S HOME

Look on the Bright Side

Look on the bright side,
Never on the dark;
Only shines the rainbow
With its lucent arc
When the rain has fallen
And the clouds are gray.
Courage friend, to-morrow
Will begin another day

The Sabbath Eve

We gather in thy presence, O Saviour all divine,
There is no strength to lean upon, no love to trust like thine,
And ere the waning hours of the Sabbath pass away,
We'll read of thy great goodness, and to thy name will pray.

Behold us, Master, pilgrims, whose feet are feeble now,
And us who wear the sunshine of childhood on the brow,
And us who bear the burden of the noontide of the day,
A family we gather, and old and young we pray.

We bless thee for the Sabbath that clasps the happy week;
We bless thee for the words of truth we've heard the pastor speak;
We bless thee, Jesus, Master, that thou didst wear our clay,
And evermore thy kindly light is o'er us night and day.

O, Son of God, Redeemer, O Son of Man, Divine,
There is no strength to lean on, no tender love like thine.
We pilgrims rest a little space at evening of thy day, [pray.
And thankfully and earnestly, believingly, we

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Shortening Days

NIGHT falls early in these cool, autumnal days, and the natural rallying place of the family group is around the evening lamp. In the morning, there is hurry, or at least dispatch, for father must go to business, and the children to school, and mother finds her hands and heart full in getting through the work of the shortening day. After supper, when everybody is at home, the winds may blow, and the storms beat, but no one minds an uproar outside when there is peace and gladness within. I advise the mother who wishes to keep her young people about her in the home happy and contented, to make the house cheery with plenty of light. A little fire on the hearth, or in the grate, a fire that you can see as it glows and flames, a fire that you can poke, and on which you can put another stick, and before which you can roast apples and toast marshmallows, is a cozy and comfortable feature in a home. Plenty of warmth and light as to the material equipment of the house, and you may dispense with fine carpets and rich furniture. A little music, and good temper all round, and the family, never fear, will present itself as a unit to the whole round world.

—ELSPETH. You cannot give your son a better book than Eben Holden, by Irving Bacheller, a new book which Mr. W. D. Howells says is "As pure as water and as good as bread." It is not a juvenile book, but one for the whole family; but at sixteen your boy does not want children's books.

—SALLIE DEAN. Stammering is an infirmity which is very distressing to its possessor. It can often be overcome by the simple method of a very slow articulation. Do not be embarrassed, and when you meet strangers take your time, and let them wait. It would be well if we all spoke more slowly than we do.

ALL DAY SUNDAY

She Thought about a Food that Would Agree with Her.

An unnatural appetite for rich and improper food is really kept alive by the use of such foods, whereas a change to healthful, nourishing, and scientifically made food, will correct the unnatural appetite. A little woman up at Peekskill, N. Y., Margaret Smith, P. O. Box 293, says:—

"I was such a sufferer from dyspepsia that life was a burden. I could hardly keep from eating all sorts of pastry, cakes, and other rich foods, although they did not agree with me, nor in fact did any sort of food. I become low spirited and discouraged, was too weak to work and very seriously troubled with palpitation of the heart.

"Drugs seemed to make me worse rather than better. A friend said one day: 'I believe Grape-Nuts food would cure you,' explaining that that food was made with great care and intended for the prevention and relief of diseases that were brought about by improper food.

"That was Saturday night, and all day Sunday I kept thinking about Grape-Nuts, and the first thing Monday morning I sent for a package. I had it in my mind that the food would look like nuts, ane was disappointed when I found it had to be eaten with a spoon. However, I followed the directions, and made a meal of Grape-Nuts and milk, which I found to be delicious, and for the first time in months, suffered no distress after eating.

"I at once began to feel hopeful that I might be cured at last. Since that day I have used Grape-Nuts constantly, morning and night, and have steadily improved in health, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life; weigh ten pounds more than I did a year ago, and have no palpitation of the heart, and can work all day long.

"At supper I have Grape-Nuts mixed with soft-boiled eggs. I make my dinner on any kind of food I desire. One of the best things about this cure by proper food is that I no longer have any desire for the rich, indigestible rubbish of which I used to be so fond."

A RAILROAD EVANGELIST

JERRY GEORGE, THE CHRISTIAN CONDUCTOR, AND HIS LONG AND ACTIVE CAREER AS A SOUL-WINNER IN MANY STATES

THE Lackawanna Railroad prides itself upon having many Christians among its employees. This is especially true of the engineers, conductors and brakemen of the Eastern Division. Among them all, no one enjoys a higher and more honorable reputation than "Jerry" George of the Dover Express. That reputation is by no means confined to the towns on the Lackawanna route, for, in the thirty-eight years of his Christian experience, Jerry has spoken in hundreds of churches, missions, and Y. M. C. A. gatherings. His consecrated services have been in request for many years in the large district embraced between Fort Wayne, Ind., on the West, and the Atlantic Ocean on the East, the Great Lakes in the North and Clifton Falls, Virginia, in the South. He has been connected with the Lackawanna road for thirty-two years, having entered its service October 1, 1868. During that time he has traveled nearly 2,500,000 miles; he has punched an absolutely incomputable number of tickets, and it is safe to say that, in his capacity of conductor, he has dealt spiritually, personally, with as many people as any living evangelist. He has known boys on his route who have started in knee pants as office lads, and has watched them grow up to manhood, until many of them, now occupying honorable positions in commercial life look back with gratitude to his kind and brotherly counsel in their younger days.

EVANGELIST J. R. GEORGE

Mr. George was converted at the age of twenty, during a revival in the Hackettstown M. E. Church, under the Rev. R. H. VanHorn, and soon became actively employed in the Sunday School of which he was superintendent for several years. Upon entering the service of the Lackawanna road he attached himself to a "Praying Band," organized some time previously by Mr. Watts Day, and comprising many enthusiastic spirits who have since done splendid service for the cause of Christ. This "Praying Band" held meetings in all of the principle towns and villages on the road, and were signally successful in winning souls.

In 1899, the Railroad Y. M. C. A. of Hoboken (which is the Jersey terminus of the Lackawanna road), was organized, and in this Mr. George became a most enthusiastic worker, not only in the Association itself, which soon became one of the strongest in the State, but as a delegate to the various Y. M. C. A. conventions where he has always been, and still is, a most prominent figure. The Hoboken Association, of which Mr. B. D. Cauldwell, General Traffic Manager, is president, has a membership of 590, Mr. George being on the executive committee and one of its most active workers. Almost all of his leisure is devoted to Christian work: first in connection with the Presbyterian Church at Dover, New Jersey, of which he is a member; second, in connection with services held by himself and Mrs. George, and last, in connection with what is known as the "Lackawanna Trio." The two other members of this trio are two of the oldest engineers, "Tom" Keenan and "Bennie" Locke. The former is an enthusiast of tremendous energy, and one who never fails to move his audience; the latter, while a very pleasant speaker, possesses a voice of great natural beauty.

In January, 1894, a dreadful railroad accident occurred on the Jersey Meadows, in which, in the midst of a dense fog, the Dover Express dashed into another passenger train which had slowed up before reaching the Hackensack River. This accident, the worst ever known on that road, resulted in great loss of life, and during the earlier hours of the day all the bulletins of the New York City papers announced the fact of Jerry George's death. In many of the New Jersey churches this news was received with great regret, and many a business man in New York City mourned his loss as that of a brother. Happily, the next morning this rumor was corrected. Mr. George, however, was terribly hurt and lay for twelve months in a critical condition. Slowly his health returned and at the present time he is as vigorous and active as ever. While slight and even delicate in his appearance, he is exceedingly wiry and energetic. He is gentlemanly in his manners, and one of the most courteous conductors on the road. He speaks with great effect, although his exposition of the Scriptures is of the simplest kind. His talks abound in anecdotes from his own experience. Speaking to a meeting largely composed of parents, of the various means that God uses in appealing to them, he said:

"In the dark nights of winter, when taking my last run home to Dover, it had been my habit to wave my light in the direction of my house, which was at some distance from the depot, but which was in view of the line. I knew that my little children were always waiting for it, and that they could know that in a few moments papa would be home. I always looked out for the lighted window at home, and for the waving of the little hands; but one dark, foggy night I was unable to see my home and, indeed, it was so dark that, after I had put my train away, I had some difficulty in finding the accustomed path to my house. While stumbling along I heard a little voice which fell like music on my ears: 'Papa, come this way!'"

Then came the application to the parents, whose children God had taken. How often does God call through the plaintive voices of departed children in heaven! Blessed are they who, with the eye of faith, see the waving of the little hands, and hear the tender child-appeal: "Papa, come this way!" H.

THE COMPLETED LIFE

"The Christian life is the only life that will ever be completed."—Prof. Drummond.

THE Christian life—the only life
That ever can completed be—
The life that's hid with Christ in God,
Shall open in eternity.
Apart from Christ, this life of ours
Is but a broken pillar found.
Unfinished pyramid the race
Of man upon this earthly ground.

In sight of vast eternity,
Human ideals short must fall;
Still one by one before the grave
Dissolve the cherished hopes of all.
The broken arcs of earthly life
In heaven become the perfect sound;
So faithful lives of lowly ones
By the dear Master shall be crowned.

Complete in him, our all in all,
He takes us in our nothingness
Faultless before the Father's throne
Enrobed in his own righteousness.
Complete in thee, O blessed Christ,
Kept by thy loving, faithful power,
From glory unto glory still,
To rise with thee forever more.

.....SOME OF THE TESTIMONIES HEARD AT THE BOWERY MISSION GATHERINGS

DURING the last twelve months the Bowery Mission has been singularly fortunate in its visitors, many of the most eminent Christians and philanthropists having attended its meetings. They have generally come unannounced and often, apparently, with a view of staying only a few minutes to get an idea of the Mission and its surroundings, but they have invariably stayed to the finish. One Sunday evening, Mr. Ira D. Sankey dropped in "just for a look," and remained until between eleven and twelve, singing and speaking several times, and at the close of the meeting he was found with his arm around the neck of a poor, drunken outcast, pointing him to Christ.

Another evening Dr. Newell D. Hillis, of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, visited us, and on another General Ballington Booth of the Volunteers of America. Never a week passes without a visit from representative men from different parts of the Union.

A young man rises from the platform and says: "I had a Christian home until my father and mother died; then everything seemed so lonely. I missed their kindly counsel and took to dissipation. When I arrived in this country I made an attempt to live a better life, but trusting in my own strength too much, I failed, and very soon I became a homeless, penniless tramp—my character gone—without a place to lay my head, or a friend to whom I could turn. One Sunday morning, after having spent every night for three weeks in a lumber yard, I was seated in one of the parks when a man told me that I could get something to eat at the Bowery Mission. I didn't need to be told twice, but I was soon down here clamoring for admission. I did get something to eat, but I also got something far better. As I listened to the men that morning telling what God had done for them—how he had come into their lives and changed them for the better—I became deeply convicted of sin. It was something new to me. I had heard a great deal about God and Jesus Christ, but I had never heard this before, that he was a personal Saviour; and I felt that if he could do all for these men, he could do the same for me. I left the Mission and remained away for a few weeks; but all the time thoughts of what I had heard remained with me, and though I had found a position in a distant city, I never felt happy until I got back to New York and into the Bowery Mission again. The night I came forward there were many here who knew me, and they laughed at me as I arose; but I did not care. There was rejoicing in heaven that night, I am sure; but heaven was not the only place where there was rejoicing, for my sisters in the old country, who are good Christians, and who had been obliged to close their doors against me on account of my dissipation, when they heard of the change that had come into my life, were overjoyed beyond expression. It is six years ago since the event took place, and things have become brighter and brighter every day."

A tall, manly fellow who announces himself as a longshoreman, and in whose voice there was a wonderful pathos, says: "I just wish I could tell you the happiness I feel to-night in being a Christian. Most of you know me, and know what I was three years ago. Like so many others, I came to this mission to get something to eat. The probability is that if I had not been almost starving to death, I should never have entered this place. For seventeen years I was a slave to drink. Every now and then I would make a resolution to give it up, and sometimes succeed for a week or two, but the longest period I remember living a sober life was seventeen weeks. One cold winter night, about three and a half years ago, I stood on the sidewalk opposite the door of the Bowery Mission, a homeless outcast, separated from home, wife and child—who were only two miles away—deserted by all my friends, without a cent in my pocket and famishing with hunger. I said to a man by my side: 'Do you think I could get anything to eat in there?' I received some encouragement from him and entered; but, oh! what a revelation it was to me as I listened to the testimonies of the saved men, some of whom were in exactly the same position I had been in. They told how the Spirit of God had entered their lives and had given them complete dominion over sin. By-and-by some of the friends came down and spoke to me and urged me to go to the front. I did not quite understand it, but I knew I was very hungry and worn out; so I yielded to their influence and knelt and prayed to God for help. Gradually I came to feel that a new life had sprung up within me. It was nearly a week before I found employment, and all that time I was in great physical need, but I kept a firm hold upon God, and by-and-by things began to brighten. I never dreamed that I should ever be able to stand upon my feet and talk about this matter; but one night, sitting at a restaurant table, beside a man in Salvation Army uniform, I heard some half-drunken woman utter a blasphemy, declaring she did not believe in God. This brought a reproof from the Salvationist, and I felt the time had come for me to declare myself; so, standing up on that restaurant floor, I for the first time made known to others the wonderful change that God had wrought in my own heart and life. Since then I have never neglected an opportunity of doing so. It was not long before my wife and child were restored to me, and now I have a happy home, and my greatest happiness is to know that I am a servant of Jesus Christ."

The congregations at the Bowery Mission are larger than ever, and the demands upon the workers in their care for the hundreds of homeless men who come there from all parts of the States, indeed, from all parts of the globe, are correspondingly great. There is a growing proportion of young men, some of whom have yet not traveled very far on the road that leads to ruin. Every week, numbers of these boys are taken hold of and sent back home, or have honorable employment found for them, and, better still, are led to Christ. The work of feeding and sheltering the numbers that come under our care, as well as that of finding employment for them, is a very onerous one, and any help the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can give will be gratefully received. Parcels of men's clothing or money contributions, should be addressed in all cases to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City. J. G. HALLIMOND,

Superintendent Bowery Mission.

The Seven Upward Steps

SEVEN upward steps in Christian life we see,
First faith sincere, and then humility;
Then the repentance shown to God and man
And hope that eager grasps salvation's plan;
Then expectation of the joys to come,
Promised the Christian in his heavenly home;
Sanctification, next within the soul,
And blest adoption, surety of the whole;
While glory over all sheds lustre down,
And angels point him to the starry crown;
As hopes like these the Christian's life employ,
The cross seems light, he presses on with joy.

...THE FIRST... PORTO RICAN ORPHANAGE

THE first Christian Orphanage on the island of Porto Rico was opened early in August at Bayamon, under the auspices of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, of the Disciples of Christ. Last winter, the town council of Bayamon, a suburb of San Juan, offered the perpetual use of the old town hall to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, provided they would open it as an orphanage and sustain at least twenty-five children in it. The offer was made through the Rev. A. A. Erwin, missionary to San Juan, of the American Christian Missionary Society, who asked that a special commissioner be sent to investigate the condition of the offer and the outlook of the proposed work. Rev. B. L. Smith, corresponding secretary of the American Society, was sent as the joint commissioner of the two boards, and upon reaching the island called upon the mayor of Bayamon, some of the councilmen and others interested and found the place a desirable one for such work as the mission board wished to do. He also called on Gov. Allen, who expressed a desire to see the orphanage opened and promised it all the encouragement within his power.

The buildings are well situated in the town of Bayamon, which lies in a beautiful and fertile valley a few miles across the bay from San Juan. They were somewhat dilapidated, having been unroofed in the great hurricane a few months since; but an appropriation of $700 from the missionary funds soon put them in good condition. Twenty acres of fertile land belonging to the buildings go also with the grant, and will be put into cultivation.

When the Rev. Mr. Smith returned to the United States, he recommended that the offer of the Bayamon council be accepted and that all possible haste be made in opening the work. His report was favorably acted upon.

This is the first orphanage, as such, supported by Christian people on the island of Porto Rico. There is a school for boys at San Juan and orphanages are talked of at other points. The Mission Board estimates that an orphan can be supported and educated in this home at the rate of thirty dollars a year. It is the purpose to ask auxiliary societies to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to adopt a child, give it a name and contribute the means for its support.

A Chinese Court Reception

AN account of the only audience of the Empress of China granted to a foreign Prince, and he Prince Henry of Prussia, brother to the Kaiser of Germany, was recently published in a European paper: "In May, 1898, Prince Henry landed at Taku, and proceeded direct to Pekin, where he was received by the Emperor. A few days later he received a message that the Dowager-Empress was willing to receive him. Hastily donning his richest uniform, he set out for the palace, accompanied by his full suite. The Empress sat behind a huge table, surrounded by flowers and orange trees, and did not move from her place during the reception. As each member of the staff was presented she merely bowed. Remarks on the grandeur of Pekin and remarks which caused the Prince many pangs of conscience—had no effect on her. 'I certainly did my best to impress the Empress,' said Prince Henry. 'There was no stupidness in her manner, only sublime stolidity in her pale features and her half-closed eyes. She seemed to be listening with her eyes rather than her ears.' After trying in vain to get into 'speaking terms' with the Empress of one-fourth of the world, the Prince retired, bearing with him a fan, painted by the Empress, as a present for the Kaiserin."

A LEGEND OF ALSACE

KNOWEST thou, Gretchen, how it happens That the dear ones die? [pens
God walks daily in his garden
While the sun shines high;
In that garden there are roses,
Beautiful and bright,
And he gazes 'round delighted
With the lovely sight.
If he marks one, gaily blooming,
Than the rest more fair,
He will pause and look upon it
Full of tender care;
And the beauteous rose he gathers
In his bosom lies;
But on earth are tears and sorrows,
For a dear one dies.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY—NOT A MATTER OF CHANCE

$17,500 in Prizes

Every Woman Has an Opportunity to Win a Large Prize. There are No Blanks

THE DELINEATOR, the Magazine of Fashion well known for a generation, celebrates the dawn of the new century—the year 1901—by offering 1901 prizes ranging from $500. to $5.00 to 1901 women.

Prizes will be awarded, not to those sending the largest number of subscriptions to THE DELINEATOR, but to those sending the largest number in proportion to the population of each town in which they are secured. The woman living in the smallest town has just as good a chance to win a large prize as the woman living in a city.

To this end all towns and cities in the United States and Canada are divided into seven classes according to population.

CLASS ONE includes all cities of 200,000 inhabitants or over. In this class there are 28 prizes to be given away, the highest being $500, the lowest $5.00.
CLASS TWO includes all cities from 50,000 to 200,000 inhabitants. In this class there are 133 prizes to be given away, the highest being $400, the lowest $5.00.
CLASS THREE includes all cities from 30,000 to 50,000 inhabitants. In this class there are 208 prizes to be given away, the highest being $350, the lowest $5.00.
CLASS FOUR includes all cities from 10,000 to 30,000 inhabitants. In this class there are 257 prizes to be given away, the highest being $300, the lowest $5.00.
CLASS FIVE includes all towns from 5,000 to 10,000 inhabitants. In this class there are 307 prizes to be given away, the highest being $200, the lowest $5.00.
CLASS SIX includes all towns from 1,000 to 5,000 inhabitants. In this class there are 367 prizes to be given away, the highest being $150, the lowest $5.00.
CLASS SEVEN includes all towns of 1,000 inhabitants and under. In this class there are 601 prizes to be given away, the highest being $100, the lowest $5.00.

An Illustration A woman taking subscriptions in a city of 25,000 population would be in Class 4. She would compete with others sending subscriptions from towns of 10,000 population up to 30,000. She would have an opportunity to win one of 257 prizes, which might be as high as $300 and could not be less than $5. She would win a larger prize if she sent in 20 subscriptions than would a woman who forwarded 20 from a town of 30,000, because her proportion of subscriptions to population would be larger. This being the case, some very small lists will win some very large prizes. In one of our recent Prize offers, a woman in Washington, D. C., won a prize of $25 for securing only fourteen subscriptions.

No Conditions The same woman can win several prizes in every class by taking subscriptions in different towns. The contest begins with this announcement and will terminate February 15, 1901. Providing the first order contains two or more subscriptions, they will be accepted at 90 cents each. Subscriptions can be sent afterward at the 90 cent rate until February 15, 1901. The regular price of THE DELINEATOR is $1.00 a year. Subscriptions must begin with November or December of 1900, or January, February or March of 1901.

Profits For All Every woman who fails to win one of the above prizes, but who sends subscriptions at the proportion of one to every 200 inhabitants of a town, will be paid a special prize of ten cents on each subscription secured, in addition to the ten cents allowed above.

Why Do We Limit this Offer to Women? Because THE DELINEATOR is published for women, and women can best recommend it to women. It is a great favorite among them. There are now more than 480,000 subscribers. If you are not interested in this offer, call the attention of your friends to it.

All women in sending their first order of two or more subscriptions must mention that they are to apply upon the above offer; complete information regarding prizes, with order blanks will be sent. To those who are not thoroughly acquainted with the merits of THE DELINEATOR, full information will be sent upon request. Address,

WATCH COFFEE
And Watch it Carefully.

Any brain worker that depends on thought for his success in life, uses up daily, by brain work, a varying amount of the delicate particles of phosphate of potash and albumen of which the brain and nerve centers are composed.

The fine microscopic particles of phosphate of potash are found in quantities in the pores of the skin after the brain has been used actively. This must be replaced from food, or brain fag and nervous prostration sets in.

This breaking down of the little cells each day, from brain work alone, is a natural process, and the cells can readily be built from the right sort of food, if the system is not interfered with by drugs, but if an increased amount of cells are broken down by the use of coffee, trouble then begins.

Frequently it first shows in dyspepsia, lack of power of the bowels to operate properly, or palpitation of the heart or some other lack of vitality and healthy vigor. There is but one thing for a sensible man or woman to do,—quit coffee absolutely. "Hard to do," you say. Take up Postum Food Coffee, use it regularly, have it well made, so it tastes good. You will find a well-defined, unmistakable change in your health, and there is a reason for it.

You have become free from the breaking down force of coffee, and on the other hand, you are taking a powerful, nourishing liquid food which quickly rebuilds the new cells. These are facts,—profound facts, ready for any one to prove to their own satisfaction by actual use. Postum Food Coffee is made at the famous pure food factories of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., and is used by brain workers all over the world. Don't call it a "substitute" for coffee; leave out the coffee proposition altogether. Postum is a liquid food and a true food drink.

BRIGHTER DAYS IN ARMENIA

ARMENIANS AT HARPOOT BIDDING MISSIONARY BARNUM GOOD-BY

IN a letter from Rev. Geo. P. Knapp, of the American Mission, at Harpoot, Armenia, the worker says:

Dear Christian Herald,—Please excuse delay in acknowledging your latest favor to Dr. Barnum, enclosing a check for $150. Dr. and Mrs. Barnum and their daughter left for Europe on the 18th of April, for much needed rest, and since their departure the orphanage work presses heavily on those of us who remain. This photograph I took the day the Barnums were leaving.

These children, in their pleasant circumstances, do not forget those who are for the present less fortunate than they, even though they be in distant lands. When appeals were made for the famine stricken in India, the children in all our orphan homes wanted to do something. They had no money, and the only way of raising the money was to deny themselves food. In some orphan homes, they lived only on dry bread for awhile, while in others they went without food altogether. In one of our Girl's Homes, they went without food for six meals (not consecutively). If we would let them, they would deny themselves still further, but we discourage their doing more. It may please the friends of these orphans to know that they too, according to their ability, wish to pass on to others the blessings they have themselves received.

CORINNA SHATTUCK'S BOYS

WHEN Miss Corinna Shattuck, "the heroine of Oorfa," reaches her mission home in Armenia, an enthusiastic welcome will await her. The Oorfa orphans (many of them supported by our own CHRISTIAN HERALD readers), have been preparing a surprise for their beloved teacher, the news of which, however, has reached her, and she writes us concerning it as follows:

I already hear of plans for some of the older boys to borrow horses or mules and go out with Solomon a day's journey to meet me at the Khan. Some were never so far from home. They have been hard at work all summer, and will put into the outing all the fun boys can on such occasions. Speaking of good times recalls an outing we had with the boys a year ago. The night before, when the decision was given that we would go to Derekli, three miles distant, where is a fine pool, Simian came enthusiastically asking if they might take the ducks, saying, "They will enjoy the swim as well as we!" Starting out, we were amused to see Parlak Effendi and his Hanum, each wrapped in wet cloaks, improvised for their comfort by a couple of face towels, dipped in water. The boys themselves were soon dripping with perspiration as they trudged along, for we only had animals for Myreek (the house mother), our guest Mariam, and a third for the four youngest children, who peeped over the horse's back at each other from their saddle-bags. Accepting the kind offer of Mariam, the ducks were later committed to her care and sat quietly on her lap, evidently to their own and the boys' comfort, till their swimming-place was reached.

These merry children are the transformed sad orphans from the massacre more than four years ago, made happy and growing useful by the good care your readers have enabled us to give them. Your prayers are as much needed as your pecuniary help. God has wonderfully blessed some who were troublesome boys, and they are praising him for letting them come to our home.

ONE OF MISS SHATTUCK'S HELPERS

MEXICO'S BURIED CITIES

An important archæological discovery is reported from Mexico by Prof. William Nixon, of New York City. That scientific investigator has lately been exploring amid the wilds of the State of Guerrero. In a letter lately received from him he writes:

Prehistoric ruins were found on all the ridges, and at a point called Cacahuatla two columns of trachyte, 4½ feet long by 18 inches in diameter, lay side by side. They were completely covered with hieroglyphics, with a five-pointed star on one end. Each of them must weigh between 400 and 500 pounds. About three hundred metres up the hill were ruins of a building over a hundred feet long. It is difficult to imagine what these columns have been used for, unless as altars of a temple. Several blocks of diorite, fourteen inches square, were scattered about, so it is evident that the edifice was of more than ordinary importance. The ground for hundreds of yards was completely strewn with fragments of broken pottery, but the brush and undergrowth was so dense that only a small part of the locality was explored.

Regarding these Guerrero ruins, I have seen sufficient evidence, during my ten years traveling in this State, to prove that the country has been inhabited by some millions of people. What such a vast population could have subsisted on in this wild, broken up country on the hill summits and sides of deep barrancas, is impossible to conceive, unless a great siesmic disturbance has changed the topography of the land. That corn was one of their chief articles of food is proven by the metates and pestles which are found in nearly every ruin, but where this cereal was grown is a mystery, as there does not appear to be more than sufficient soil to raise corn for the present Indian inhabitants.

Christian Stewardship*

The Standard by which Men will be Judged in the Day of Final Account

OUR legislatures and law courts are familiar with the phrase "the rights of property," and all recognize a sacredness about those rights which must not be assailed. The individual also is tenacious of those rights. He asks, "Can I not do as I choose with my own?" But there is another aspect of property not so often recognized, which is the duties entailed by property. This also is important, and much of the poverty and misery of the world comes from negligence in this matter. Christ goes deeper still into the question of responsibility. He teaches that a man is responsible not only for the use of his property, but for what he makes of himself. He is not his own, but is a steward, holding himself and all he has in trust: and the time will come when he must render an account of his stewardship. Jesus so seldom lifted the curtain of the future that we ought to pay special attention to his words on this subject. Nothing can be more important for us to know than what it is that is expected of us. If we are really stewards, if the things that we have and are do not really belong to us, but are held in trust, we should try to discover the purposes of the trust and exert ourselves to fulfil them. What will be the nature of the investigation? What standard are we expected to attain? One momentous fact Christ revealed in speaking on this subject. He said that the standard varied according to circumstances. To whomsoever much had been given, of him would much be required. He who has received little, will have the less to account for.

This rule is eminently just and fair. We apply it in society. When a man's conduct is boorish we take his origin and education into account. If he comes of a good family and has enjoyed a good education, we hold him culpable; but if he was born in the slums and never went to school, we say in excuse for him, "He does not know any better." If a boy on account of his natural brightness, or because his father is better able in his case to bear the expense, is sent to college, while his brothers are sent to work with only a common school education, the father naturally expects that the college-bred boy will do more credit to the family name than will the others. If a man has had legal training or a medical education, we naturally look for legal or medical knowledge in him that we do not expect to find in the ordinary citizen. So it is not unreasonable that a higher standard of righteousness should be applied to the man who has lived in Gospel light than to him who has sat in spiritual darkness. All will be held to account, for even the savage has some rude notion of right and wrong, and is conscious of guilt when he does the thing that he knows he ought not to do. For him his Lord's will is the voice of his conscience within him, which may be darkened or perverted; but for us, our Lord's will is the conscience rectified and directed by revelation. Besides which, there is for us the help that we need for the will. When we sadly feel that we do the things that we would not, we have at our command a power that will give strength to the better nature and insure its predominance. With such advantages, what manner of men ought we to be in righteousness and holiness of life? How culpable shall we be held to be if we turn from spiritual attainment to the indulgence of the flesh!

Christ's words also give an intimation of duty beyond mere personal goodness. That remark about the steward giving meat in due season to the household, does not, as is sometimes supposed, refer exclusively to the clergy. Every man is a steward commissioned to serve his fellows. Possibly the merchant or the physician may know better than the minister what is the portion of spiritual meat which is needed by those with whom he is brought in contact, and what is the due season in each case for giving it. He who has the light, must give light. The negative goodness of the Christian who leads a blameless life, who breaks none of the commandments, is not sufficient according to Christ's rule. Christianity is an active religion. It expects that the divine nature imparted will show itself by active beneficence. Is there a clerk in the Christian's store who goes hungry for a kindly word, or a word of advice or warning? It should not be so. The steward is not doing his duty. Is the domestic servant in the kitchen battling with temptation and hungry for a sympathetic word which will strengthen the enfeebled principles that are holding her to the right course? That word unspoken by her Christian mistress is a failure of stewardship. To every one who aspires to be a follower of Christ the commission of ministry is given, and to fail in it is to run the awful risk which Christ describes as the portion with the unbelievers.

Help for Galveston

RELIEF work for the stricken people of Texas goes steadily forward, great cities vieing with each other in the restoration of the desolated city on the Gulf, and extending aid to other places which, according to population, have suffered even more, it is said, than Galveston. Young and old, rich and poor, seek out ways and means of ministering to those who are in suffering and want through the devastation wrought by the cyclone. Floods of several Texas rivers have been reported, and there is no evidence that the people of afflicted districts will have any too much assistance, generous and prompt as has been the aid rendered.

New York women of such prominence as Mrs. Timothy Woodruff, Mrs. Edwin Gould, Mrs. Daniel Butterfield, Mrs. Anson Stokes-Phelps, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Russell Sage, Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and others are organizing in the interests of Texas children a mammoth bazaar to be held in the Waldorf-Astoria, whose management generously lends the magnificent hostelry to their uses in this good cause. Mrs. Roger A. Pryor, who is in active charge of all details concerning the booths and their management, is in receipt of many offers of aid from sympathizers in New Jersey and Manhattan Island. American women across the Atlantic are lending a hand; Mrs. Cornwallis West (Lady Randolph Churchill), the Dowager-Duchess of Marlborough, Mrs. J. Lee Taylor, and others having cabled their desire to cooperate in the work.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, never laggards in well-doing, but ever ready to help the widow, the orphan, the sick, and the sorrowing, continue to show their sympathy by their gifts consecrated by many prayers for bereaved and afflicted ones. Assistance will be needed for many weeks to come, and all possible aid should be rendered to this good cause. Any contributions for the sufferers sent to this paper will be promptly acknowledged in our columns. The following have been received:

Torture greater than human ingenuity could invent, pain so exquisite that those who have not suffered it can form no idea of its intensity, is often the fate of those whom that dread disease, rheumatism, has marked for its victims. Even in cases that have become aggravated a remedy now exists that promises a certain and lasting cure, as will be seen by the following sworn statement. Mr. Frank Remmelt, of 709 McGee Street, Elmira, N. Y., was laid up with rheumatism which resulted from standing, during his work, upon a damp floor. He says:

"About a year ago I was attacked with rheumatism in my feet and legs, chiefly in my legs. They swelled greatly and became very stiff and sore. Whenever I attempted to walk the pain was awful. I had been suffering in this way for about three months when someone handed me a pamphlet advertising Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I read it through carefully and made up my mind to give them a fair trial, for not only was I anxious to be relieved of my sufferings, but I knew that unless I could get relief I would soon have to give up work altogether and this I could not afford to do.

"I got two boxes at first and by the time the second one was used up I began to feel decidedly better. The swelling was going down, the stiffness and pain were much less and I found I could get about much better. I got three more boxes and by the time the last of them had been taken I was entirely free from the swelling, the pain and the stiffness. In fact I was cured and I am glad to say that I have had no return of the trouble since."

Signed FRANK REMMELT.

of Wm. J. Siemers, the leader of the Beacon Light Zobo Band.

Baltimore, Md.
April 11, 1900.

STRAUSS MFG. CO.,
369 Broadway, N.Y.

Gentlemen:—I send you today copy of a Baltimore paper, giving a very complimentary notice of the "Zobo" Concert given last night by the Beacon Light Zobo Band, composed of members of the choir of the Scott Street United Brethren Church. The concert was a great success, both artistically and financially, and at the close we received an offer at good pay for another engagement. Every church should have a Zobo Band. It is the pleasantest and easiest way of raising money that I ever tried or heard of, because any one that can hum a tune can play on a Zobo.

WM. J. SIEMERS.
912 South Paca Street.

The Zobo Plan of Raising Money

for Sunday Schools, Young Men's Christian Associations, Mission Bands, King's Daughter's Circles, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavor Societies, Women's Sewing Societies, etc., guarantees the largest returns for the smallest outlay of labor and expense.

Organize a Zobo Band and Give Concerts.

The novelty of it will draw large audiences and insure profitable results. All you have to do is to call together a number of your church members who can hum a tune, give them Zobo Instruments according to their voices, and there's your band.

Why You Should Own a Zobo.

Because you can play it at once without any lessons.
Because its price is very reasonable.
Because it is suited to all kinds of voices.
Because it is a constant source of pleasure.
Because it is a complete entertainment in itself.
Because it can be excellently accompanied by piano, organ or any string instrument.
Because it improves and highly cultivates the voice.

The Musical Masterpiece of the Century

Zobo is so ingeniously devised as to produce the richest, mellowest, strongest and most resonant tones. A full Zobo Band composed of a combination of our Zobo instruments does the work of a grand pipe organ, thus providing an entertainment elevating and artistic, as well as highly amusing.

Zobo Has Come to Stay.

Hundreds of letters from pastors, teachers, choir-leaders, singers and musicians all over the country conclusively show that Zobo Brass Instruments have created an enthusiasm which is far beyond the most sanguine expectations of their friends.

Zobo was awarded first prize gold medal at the Greater American Exposition held at Omaha, Neb., Nov. 1, 1899.

Zobo Cornet $2.25 DELIVERED.

Money refunded if unsatisfactory.

Style No. 8

To convince you of the merits of Zobo Brass Band Instruments, we will upon receipt of $2.25, send you, transportation charges prepaid, a Zobo Cornet, which anybody can play, and which resembles in every particular the cornets used by professional musicians. This instrument is especially adapted for individual use and can be excellently accompanied by a Piano, Organ or any String instrument. Our handsomely illustrated catalogue sent free on request.

This beautiful instrument is made of solid brass, highly polished, 11 inches in length, 5½ inch bell, has three working plungers, which enables the performer to imitate to perfection a regular cornetist. If the Cornet is not all you expected or hoped for, return it at our expense and we will cheerfully refund your purchase price. Send money by Post Office Money Order or Registered Letter.

Questions of the Week

1. What is the history and age of the "Stone of Destiny," so-called, now under the Coronation Chair in Westminster Abbey?

During the reign of Edward I., the English at the Abbey of Scone, seized the "Stone of Scone," or the "Stone of Destiny," the palladium of Scotland, on which her kings were crowned. This was taken by Edward as a trophy to Westminster Abbey, and enclosed in that ancient coronation chair, which has been used for the last eight hundred years, from his son's accession down to that of Victoria. This famous stone is about thirty inches long, eighteen inches wide and twelve inches thick. It is claimed to be the same which Jacob used as a pillow when he slept on the starlit plains of Judah. The Kings of Israel were crowned upon this stone. The legend goes that 580 B.C., at the time of the Babylonian captivity, Circa, daughter of Zedekiah, last King of Judæa, was married at Tara, Ireland, to Heremon, a prince of the Tuatha de Danan (which is said to be the Celtic name for the tribe of Dan). From Circa and Heremon, Queen Victoria traces her descent through James I., who placed the lion of the tribe of Judah upon the British standard. Jeremiah is said to have concealed this sacred stone at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and captivity of the Jews, and to have brought it to Ireland, where it was known as the Ria Phail ("stone wonderful"). It was carried to Scotland by Fergus I., and thence to London in the year 1200. It exact age is not known, but it is the most priceless historical object of the British Empire, as it was the palladium of Israel.

2. What object is used as a metaphor in references to prosperity, to eternal life, to mortality and to timidity, and where are the references found in the Bible?

The leaf: 1. Prosperity. Psalms 1: 3, "His leaf also shall not wither." 2. Eternal life. Rev. 22: 2, "The leaves of the tree (of life) were for the healing of the nations." Many commentators refer this passage to eternal life. 3. Mortality. Isa. 64: 6. "We all do fade as a leaf." 4. Timidity. Lev. 26: 36, "I will send a faintness into their hearts in the land of their enemies; and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them." G. E. KRAUTH.

Water is used as a metaphor in references to prosperity, to eternal life, to mortality, and to timidity in the following passages of Scripture, namely: 1. Prosperity. Deut. 8: 7. "For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills." 2. Eternal life. Rev. 22: 17, "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." 3. 3. Mortality. II Sam. 14: 14, "For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again." 4. Timidity. Josh. 7: 5, "The hearts of the people melted and became as water." E. G. ROWE.

3. If a child does not inherit the quality of integrity, is it probable that it will ever become truthful under Christian training?

There is a great difference in opinion as to whether Christian surroundings can overcome the faults of inheritance. Much of the so-called untruthfulness of little children is due to the workings of a vivid imagination. Psychologists tell us that the sense impressions experienced leave their images on the brain matter, and often in the workings of the child mind these images are strangely associated, and the child tells what seems an untruth. Those who deal with such imaginative children should be very careful. The child must be led to distinguish between the things which "really happen" and those he "just thinks about." As he grows older he may be led to see the trouble caused by falsehood, and realizing the wrong of it, if he has sufficient determination and force of character, he may become an honorable member of society. Let us never despair of such a child. His only hope lies in his environment. Let us so surround him with truthfulness, and so encourage all the good within him that he will be impressed with the beauty of righteousness, and seeing his own fault, and realizing its enormity, try to overcome it.

FLORA L. WHITMORE.

4. When it is clearly proved that there is incompatibility of temper in husband and wife, is it best that they separate, rather than remain together quarreling?

Yes; but not for mere differences of opinion or quarrels that can be reconciled if the parties are reasonable beings. One party may have such a violent temper that it would be dangerous to live together. Then a separation by mutual consent, due provision being made for the support of the wife and children, would be preferable to living together in misery. It must not be forgotten that the parties to a marriage have obligations to the State and to their children. Indeed, a separation might be decreed by the courts against the consent of one of the parties, if it appears with reasonable certainty that they cannot live together in peace. The marriage relation would still exist, as this would not be a divorce, and the parties could be reunited at any time.

H. C. UNDERHILL.

5. What are the greatest defects in our educational system, and how may they be remedied?

1. The inflexibility of the programs of the individual schools, producing the fatal lockstep, whereby pupils are pushed along at a uniform rate in all studies, irrespective of individual capabilities, thus in various ways crushing individuality and stunting growth. 2. The lack of uniform standards of work for different grades, thus making the transfer of pupils from one school to another difficult, and giving us no way of telling how much a boy should know after passing through a certain number of grades or courses. 3. Sixty-five per centism, that is, passing scholars who have reached a given per cent., irrespective of how that per cent. is obtained, and that per cent. a low one. 4. Improper grading up of the school work. The children are sent to school too early, and are required to do too hard work. The result is that nerves and muscles are too soon and too vigorously excited, and consequent inability to do work later. 5. The dominance of statistics and the prevalence of machine methods. Difficulties 1 and 2 would be obviated by having certain standards set up for the work in the several departments by some central authority, and by allowing the individual pupil to proceed as rapidly as consistent with his ability and health. Thus some pupils should not be allowed to carry so many studies as others, thus devoting more time to those they do take. The remedy for the fourth defect suggests itself, and that for the fifth consists in encouraging the individuality and faculty of good judgment of teachers, and offering sufficient salaries to induce original and forceful persons to enter the profession.

6. Are there any reasons for supposing that there are people like ourselves on the planets or stars?

My work entitled The Starry Hosts, published some years ago, is an argument for the habitation of the planets. The argument proceeds on the following propositions: "1. The entire universe, being the creation of God, is the manifestation of infinite wisdom, as well as of almighty power. 2. It is not consistent with infinite wisdom to display more power than is necessary to accomplish the intended purpose. 3. On this principle, the planets must serve some higher purpose than the lighting up of the earth. 4. The purpose most worthy of their Creator, and most in harmony with his revealed operations, is that of sentient and intellectual habitation."

The argument is thus mainly founded on analogy. Other planets have much in common with our own, as for instance, an atmosphere, day and night, variety of seasons, and so on. Besides, most of the planets of the solar system are much larger, and far more magnificent in their appointments than ours. It would not be a deduction of reason, then, but a wanton bound of imagination, to suppose that our small and dingy world is the only place of habitation.

The argument, in fact, has the force of a moral demonstration. At the same time, it is held as only reasonable that there may be great variety of form and physical constitution in the inhabitants of other worlds. This would but accord with the divine procedure here, in the adaptation of different animals for different elements, as birds for the air, beasts for the earth, fishes for the sea. The whole theme is most inspiring, especially as it leads us into the contemplation of God's illimitable, glorious creation.

7. What is the best method for a young Christian to follow in studying the Old Testament?

A volume would be needed to adequately answer this question, and as a matter of fact many volumes have been written on the subject. Briefly, however, I would advise the young Christian to get clearly in his mind what the Old Testament is, before he begins its study. It is not only the Word of God, but it is the literature of a people. God was revealing himself to that people who had been specially chosen to receive such a revelation and prepared for it by suffering and discipline. As one and another leading member of the nation grasped a successive stage in the revelation of God's character, he set down his thoughts. He has in the Old Testament the history of the people, their laws, their theology (in the prophets), their poetry (in the Psalms), their philosophy (in Proverbs, Job, Ecclesiastes, etc.) He should keep this classification clearly in mind all through, as he would if studying any other nation. He is then prepared to take up each separate group of writers and study them intelligently. A very helpful little work that would save him perplexity is Adeney's How to Read the Bible, published by Thomas Whittaker, at 50 cents.

8. If a person, in dying, confides a secret to another under the pledge that it shall never be disclosed, is it justifiable in the person giving the pledge to disclose the secret when it would clearly be for the benefit of living persons?

We are not justified in changing when we swear to our "own hurt." How much more are we bound to keep our pledge when it is to the dead, from whom we cannot ask release! Our pledges are more important than mere questions of interest, whether our own or another's. Our pledge closes the matter forever, unless we have reason beyond a doubt to believe that the pledge of secrecy was contingent on conditions, and that those conditions have been met, so that we are absolutely released in the spirit of our pledge. All the casuistry ever indulged relative to enforced pledges will not avail here, even in the face of death, unless the conditions absolutely satisfy the judgment that by the very conditions of our pledge we are released. One must come to such a conclusion very rarely and very cautiously. But the inviolability of our pledge does not restrain us from shaping the course of our energies and our endeavors according to the facts in our possession. Sometimes to regulate our conduct according to the secret of which we have the knowledge will confer the benefit upon others which we would seek in disclosing it.

9. What is meant by the "penny" in Matt. 20: 2, 9, 10; and why did each laborer receive the same pay, whether he wrought one hour or twelve hours?

The penny was the Roman denarius, worth about sixteen cents of our money. It was considered a fair day's pay for unskilled labor. The eccentricity of the employer in paying the men who had wrought only one hour the same amount as he paid the men who had wrought twelve hours, we may be sure was not common. Josephus mentions one instance of it. It was that of the High Priest Annas, who gave the workmen who adorned the temple a day's pay, even though they only worked one or two hours; but the practice was so opposed to the recognized principles of fairness that it was never the custom anywhere. We have to look to the preceding chapter for the clue to the explanation. Peter had asked what he and the others who had given up everything to follow Christ were to have in return. Christ apparently wished to show that the spirit of bargain making was utterly alien to Christianity. No man ought to enter his service for the sake of reward. He wanted those about him who loved and trusted him and were not thinking of their own interests at all. If a follower did make a bargain, he would receive all that had been promised him. God would deal with him as a servant, and he would receive the stipulated wages. But the others, who made no bargain, who trusted Christ and did not feel it necessary in working for such a Master to stipulate as to pay, were those whose spirit Christ liked. So these men who left the question of remuneration to him, showed a confidence in him which he would honor. Men are not paid for what they do for Christ, but are honored for the spirit of love and devotion that is in them. A disciple who dies in his youth with only one year of service to his credit, may have had in him all the energy and consecration and ardent love that have characterized the venerable minister who has labored for Christ for fifty years. In short, it is what we are rather than what we have done that God takes into account.

10. What is the best method of dealing with a church gossip, who, though well-meaning, is a persistent and seemingly hopeless provoker of disturbance and dissension, through the habit of tale-bearing and love of petty scandal?

There are several ways of dealing with the evil which is a very serious one and has injured many a church. As a beginning, the pastor might preach a sermon on such a text as Prov. 18: 8: "The words of a tale-bearer are as wounds;" or James 3: 6: "The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity." If the sermon is a plain and faithful one it may effect a cure, or at least administer a warning. If it fails, a personal interview should be sought. If the statements circulated are untrue or grossly exaggerated, the gossip should be convinced of the fact and be compelled on pain of exposure, to go to the injured person and apologize. The pastor should go with her to see that the apology is ample. An experience or two of that kind seldom fails to effect a cure. In extreme cases, in which the wrongdoer is incorrigible, she should be publicly admonished at a church meeting, and her fellow members should pray that God will forgive her for bearing false witness against her neighbor. Finally, in the last resort, she should be cut off from membership. The pastor cannot afford to have such a person in his church, and if she will not repent and reform she should be expelled.
